Be it enacted, etc. That the legal representatives of Albert Fuller, deceased, late of Brooklyn, in the State of New York, have leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent No. 13677, granted to said Fuller October 16, 1855, for an improvement in faucets for hot and cold water; and the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized to hear and determine said application in accordance with the rules and regulations heretofore existing in the Patent Office in relation to the extension of patents, and to extend the same for the term of seven years from and after the date of such extension, provided he shall be satisfied that said extension will be just and proper, and not injurious to the public interests; and said patent when so extended shall have the same force and effect in law as if originally granted for the full term for which it shall be so extended: Provided, That no person shall be held liable for the infringement of said letters-patent, if extended, in consequence of having used said invention since the expiration of said patent and prior to the date of the extension, nor shall any party be held liable for using faucets which may be in use at the time of the extension of said patent, as authorized by this act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is there a report from the committee accompanying the bill?

Mr. VANCE. There is a report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Albert Fuller, respectfully submit the following report:

That by the papers and evidence submitted it is shown that said Fuller was the original inventor of a very valuable improvement in faucets for hot and cold water, for which a patent was granted to him October 16, 1855.

That at that time, and for many years thereafter, there was but very limited opportunity to introduce or use said invention, for the reason that there were only three or four cities which had any water-works; and further, from the nature of the invention, considerable time was required to demonstrate its utility, as durability was one of its chief characteristics, and which time and use could alone determine.

It is further shown that as soon as its value began to be demonstrated and admitted, and when he had reason to hope that he would realize from his invention, he was met by the combined opposition of the plumbers, who persistently opposed its introduction, and refused to deal with those who offered to sell it, solely on the ground that its introduction would lessen their profits, and deprive them of the frequent jobs for repairing or replacing the inferior articles then in use.

The testimony shows that, notwithstanding these obstacles, he persisted in his efforts to introduce the invention, going from city to city as fast as water-works were introduced in various parts of the country, devoting his entire time and energies to the work, and expending not only what little means he had, but all that he could borrow from his friends, and being at times reduced to such a state of destitution that for weeks at a time he was compelled to occupy an empty room and sleep on the floor. His entire time from the time he obtained his patent until his death was devoted to the effort of introducing and realizing from his invention, and yet, as shown by the testimony, he never realized therefrom as much as he could have earned at ordinary wages as a mechanic during the same time.

It further appears that at the time of filing his petition in 1876 he was seventy years old, and in very reduced circumstances. He has since died, leaving a widow sixty-nine years of age, who with a widowed daughter with three children were wholly dependent upon him for support, and who are left in a state of destitution. To add to their difficulties the daughter has since become insane, and is now an inmate of an insane asylum.

It further appears that if the patent can be extended his widow can realize from it a sum sufficient to enable her and the orphan children to live in comparative comfort, and prevent their being thrown upon the community as objects of charity.

The invention from its very nature cannot affect the public at large, as it can be used by a small portion only of the community; and it can never be used to create a monopoly, as it must always compete with the large number of similar articles of different style and make, which are free to all.

The value of the invention, as well as the perseverance and integrity of the inventor, are fully established by the affidavits of disinterested parties, and there is no opposition to his application.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, which does not extend the patent, but merely gives his widow the right to have a hearing before the Commissioner of Patents, and where any person is at liberty to oppose the extension.

Mr. BROWNE. I would like to inquire if this bill is general in its terms, or whether it is intended simply to meet by its terms this particular case?

Mr. VANCE. It meets this particular case.

Mr. BROWNE. And none other?

Mr. VANCE. No other.

Mr. STEELE. If I heard the reading of the report correctly it would seem that this patentee or his assignees or somebody else obtained a patent in 1855. Did I hear correctly?

Mr. VANCE. That is correct.

Mr. STEELE. Then if I understood the report correctly, and my colleague assures me that I did, this man has had an opportunity for about twenty-five years to test the value of his invention. Now in my opinion it is an unsafe course on the part of Congress to extend these patents for such an indefinite period. What is to be the end of it? My constituents are not interested in this matter at all, for they have no water-works in my country. But I am opposed to all such things on principle.

Mr. AIKEN. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not a unanimous report from the Committee on Patents. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEELE] has very truly said that this patentee has had the control of this invention for a longer time than is now allowed by law. The existing law gives to a patentee the control of his invention for seventeen years without any right to an extension. This patentee secured his letters-patent as long ago as 1855, twenty-five years ago.

The only argument that I have been able to discover in the report presented by the chairman of the Committee on Patents [Mr. VANCE] is that this invention was in anticipation of the wants of the country, and therefore the patentee did not receive a reasonable remuneration for his invention. Now, that very thing is the only thing that ever makes an invention creditable. If an invention was made and patented only when the people wanted it and demanded it, no man would be deserving of credit as an inventor. But the inventor must anticipate the wants of the people, and then the Government gives him the control of his invention for seventeen years.

In the present case this inventor was in advance of the wants of the people; he anticipated them more than a quarter of a century, because he contends he has not yet received adequate compensation for his invention. This is not the unanimous report of the committee, and I think the House should consider well before it passes this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the subject of this invention is in relation to hot and cold water faucets. Am I right?

Mr. VANCE. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. The report would seem to indicate that the invention applied only to faucets used in the construction of large water-works, for street purposes. Is that so?

Mr. VANCE. I think it is used only in cities.

Mr. ROBINSON. If it applies to all hot and cold water connections it is a very broad subject, one that has been considered by inventors for the past twenty-five years. The records of the Patent Office are full of improvements made by the designers of this country in relation to this matter.

As has been well said, this patentee had this invention secured to him as long ago as 1855. Now, I would like to know, for the information of the House, whether he held that patent during that time as his own property, or whether he assigned it to other parties.

Mr. VANCE. He did not assign it, but endeavored from time to time to get it introduced into use. It was many years before he got it introduced, as there were other faucets competing. It was introduced into only some three or four cities up to a little while before his death. As this report says, he traveled from city to city endeavoring to get his invention introduced, but he realized only a small amount for it.

Mr. ROBINSON. It seems to me we should proceed very cautiously in this matter of extending patents. Although I believe thoroughly in the patent system, and would dislike very much to see anything done that would break it down or impair its efficacy, yet at the same time when a patentee has had all the advantage which our patent law gives him, has had no other difficulty to contend with except that the trade will not buy his invention, that parties will not use it, and he has been brought into direct competition with other inventors, and so has failed to introduce his invention or to realize a profit from it, it seems to me there should be some hesitation, some careful consideration of the case before we agree to extend the time for his patent.

Of course there is underlying this bill and the report an appeal to our sympathy for the dependent family of this inventor. That is another matter, one of course which the hearts of members of this House will decide upon. But it seems to me that if the patentee himself were here applying for this extension of his patent, the House would be likely to vote against it, for the report in my judgment does not disclose any real ground why the claim presented on his behalf should be granted. The question really is, whether the House will give the penniless widow and children a benefit which, under the law, they are not entitled to.

Mr. VANCE. It is known that the Committee on Patents have been very careful about reporting bills looking to an extension of patents. My colleague on the committee [Mr. AIKEN] is correct in saying that the report is not unanimous in this case, although there is no minority report.

Without wishing to disclose any of the secrets of the committee, which I think would be improper, it may be said that some of my colleagues on that committee do not favor any extension of a patent. The present law provides that a patent shall have a life of seventeen years. Formerly the law provided a term of fourteen years with the right to an extension. This man brought an invention into use for the improvement of faucets for cold and hot water.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. Did not the law which was passed in 1861, extending the time of a patent from fourteen to seventeen years, provide that there should be no extension of a patent under that law?

Mr. VANCE. The law to which the gentleman refers provides that there shall be no extension of a patent by the Commissioner of Patents; but there is nothing prohibiting any person from petitioning the Congress of the United States for redress of grievances.

Mr. ATKINS. Oh, no; Congress can do anything I suppose.

Mr. VANCE. It is in evidence, Mr. Speaker, that this invention has been very valuable to the cities where it has been introduced. For many years it was out of the power of the inventor to get his invention introduced; only three or four cities adopted it. In the mean time he encountered, as the report shows, the opposition of the plumbers of the country, because the invention interfered, as they believed, with their business. The inventor went from city to city, as the testimony shows—so poor that many times he was obliged to sleep on the floor, not having the means to procure for himself comfortable quarters. Up to the time of his death he only received from his invention what would have been ordinary mechanic's wages. Having introduced this very valuable invention, he died at the age of seventy, leaving a widow sixty-nine years of age, who has a widowed daughter with three children to support. Since the death of the inventor the daughter has become insane and is now an inmate of an asylum. The widow now comes forward and petitions the Congress of the United States to authorize her to go before the Commissioner of Patents and apply for an extension. This bill does not propose directly to extend the patent. It simply authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to do so after he shall have taken sworn testimony; after he shall have advertised for three months, I believe, so that all the world may have notice to come in and oppose the extension.

We think this a case that appeals to the Congress of the United States in behalf of this widow and these fatherless children. It is in testimony that the invention is only used by the authorities in the cities as I understand, and does not affect the masses of the people. It cannot be a monopoly, because it comes in competition with other faucets, many of which are already in use.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is not this invention applied to ordinary small faucets, such as are found connected with the wash-bowls, or the ordinary water apparatus in dwellings?

Mr. VANCE. I think it is in use in houses in the cities.

Mr. ROBINSON. May it not apply to all dwelling-houses throughout the whole country, where water apparatus or water-pipes are in use?

Mr. VANCE. I suppose it would.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then it is not the fact that the invention applies alone to the large water-mains in cities?

Mr. VANCE. I will state that it has only been used in that way. As I was saying, it cannot be a monopoly because it will probably never affect the general public. This could not be a monopoly while it comes in competition with many inventions of a similar character. What is a monopoly? A monopoly, as I understand, is where a man is allowed by law the exclusive control of a certain class or character of goods. For instance, if the law authorized one man alone to sell woolen goods, and all the rest of mankind were denied the right to sell such goods, that would be a monopoly. But this is not a monopoly. The bill simply extends to this poor widow the right to go before the Commissioner of Patents and ask to be heard. I ask gentlemen whether they will deny her the right to make this application—the right to go before the Commissioner of Patents, who will determine whether this patent should be extended or not.

In my judgment this is a case that commands itself to the sympathy as well as the sound judgment of this House. Here was a man who struggled in poverty to bring a useful invention into use; who died without realizing anything from it beyond ordinary mechanic's wages. I fear, sir, that this is the history of too many inventions. Men spend their lives without adequate compensation in perfecting inventions which are inestimable blessings to the country.

I am sorry to see that there is in the minds of some gentlemen here what I fear is a prejudice toward patents and the patent system. I say that we cannot to-day measure the advantage that has resulted to this great country from the patent system. Volumes could be filled in showing how industry has been redoubled throughout the length and breadth of the land by the influence of the patent system. Here is a man who, after devoting his life to perfecting his patent, died, leaving his widow in poverty. I ask the representatives of the American people to look at this case from a broad, a proper standpoint.

Here, sir, is the cry of the poor: "For the needy shall not be forgotten; the expectation of the poor shall not perish forever." It is for the representatives of the people to do as they please in this matter, but, Mr. Speaker, if this bill cannot pass then it is useless for the Committee on Patents to bring forward any bill looking in the direction of extension of patents where the patentee has not been remunerated for his invention.

I yield now to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WARD.]

Mr. BRAGG. Let me inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina whether this patentee owns the patent, or whether it has been sold to some other person who is using the heirs of this patentee and their poverty for the purpose of securing the whole benefit of the extension to themselves.

Mr. VANCE. It has not been assigned.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, I fully concur in the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON,] and

I indorse the view he has taken, that every application for the extension of a patent should be considered carefully, examined critically, and not reported to this House until the Committee on Patents has been fully satisfied it is a case which warrants the granting of an extension. And, sir, so far as the Committee on Patents is concerned, that has been the sentiment which has actuated it in the course it has taken during this Congress in reference to all these cases of extension. Of the numerous applications laid before that Committee, from time to time, for extension of patents, the number is infinitesimal which gets through and comes here before the House with a favorable report. It is not until they are submitted to the careful scrutiny of an investigation, and until the case is found to be one surrounded by such peculiar circumstances as to induce it to believe it is exceptional and entitled to the favorable consideration of the House, that the committee agrees to bring it here for favorable action.

I wish to say, with all respect to this House, that as I understand the sentiments of members upon this floor the danger is not that unfair and unjust patents will get through and unjust extensions be granted, but the danger is that the patentee will be treated unjustly, will be met here with prejudice; that when he presents a case which fairly entitles him to consideration, when, as in the case now presented by the chairman of the Committee on Patents, a man has devoted his life, given his brain, his life-blood, to inventing and perfecting and introducing an invention which cheapens a necessary article to the public, which has made great improvement in the particular line toward which his efforts were directed—that after he has done all that and exhausted his energy and comes here, not himself but those who have succeeded him—when they come here in poverty, not the inventor, but those he has left behind him after his death, asking for some consideration and some compensation for all that he has done to the country—the danger, I say, is that when they come here they will be refused that hearing and justice to which they are fairly entitled.

All I ask in this bill, or in any other bill which may find entrance into this House by report from the Committee on Patents, is that the proposition shall not be received in the first instance with prejudice, but that when the report is made the report shall receive the respect and consideration to which it is entitled, and shall be examined by the House fairly and deliberately and action shall be taken on the case as on any other matter coming from any other committee.

Mr. VANCE. I yield now to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to oppose a bill which has the sort of merit suggested by my friend from North Carolina, being in favor of a poor woman and a widow, but this House must have learned by this time it had better turn back to general legislation and estop so much special legislation. I was glad when my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] brought in a bill for the establishment of a commission to examine, on natural equity and justice, the various pension cases reported against in the Pension Bureau.

But in reference to this extension of patents I wish to say to this House, Mr. Speaker, that when the law was passed in February, 1861, no one intended or expected thereafter there should be any more extensions of any kind. We extended the patents generally at that time from seven to fourteen years. I happened at that time to be on the committee of conference. In looking up the record I find the following, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PATENT LAWS.

Mr. Douglas, from the second committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (S. No. 10) in addition to "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts," submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (S. No. 10) in addition to "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts," having met, and after a full and free conference thereon, agreed to report, and do report, as follows:

To strike out all after the word "that," in the sixteenth section, and insert the following: "All patents hereafter granted shall remain in force for the term of seventeen years from the date of issue; and all extension of such patents is hereby prohibited."

S. A. DOUGLAS,
G. N. FITCH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
S. S. COX,
AUGUSTUS FRANK,
THOMAS J. BARR,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COX. That was twenty years ago, and on the extension of patents the general understanding, the judgment of both branches, was that no more extension should be had. Where will be the end of special legislation unless we call a halt somewhere? Now is the best time to make a general rule to cut down all this special legislation. If we cannot do justice, then let my friend bring in a general bill enlarging the time for the benefit of inventors.

I agree with the gentleman that inventions should be protected. The Constitution gives the right of property in one's thought, in one's invention, in the eighth section, to promote the progress of science and the useful arts by securing for a limited time to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

After a time, after a limited time, the people were to have the benefit of these inventions. Congress is the arbiter of that subject, and ought to arbitrate by general legislation only.

Mr. WARD. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question? The section of the Constitution to which he refers, and which he has just read, provides that Congress shall by a law secure to the inventor, for a limited period, the right to his invention. Now, suppose the inventor is deprived of that exclusive right, and thereby deprived of the fruits or the benefit which were designed to be secured to him by the Constitution; suppose that the returns, or what should be returns, from that invention are entirely swept away by infringements upon it or by costly litigation to protect it from infringements, and at the end of the term which the Constitution prescribes for his protection he comes in here and makes the statement to this body that the law that he had depended upon as his protection did not avail him, has he not a right to ask relief of this body, which alone can grant it?

Mr. COX. In response to the gentleman, I believe that it is competent for Congress by this special legislation to secure year after year for a thousand years, if you please, the inventor in some right which he has. But I am arguing for a general law, otherwise our business would be so choked up that we might as well adjourn at once for all the good that we are likely to do here.

Mr. VANCE. I yield to my colleague from Maryland on the committee for five minutes.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from New York who has just addressed the House, the Committee on Patents, I am sure, although I am not authorized to say so, would be very glad to have a general law covering all these cases passed. But, sir, the business of the Committee on Patents—

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I for one should be opposed to any extension.

Mr. TALBOTT. Well, let every gentleman speak for himself. But the business of the Committee on Patents is to inquire as to whether or not the extension of patents shall be granted in special cases. It is the business of the committee to make the inquiry. They go into all the special cases, into all the details, and upon that investigation make their report to the House, after having been authorized by Congress to make the inquiry whether in their judgment extension should be granted in particular cases. The rule for their guidance is as follows: If the Committee on Patents say that, in their judgment, the invention is in itself valuable to the whole people, and the inventor has not received adequate remuneration; then a favorable report is made. In this particular case, looking at it from that stand-point, the petitioner is entitled to aid from Congress to protect him in the enjoyment of his right. This is a case where the investigation took place by the Committee on Patents, and a majority of the committee say that it is a fair case and that the Commissioner of Patents should pass upon it. The matter is referred to him, and a majority of the committee ask the House to indorse that action and let the Commissioner grant the extension. It is an invention that is valuable to the public. All of the facts show that the inventor has not received adequate remuneration for it. That is all I propose to say. I think it is a just case, and I hope it will receive favorable action here.

Mr. VANCE. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] for two minutes, after which I will call the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman certainly does not expect to pass this bill to-day.

Mr. VANCE. I hope we will be able to get a vote upon it to-day.

Mr. KEIFER. This is a question which I think should have more careful consideration, and I hope the gentleman will allow it to go over to another day.

Mr. VANCE. I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Ohio for two minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope, then, the gentleman will give me the remainder of the morning hour, which is only for a few minutes, and then allow this bill to go over to next week.

Mr. VANCE. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio for three minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I could not be expected to state my objections in detail to a bill of this kind in three minutes. I want to say I understand this is a patent that it is proposed not to extend, but it is proposed by extraordinary legislation to allow the representatives of the original patentee to come in and get another patent. I have been told that this patent was once extended; that it was originally a seven-year patent, and was subsequently extended for seven years more, making fourteen years in all, and that it is now twenty-five years old, that is to say, it has been twenty-five years since it was first issued. It is a patent upon an article in common use, an article almost as common as tin cups, and this bill proposes to extend this patent on faucets for drawing hot and cold water, an arrangement that is in common use. Now it is proposed to extend this for a period of seventeen years more, making a total of thirty-one years. It is a bad principle at least to extend a patent in this country. It ought not to be done except in the most extraordinary cases. I know that people who have had these rights, patentees, have often failed to realize their expectations, and after that they come here with a case that appeals to our sympathy, but we must remember, Mr. Speaker, that other people are affected by this subject as seriously and are as much interested in the matter as the party who applies for relief. We are not sitting here for the purpose of healing all the misfortunes of people or of relieving the wants growing out of a bad management of their own affairs. If I had time I would be glad to give my views on this subject in full, but in the few moments allotted to me it is utterly impracticable for me to do so. I will therefore content myself with the hope that the matter will be allowed to go over until we can have more time to examine it.

Mr. VANCE. I yield the floor to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COVERT,] and will let the bill go over till the morning hour of Friday next.

The SPEAKER. There are four minutes of the morning hour remaining.

Mr. COVERT. With the understanding that I can claim the floor on next Friday, I suggest that the bill be now allowed to go over till then.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let it be understood by unanimous consent that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. ATKINS. I object to any arrangement by unanimous consent.

Mr. VANCE. I yield the remainder of the morning hour to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. AIKEN.]

Mr. AIKEN. I desire simply to call the attention of the House to the course these bills take. I am satisfied by what has fallen from members not on the committee that they do not understand properly the condition of this matter. This bill is presented to the Committee on Patents with a petition requesting that the party interested may go before the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of seven years. He has had fourteen years, according to law, and an extension already of seven years more. The impression has been attempted to be created here that if this permission be granted it does not necessarily follow that the party will secure an extension from the Commissioner, because the Commissioner while hearing the application will also give a hearing to others who oppose the extension. It has been asserted by another member of the committee who voted favorably on this bill that the right is demanded that the Commissioner may extend the patent; and prima facie if we adopt this the patentee will simply go to the Commissioner of Patents and secure an extension.

This is of no value to the patentee proper, but to the legatees of the patentee. The chairman of the committee has appealed most pathetically to the sympathies of this House to help the poor. I say, bring in a bill to appropriate aid for the poor and I will vote for it. But why should we abuse the provisions of the patent laws to help the poor when there is nothing in the Constitution to authorize it? My experience during three and a half years on the Committee on Patents teaches me there never has been and probably never will be an appeal to Congress for an extension of a patent without its being accompanied with an exhibition of extreme poverty. And yet some of these very patentees live in brown-stone houses.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I give notice that if the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee be not agreed to I shall move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. And if the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] should not prevail I will ask for a session of the House to-morrow. I hope we may avoid that by concluding the report on the rules to-day.

Mr. BRIGHT. Although this is not a subject of debate I would like to be permitted to say a word.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee, as the other two gentlemen have spoken.

Mr. BRIGHT. In reply to the gentleman from New York I will say that I suppose to-morrow will be open for the consideration of any business. And I will say further that last Friday was devoted to the consideration of the rules.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire that we shall dispose of the rules at the earliest possible moment; and if we cannot do it to-day let us do it to-morrow.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAYES. Is this objection day, or consideration day in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is objection day.

Mr. HAYES. Then I think we had better take up the rules.

The question being taken on Mr. BRIGHT's motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, there were—ayes 39, noes 100.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to. Mr. BLACKBURN. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering further the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Pending that I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. PRICE. I hope that motion will not prevail. The plea is constantly set up that we are pressed for time, and yet we are in the habit of adjourning over Saturday and losing a legislative day every week when we might as well be going on with our work.

Mr. COX. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I withdraw my motion until it be seen what is the result of the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. McCoid, for two weeks.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. RICE asked unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of papers in the case of John Pratt, there being no adverse report thereon; which request was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HOT SPRINGS COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of letter and affidavit of Hon. Powell Clayton in relation to Hot Springs (Arkansas) commission; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REVISION OF RULES.

The motion of Mr. BLACKBURN was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXVIII.

CHANGE OR SUSPENSION OF RULES.

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, and no rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on every Monday after the call of States and Territories shall have been completed, and during the last six days of a session.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Committee on Rules have agreed upon certain amendments to be proposed to this rule. Those amendments were placed in the charge of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] but I do not see him in his seat at this time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will ask that the amendments referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] be allowed to be offered hereafter.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I have an amendment to offer to this rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first entertain the amendments recommended by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I see that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is now in his seat.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to propose the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "every Monday" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the first and third Mondays in each month," and after the word "completed," insert the words "preference being given on the first Monday to individuals and on the third Monday to committees;" so that it will read:

"No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, and no rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays in each month, after the call of the States and Territories shall have been concluded, preference being given on the first Monday to individuals and on the third Monday to committees, and during the last six days of a session."

Mr. FRYE. It will at once be seen what this amendment will effect if adopted. It will leave all the Mondays but two in each month for useful business and legislation. Under the present rule motions for suspension of the rules can be made on every Monday. Now, few gentlemen in this House have failed to see what the effect of such a rule as that has been. After the States and Territories have been called on Monday for the introduction of bills for reference, motions to suspend the rules have been in order. And since I have been in Congress the result has been that two-thirds of the time on each Monday has been utterly and entirely wasted.

In the first place, it is understood that any gentleman under the present rule may bring before the House any resolution he may see fit, and compel us to vote upon it. Political resolutions are in order, and to prevent their being offered to the House every now and then we adjourn immediately after the call of States has been completed, and the remainder of that Monday is wasted.

During this session of Congress the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has been endeavoring to get a resolution before this House. Four or five times the House has adjourned on him, and finally the Speaker, exercising a right which he has the authority to exercise, and performing a duty which I think he ought to have performed, has given the floor for motions to suspend the rules to committees who have unanimously made such a request rather than to individuals. In that way three or four committees have been able to get propositions before the House for consideration. But all the rest of the Monday after the morning hour has been wasted. That will be the history of Mondays during this whole session of Congress unless a change is made in the rule.

It seems to me that we have been sent here for some useful purpose, to do some good, not to be compelled to go upon the record on foolish propositions, on propositions the majority of which are mere humbug propositions—simply, thin attempts at demagoguery. That is true of two-thirds of the individual resolutions which have been offered on Monday.

The Committee on Rules propose to give to individuals one Monday in every month, and to committees one Monday in every month for motions to suspend the rules. In that way the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] will at any rate have one Monday in a month when his resolution would be in order, and the committees would have another Monday. The Committee on Rules have recommended this amendment in the interest of legislation.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will ask the Clerk to read an amendment which I have prepared, and which I think will accomplish the very purpose referred to by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.] His argument goes to show that the House ought not to be compelled to entertain propositions that do not look to actual legislation. We have all witnessed the scenes to which he has referred. The House of Representatives, almost like a parcel of school-boys, meet and adjourn again and again, because some gentleman entitled to the floor proposes to offer a resolution expressing a mere opinion, a mere catch resolution, proposing no legislation if it shall pass. To avoid that the House has presented the spectacle to the country of adjourning in order to prevent members from being called upon to vote on a proposition which when voted upon would amount to nothing, and if adopted would be only an expression of opinion and can result in no practical legislation.

I have prepared an amendment which will cut off on every Monday these resolutions looking alone to mere expressions of opinion, and not leading to any useful legislation for the country.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is not proper for the House of Representatives to express an opinion upon questions of public interest, even if no legislation is contemplated?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think the House of Representatives has no business to express opinions which neither influence any one nor instruct any one. We have a right to call for information from those who can give it; my amendment would not cut off such resolutions. And we have a right to adopt practical resolutions which look to practical results in legislation. But that Congress should erect itself into a body to express opinions, not in the form of law, is, I think, conducive to no public good and certainly no private interest. For this reason I propose the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

But the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules on Monday to consider a resolution or proposition merely expressing the opinion of the House upon the question proposed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I shall offer this amendment at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be in order now. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] by instruction of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Committee on Rules are unanimous in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

The amendment of Mr. FRYE was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now offer the amendment which has already been read.

Mr. FRYE. If the gentleman will withhold his amendment for a moment—

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will do so.

Mr. FRYE. I have two amendments which I am instructed to offer by the Committee on Rules, and which, if adopted, may do away with the necessity for the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia. I move to insert the following as clause 2 of Rule XXVIII:

All motions to suspend the rules shall, before being submitted to the House, be seconded by a majority by tellers, if demanded, as in the case of the previous question.

A rule similar to this was adopted in the Forty-third Congress, I believe. Why it was given up I do not know. I remember that it worked well during that Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take the liberty of suggesting that these new rules, if adopted, will not require the previous question to be seconded by a majority.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let the concluding words of the amendment, "as in the case of the previous question," be struck out.

Mr. FRYE. I modify the amendment in that way.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I concur in a great deal that has been said about "buncombe" resolutions offered on Monday; but I think this House had better be a little careful before it deprives itself of an important power. I do not speak now particularly of the present Congress or the committees of the present Congress. I acknowledge that in this Congress and in the last Congress the committees have been liberal, and have in many cases reported bills adversely in order to get them before the House, even when the committee did not concur in the opinion of the proposer of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman will allow me to suggest that an adverse report does not prevent a bill from coming before the House.

Mr. McMAHON. The Speaker does not understand my proposition. Take the case as it was in the Forty-fourth Congress. If any one thing was plain in the course of the Forty-fourth Congress, it was that committees "sat down" upon public measures and private measures—gave the House no opportunity to vote even when two-thirds might be in favor of a particular measure.

Now, I for one despise the mere political part of the proceedings of Monday; but as a Representative I would like to see this House preserve to itself, untrammelled by too many votes, (and this proposition brings in another vote,) the right to instruct a committee as the sense of the House to report at an early day some bill which is pending before the committee. We ought not to create any restriction in this respect.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If a majority cannot be obtained to second a proposition for suspension of the rules, of course a two-third vote for suspension cannot be obtained.

Mr. McMAHON. But the point is this: when you have a count by tellers, motions to adjourn &c., you waste the only day in a whole month upon which individuals can have an opportunity to present these propositions. I want gentlemen to consider whether we ought not to preserve to ourselves the right to have one day in a month on which we can take the sense of the House—not merely for purposes of political effect but for the purpose of expressing the opinion of the House upon a question of legislation, or for the purpose of instructing a committee to report a bill which the committee may be disposed to smother.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Mr. Chairman, the excuse heretofore given by committees for the omission to report has been a just one—that they have not had the opportunity. The committees, in other words, have been but rarely called during the morning hour because it has been consumed in debate, as we have seen has been the case recently. Now, the Committee on Rules in this revision have proposed an alteration in this respect. They have recommended that the morning hour be confined to the presentation of reports from committees. Under the operation of this rule, in my judgment, no committee of this House will fail to have an opportunity to report the measures submitted to its judgment. This is an immense advantage.

As to this suspension of the rules on Monday, if a majority vote cannot be obtained to second the motion, of course two-thirds will not vote for the suspension. Hence in the judgment of the Committee on Rules it appeared proper that a proposition on which a two-third vote is required should first be seconded by a majority vote on a count by tellers before the question on suspension, requiring a two-third vote, should be taken.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] from the Committee on Rules, has offered an amendment which has been adopted. Now, suppose any member should desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of that amendment, will he be precluded by the course pursued in yielding to members of the Committee on Rules to submit amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not, unless instructed by the committee, exclude gentlemen from offering amendments to this, because the practice has been always to take the question first on amendments offered by the committee.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The committee does not desire to restrict any amendment in any way.

Mr. GILLETTE. I would like to inquire whether this privilege of moving suspensions of the rules on Monday does not also include the privilege of moving suspension of the rules for the introduction of individual bills as well as for the introduction of resolutions?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Anything, of course.

Mr. GILLETTE. So I understand it. I would like to inquire whether this is not the only door open, if it is open, to an individual who is in the minority in this House and wishes to bring some measure before this body for action—whether this is not the only opportunity he can have to do it, unless some committee is willing to report his measure to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a question addressed to the Chair.

Mr. GILLETTE. Will the Chair let me address the question to our honorable Speaker?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It is a plain case. The committee were unanimous in giving the opportunity on one of these Mondays to individuals to present measures for suspension, motions for suspension to pass a bill, or to consider it, or to adopt a resolution or opinion, or anything else, if they can get the proper vote in the House to do it. The object, really, of the committee is to give always two Mondays to general legislation, and in the months where there are five Mondays we, of course, gain another Monday.

Mr. GILLETTE. This last proposed amendment simply takes one more step, puts one more impediment in the way of an individual who has not the opportunity of reaching the House through committees—prevents his getting any measure before the House, whether resolution or bill. And I protest, in the interest of districts which are in the minority, whose Representatives have no opportunity through committees to reach this House—I protest, I say, against any measure which in the least impairs this one day in the month and prevents an individual member from getting his business brought forward.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Under the practice of having individuals recognized individuals might not get one day in the month, but the committee have opened the door so they shall have one Monday in the month.

Mr. BRAGG. I move to strike out the last word. I have not endeavored to enlighten this House on the subject of these rules during the last two months, but I have listened to the discussion of the rules with some interest; and now that we have come to the consideration of this rule I see, from my little experience, a great evil from the legislation which has grown up under it. I have seen that evil admitted on this floor this morning, and admitted by the Committee on Rules. But instead of giving it heroic treatment, they are endeavoring to compromise with it and still let the root of the evil live.

One gentleman has objected to the rule authorizing suspension of the rules because it propounds to this House suddenly political conundrums, having no effect except to embarrass the members of the House who are to vote on them. Another gentleman, representing the Committee of Claims, has protested the suspension of the rules because it permitted demagoguery to come in.

Now, sir, I protest against this rule and the suspension of the rules under it, not only as applicable to Monday but as applicable, and more particularly so, to the last six days of the session. My objection is in the interest of good, sound, conservative legislation. In my judgment, no matter ought ever to be presented to the consideration of this House for its vote, unless it be such a matter as has been first considered, digested, canvassed, and weighed by a committee of this House. I have seen, and I think every member of this body has seen, that if you will in the last six days of a session allow two-thirds of a quorum to pass bills which have never been considered in any committee at all, it requires but a very little consultation among those who are remaining to secure the passage of a series of bills which are more damaging as legislative matters than any other legislation which takes place during the entire session. And, therefore, sir, I propose to offer an amendment to this bill which shall dispose of the question of demagoguery which the gentleman from Maine spoke of, and the conundrums the gentleman from Virginia spoke of, by simply letting the rule stand as it is and adding at the end thereof "and then only," meaning the House shall suspend the rules or the Speaker shall entertain a motion to suspend the rules on the Monday and on the last six days of the session "and then only for the consideration of a bill or resolution favorably reported by a committee of the House;" or, to give the case suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, when a committee that is hostile to a bill seeks to suppress it and will not give the House an opportunity to vote on it, to instruct a committee of the House. So, with my amendment adopted, there is left a power in the House to instruct by a suspension of the rules a committee of the House on any Monday, and a prohibition on any Monday, or on the last six days of the session, to foist legislation upon the statute-books that is not respectable enough to receive the favorable consideration of the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The history of this rule, Mr. Chairman, shows that a reduction has been made in the number of days on which a suspension of the rules can be had. It was originally fixed at ten days instead of six days that motions were in order to suspend the rules. That rule was adopted in 1820. It stood so until 1874. In 1874 the time was reduced from ten days to six days preceding the close of the session of Congress. The Committee on Rules, so far as that limit of time is concerned, have left it just as they found it in the original rule, the shortest period known in the history of Congress.

Now, the amendment submitted by the member from Maine on the Committee on Rules, and agreed to by this Committee of the Whole, limits the right to suspend the rules on Monday to one-half when compared with what it was under that existing arrangement, for it is only upon two Mondays in the month that this motion can be submitted. Upon one of these only can it be made by a member individually, and upon the other Monday in each month it can only be moved by authority and direction of a committee. I think, sir, the Committee on Rules and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, which has been agreed to, have certainly gone a good long way toward restricting the power of which the gentleman complains.

Mr. HAWLEY. Did the gentleman from Wisconsin offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet.

The question was taken upon Mr. FRYE's amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment to clause 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded, it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for thirty minutes, one-half of such time to be given to debate in favor of and one-half to debate in opposition to such proposition.

Mr. FRYE. That explains itself. It is simply to give members generally a chance to explain the reasons for their action, and place themselves upon the record.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It only carries, as I understand it, debate to thirty minutes, to be divided equally between the sides.

Mr. FRYE. That is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to insert the following as a separate clause.

Mr. FINLEY. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will wait a moment, as I desire to offer an amendment to the first clause.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am willing to hear it read.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. The amendment which I propose to offer was to come in at the end of the rule. I understand now the proposition is to add a distinct and separate clause to the rule, as stated in the report of the Committee on Rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to send his amendment for immediate action, but with a view to having it inserted at the end of the rule, which would seem to be the most appropriate place for it, as it states the purpose for which the rules might be suspended.

Mr. BRAGG. The form of the amendment, as I have drawn it, is to add it at the end of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, this is a separate clause which is offered here; and it is proper that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin should come in after action is taken upon this or any other matter which may be added to the rule, since his proposed amendment is a limitation upon the purpose for which the rule can be suspended.

Mr. HAWLEY. Are we going back to the first clause of the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has announced that having entertained the amendments offered by the Committee on Rules, he will give other gentlemen the privilege of offering amendments to this rule.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand that the committee has perfected the rule and made three clauses. Now, do we go back and begin at the first clause?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain amendments to the first clause.

Mr. FINLEY. I offer the following as an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I only yield to allow the proposed amendment to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Monday" insert "or on the first and third Tuesdays if no session is held on Monday."

Mr. FINLEY. That is pertinent to the first clause of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask the Clerk now to read my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

But the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules on Monday to consider a resolution or proposition merely expressing the opinion of the House on the question proposed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My amendment is offered as an addition to the rule offered by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.] It is very narrow. It does not interfere with legislation. It does not interfere with a joint resolution in the nature of a bill. It does not interfere with a resolution of instruction to a committee. It does not interfere with a resolution of inquiry addressed to any of the Departments. It does not interfere with practical legislation or with the expression of opinion of the House on any practical question before the House or before either body. But it simply prevents the Speaker from entertaining a motion to suspend the rules to express an opinion upon a mere abstract question; the vote upon which, if unanimous, amounts to nothing but an expression of opinion. It interferes with no call for information. It interferes with no demand for a committee to report; for that is practical legislation. A resolution instructing a committee to report would not be covered by that amendment.

As the matter now stands, while the committee have tried to restrict this thing that we witness every Monday to only two Mondays in the month, you will find practically that has not been done. There is a provision in the amendment just adopted that a majority shall second the motion. Now, what will be the effect if gentlemen do not want to vote on the question? Suppose my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] should offer his resolution and demand tellers under this new rule. If the motion were seconded, then at once some gentleman would move that the House adjourn, to get rid of voting on the question. We would have the same scenes over again that we have witnessed here from time immemorial.

Therefore I think my amendment should be adopted, in the interest of economy of time, and in the interest of legislation, and to put a stop to this constant system of introducing resolutions, whether for buncombe or for personal motives or for what not; resolutions at least that do not amount to business of a practical character for the interests of the country.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia what I send to the desk.

Mr. LOWE. I have risen to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will give the gentleman from Alabama an opportunity to be heard in due course. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule XXVIII by adding the following:

But the Speaker shall entertain no motion to suspend the rules except for the consideration of a bill or resolution favorably reported by a committee of the House, or to instruct a committee of the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not see that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin necessarily conflicts with that offered by the gentleman from Virginia. I think it should rather be offered as a separate clause. I do not see the necessity of substituting it for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia. They are quite independent of each other.

I rose, however, to say, Mr. Chairman, that I had drawn a separate clause, which I propose to offer as an addition to the rule, covering very much the same ground as that covered by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, or perhaps a little more. I propose to offer a clause like this:

No motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill shall be entertained unless the bill shall have been referred to a committee, reported therefrom, printed, and distributed to the members at least one legislative day before the motion for suspension is made.

Now, I care less about so much of that as calls for a reference to a committee and a report therefrom as I do about that part which calls for a printed copy of the bill. That part of it I should strenuously urge.

I comprehend the feelings of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER,] who, in a minority on some topics, is anxious to be heard. But I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he can be heard practically by offering amendments to bills as they are in progress through the House. If he has ideas that he thinks of importance to the country it is hardly worth while to spend an hour calling the roll upon them unless he can get a majority of the House to embody his views in practical legislation. But if he desires simply to test the sense of the House he can do so equally well by offering an amendment to some bill which may be under discussion in the House.

I sympathize with the honest purpose of a small minority to get an expression of their views, but I do very much object to bringing in a bill here in manuscript on Monday and rushing it through. I do not know whether I shall refer to a particular case or not. But let us suppose that a bill has been before a committee in one Congress and could get no report in its favor; that it has been brought before another committee in a second Congress and could not get any report in its favor, and then in a third Congress it has been brought before a committee which no one would ever suspect had charge of such a measure, and then it was brought before the House in manuscript and carried through under a suspension of the rules. That is what I object to.

Mr. McLANE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him how, in the case he supposes, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] could get his views submitted to the House by an amendment?

Mr. HAWLEY. What I said upon that point was merely a side remark. The purpose I have in view is that no bill, unless it has been referred to a committee and reported therefrom, and unless it has been put in print and distributed, shall be allowed to take up time on Monday. And, by the way, that clause is in the new constitution of Pennsylvania, which is supposed to be a model document. That constitution provides that no bill shall be passed under a suspension of the rules, or in any other way, unless it be referred to a committee and reported therefrom.

If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] is content to have added the idea of printing and distributing bills, he and myself might wait and submit the proposition as a separate clause. I will not submit it now, but will defer it for the present.

Mr. LOWE. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] because I think that in itself and of itself it reflects upon this House. He seems to think that certain members of the House have two platforms concealed about their persons, and that they are unwilling that any bill of discovery or search warrant in the nature of a resolution on Monday should go through their political consciences and show the people that they talk one way at home and act another way here. Now, sir, in the consideration of these proposed rules we have been drifting day by day farther and farther from individual responsibility to the people. The House is no longer democratic; it is an oligarchy of rules, dominated by the Speaker, and such a thing as individual responsibility is unknown here. The committees are responsible, the majority of the members of the House is responsible; but the individual is lost in the action which results from the organization of the House.

What are you afraid of? Is it the banks, or the railroads, or the protectionists? Do you dread the syndicate or the corporations? Shades of Jefferson and Jackson! Where is the honesty and courage which once characterized your party? It has gone, and we have nothing but trickery and treachery.

Now, I am like every man who is in a minority, I exalt personal liberty and oppose the powers that be. I do it in sheer self-defense. I do not want to be ignored or suppressed. I represent here a constituency as honest and as intelligent as any other constituency. And I want an opportunity under the rules to test the sense of this House upon questions that are before the country. I have no sentiment or opinion here which I seek to conceal or hide away from the people at home. And I have no sympathy or feeling in common with the demagoguery and cowardice which hopes to escape responsibility by evasion and silence.

Heretofore we have had the right, each member, to bring his views before the House and the country, but lately, under the practice of the Speaker, we have been denied that right. And we now understand that under the rules of the House, to be deliberately adopted for that express purpose, individuals are to be suppressed or ignored and nobody is to be heard here upon any politico-economical question during this session pending the presidential election. That is the whole of it, and we want the country to so understand it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. One word in reply to my friend from Alabama. [Mr. LOWE.] I assure him and the committee that I had not the slightest reference to persons or to parties. My amendment was wholly in the interest of economy of time and practical legislation.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER. I understand the gentleman to say that he has not the slightest reference to either persons or parties. Now, I ask him if he did not mention my name in his remarks?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I mentioned the gentleman's name for the reason that it had been before referred to to illustrate the proposition that the House had adjourned in order to avoid voting on a certain question. Now, I am willing to vote on that question—

Mr. WEAVER. Does the gentleman think that more time would be lost by voting on the resolution than would to adjourn?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. If the gentleman will introduce a bill for action, instead of a mere clap-trap or buncombe resolution, he will not find me unwilling to vote on it.

Mr. WEAVER. The clap-trap and buncombe come in on the stump in the gentleman's district, and in other districts where members express one thing and then in this House act another.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. If such a resolution as the gentleman refers to should pass it would amount to nothing more than a resolution adopted by a town meeting in his district. I am opposed to taking up the time of this House in discussing and voting on a resolution which, if adopted, will amount to nothing. If the gentleman wants to have a law passed on the currency question, let him bring in a bill that can be voted upon, and which, if passed, will have the effect of law. It is to avoid voting on this sort of stuff which is brought before the House that members adjourn, and to prevent the necessity for that I have offered my amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to strike out the last word. It is well understood by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] and by this entire House, and it is becoming well understood by the country, that it is not a bill that he wants or that this House wants, for there are several bills pending before committees of this House, introduced by myself and others, which do bring up that very question. But the committees are so managed that those bills are smothered and cannot be brought to the light of day. The gentleman well understands this, and so does the whole country.

And then when I seek or any other member of this House seeks to introduce a resolution in order to present the very principle which is contained in these bills, and in which the country takes the deepest interest, such a resolution is called clap-trap. Sir, the clap-trap is used before the people on the stump to make them believe that a particular member is in favor of one thing, and then when he comes into this House he is found to be in favor of tabooing that very principle by indirection through the machinery of a committee of this House. I am astonished to hear such gentlemen claiming to represent the democracy of this country, when it is well known that ninety-nine out of every hundred of the democratic party west of the Alleghany Mountains are in favor of the principles contained in the resolutions which have so frightened this House for five weeks, and which I now send to the Clerk's desk to have read as a portion of my remarks. [Laughter and applause.] I want the country to understand that these gentlemen, when these resolutions are sought to be brought before this House, call them clap-trap and humbug; but they are the soundest doctrine imaginable at home on the stump.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that all currency, whether metallic or paper, necessary for the use and convenience of the people, should be issued and its volume controlled by the Government, and not by or through the bank corporations of the country; and when so issued should be a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private.

Second. Resolved, That in the judgment of this House, that portion of the interest-bearing debt of the United States which shall become redeemable in the year 1881, or prior thereto, being in amount about $792,000,000, should not be refunded beyond the power of the Government to call in said obligations and pay them at any time, but should be paid as rapidly as possible, and according to contract. To enable the Government to meet these obligations the mints of the United States should be operated to their full capacity in the coinage of standard silver dollars, and such other coinage as the business interests of the country may require.

Mr. WEAVER. Now I can well understand why it is that the leaders of the democratic party, being in the East for hard money and in the West for soft money, do not wish to be put on record upon resolutions of this kind on the eve of a presidential election. I understand that very well. But these resolutions are now before the country, and I shall be found standing here inserting the thorn in the flesh every Monday from now until the adjournment of Congress, unless sooner gratified, seeking recognition. I am determined that gentlemen in this House shall be put upon the record on those resolutions and their public professions tested.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Will the gentleman tell us whether he voted for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] providing that all propositions touching coinage and currency might be put on appropriation bills as "riders."

Mr. WEAVER. I will answer that question. I stand here as an humble representative of the greenback party, opposed to putting any "riders" on appropriation bills, whether State-rights "riders" or greenback "riders." [Applause.] I want every bill to come up on its merits. The gentleman and his political associates had better recede from their idea of putting political "riders" on appropriation bills, or there will not be enough of the democratic party left after the next election to form a corporal's guard. [Laughter and applause.] It is neither true democracy nor wise legislation.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Now I suggest that we go on with the rules.

DEATH OF HON. GEORGE S. HOUSTON.

The committee rose informally; when a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, communicated to the House resolutions of the Senate on the announcement of the death of Hon. GEORGE S. HOUSTON, late a Senator from the State of Alabama.

Mr. SHELLEY. I give notice that on Wednesday next, at one o'clock, I propose to call up these resolutions for consideration.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. BRAGG to amend Rule XXVIII, by adding the following:

But the Speaker shall entertain no motion to suspend the rules except for the consideration of a bill or resolution favorably reported by a committee of the House, or to instruct a committee of the House.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, to add to the pending rule the following:

But the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules on Monday to consider a resolution or proposition merely expressing the opinion of the House upon the question proposed.

The amendment was not agreed to, there being ayes 14, noes not counted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] sent to the desk some time ago an amendment, which is now in order, and will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Monday" insert "or on the first and third Tuesdays, if no session is held on Monday."

Mr. FINLEY. I ask that the Clerk read the rule as it will stand if this amendment be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, and no rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month, preference being given on the first Monday to individuals, and on the third Monday to committees; or on the first and third Tuesdays, if no session be held on Monday, after the call of the States and Territories shall have been concluded, and during the last six days of the session.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to say only a word upon this amendment. Under the rule as now amended the Speaker is not at liberty to recognize motions to suspend the rules except on two Mondays in each month. Now, it occurs to me that when there is no session of the House on Monday we should not by that fact be deprived of the benefits of the rule.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FINLEY, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 16, noes 54.

Mr. SCALES. I move to amend by inserting the following at the end of the first clause:

But the Speaker shall not at any time, except during the last six days of a session, entertain a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, or any general appropriation bill.

I do not think it necessary, Mr. Chairman, to discuss this amendment. I believe it explains itself; and I hope it will commend itself to the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I move to amend the amendment of my colleague [Mr. SCALES] by adding thereto the following:

And no bill appropriating money to the amount of $5,000 or more shall pass under a suspension of the rules, except upon the call of the yeas and nays upon the passage of such bill.

Mr. Chairman, it was objected the other day that if an amendment which was offered by me at that time proposed substantially what is now sought to be obtained should pass, the House might not on some occasion have time to get through with its business. I desire to say, sir, that any measure that ought to pass this House ought to be considered, and if we have not time to consider it fairly, then we ought not to be allowed time to pass it. I think one of the greatest evils which has attended our legislation has resulted from the passage of bills involving millions of money, passed through this House under a suspension of the rules, when there was no time to consider, no time to amend, and when the yeas and nays were not allowed to be called. The gentleman from Alabama will have an opportunity, if this amendment passes, of having it known to the country who it is who votes "ay" and who it is who votes "nay" on any bill involving the appropriation of money to the amount of $5,000 or more.

It is not objectionable on the score of economy of time, inasmuch as small bills involving the appropriation for pensions and the like, less than $5,000, may still pass under a suspension of the rules; but wherever the amount exceeds $5,000 cannot, if this amendment is adopted, and in my judgment ought not pass.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that perhaps his object is already attained if he will reflect the Constitution of the United States beyond and above our rules secures to one-fifth of the members present the right to have the yeas and nays called on any question. If this House cannot be trusted with that it cannot be trusted at all. If a bill goes through here without men enough to call the yeas and nays the supposition is it is a matter of great general necessity and propriety. One-fifth can always have the yeas and nays called.

The amendment to the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. SCALES'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TUCKER. I move the following amendment, to come in after clause 3 of the proposition of the gentleman from Maine.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the same right of debate shall be allowed whenever the previous question has been ordered on any proposition on which there has been no debate.

Mr. TUCKER. The object of the amendment is to follow to its logical result the proposition of the gentleman from Maine that where a motion is made to suspend the rules in order to pass any proposition there shall be debate allowed of fifteen minutes to each side for explanation.

So when the previous question is called on any proposition before the House upon which there has been no previous debate, the same amount of time for explanation of a measure should be allowed.

Mr. WARNER. I suggest that the time of each member should not be limited.

Mr. TUCKER. I believe the same rule adopted in reference to the suspension of the rules should be adopted on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is divided between the opponents and advocates of the measure.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If I understand the object of the gentleman it is to reach a case of this sort: where the previous question has been demanded on a proposition and no debate has been had upon it, then there shall be, on the demand of any member, fifteen minutes allowed for and fifteen minutes against.

Mr. HASKELL. I only wish to say a word. I do not wish to antagonize the amendment if it is a wise one; but I suggest that we pass many and many a bill by unanimous consent where nobody cares to have any debate. We put through a dozen or fifteen in an afternoon, and if on every one of these little simple measures like pension bills or bills for increase of pension we allow anybody in the House to get up and exhaust fifteen minutes of time for and fifteen minutes of time against, I say there will be members in this House who will be willing to do it. The proposition which the gentleman contemplates is perfectly harmless might be so in case of half a dozen bills, and yet it would be exceedingly cumbersome when applied to twenty in a single afternoon.

Mr. TUCKER. I will say to my friend from Kansas that nobody need indulge in debate if he does not want to. This provides only there shall be the right on the part of the opponents of a measure to fifteen minutes of explanation, and to its advocates of fifteen minutes of reply.

Mr. HASKELL. The gentleman cannot submit a bill for passage in this House, however simple it may be, that there will not be enough of men in the House who will wish to say a word upon it. If it be a resolution like that of my friend from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER,] of course there will be debate. There will be enough members here who will be sure to take advantage of the opportunity to debate. So under this amendment gentlemen will find that every single bill offered will take thirty minutes of time to pass it.

Mr. TUCKER. That is the reason I think the amendment should be adopted. I believe in free debate, and I do not believe in a practice which has prevailed in this House ever since I have been here and under which I have suffered with other gentlemen. I do not believe in forcing a vote on a measure without the liberty to every man, if he wants to say a word in opposition or advocacy of it, to be heard.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move the following as an additional clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. No motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill shall be entertained unless the bill shall have been referred to a committee, reported therefrom, printed, and distributed to the members at least one legislative day before the motion for suspension is made.

Mr. HAWLEY. Individually, I am in favor of the whole of it, but I am less strenuous as to that part which requires a reference to and report from a committee, though I would not strike it out. But as to the other, I am earnestly in favor of it. I think it wrong and dangerous to permit manuscript bills to come in here without any notice whatever, and to go through under a suspension of the rules without having the bill before us for examination. This amendment requires the shortest possible time—a single day's notice.

Mr. VALENTINE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question. If that amendment had been in force yesterday, how would it have affected the substitute which passed here?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will answer the gentleman; I would just as lief answer it as not. We should have had to wait another day. That would not have killed anybody. But we did not pass that bill under a suspension of the rules; it was simply a substitute for a pending bill.

Mr. FRYE. I would like to have that amendment read again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move to strike out the words "reported therefrom."

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman means to apply that to the last six days of the session as well as to Monday.

Mr. HAWLEY. It makes no exception.

The question recurred on Mr. VALENTINE'S amendment to the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 7.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAPP. I suggest an amendment to the amendment by inserting the word "public" to bill, so that it will not apply to private bills, which cannot be printed until reported from the committee.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 21.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. HAWLEY as amended.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 20.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSE. I offer the following as an independent rule, to come in after the rule which has just been adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a bill, resolution, or proposition of a public character has been referred to a standing or select committee of the House, and the committee shall fail for fifty days to make any report to the House thereon, it shall be in order on any Monday immediately after the expiration of the morning hour to move to discharge a committee from the further consideration of the same, which motion shall then be considered; and if decided in the affirmative, the bill, resolution, or proposition shall be placed on the proper calendar unless the majority of the House shall determine then to consider the same.

Mr. HOUSE. The proposition embodied in the rule I have just proposed is similar to the one offered a few days ago by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. OSCAR TURNER.] I think, Mr. Chairman, under the present rules of the House the committees of this House have a power that they should not have in a representative government. A committee of this House, under the rules as they stand, can defeat the consideration of any measure, although a majority of the House and a majority of the American people may be in favor of that measure. They can defeat it by refusing to report upon it. Why, we heard but the other day from the chairman of the Committee on Commerce that a measure before that committee of great importance to the entire country, a measure which I believe would receive a large majority of the votes of this House—we were informed, I say, by him that he was denied the privilege in that committee of making even an adverse report upon it to the House.

Now, sir, I wish to know if the representatives of the people here intend to perpetuate a rule which prevents them from acting upon the wishes of a majority of the House. Ought any committee of this House to have that power? Ought any committee to be able to deprive the entire members of this House of their right to act upon any proposition? Suppose the people of this country want a measure passed and a majority of their Representatives here are willing to vote upon it: now under such circumstances should a committee of this House have the right or the power to withhold from them that privilege?

I think not, Mr. Chairman. I do not believe that any gentleman here is prepared to surrender his right as a Representative in that way. We all know that measures of vast importance are frequently intrusted to these committees, and that week after week and month after month goes on and no report comes from them, perhaps none during the entire Congress.

Now, I propose that every measure shall be given a fair opportunity before this House, so that the members can express their views upon it at least by their votes. There can be no inconvenience or evil resulting from the adoption of this rule. When a motion is made to discharge a committee from the further consideration of a measure on which they have failed for fifty days to report, if the House votes down the motion, well and good. This only gives them that privilege. But if a majority of the House want to consider the measure, notwithstanding the failure of the committee to report it, they ought to have the power, and no man who represents the people here ought to put himself down as opposed to such a proposition.

Sir, it ought to pass, and I hope it will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE.]

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty days" and inserting "thirty days."

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order, the committee having already rejected a proposition embracing the thirty days.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty." I offer the amendment upon this principle, that that is time enough for the consideration of any subject that may be brought before any committee of this House. During my long service in the Congress of the United States I have seen, in my judgment, more wrong arising from sending measures to a committee and smothering them there than from any other thing connected with legislation. I know at the present Congress, when measures have been sent to a committee, the threat has been made that those measures would never again come out of the committee.

I think, sir, that a majority of the members of this House ought to have the control of any subject of legislation which is brought before the House. They ought not to refer a measure to an inferior number than the members who compose the House and give that inferior number the power to conceal the measure. It is sent to a committee for the purpose of being considered; and why is it necessary that there should be more than thirty days for the consideration by a committee of any subject that may be sent to it?

I hope, therefore, the amendment I have offered will be adopted. If the Committee of the Whole will not agree to that I will vote then for the proposition offered by my friend from Tennessee. I am willing to take a fixed time. I will take forty days. I will take fifty days. If we cannot fix upon fifty I will take sixty days. But let us fix upon a time when a matter sent to a committee shall come out of that committee. Let it not be a place to bury matters. A measure is sent to a committee to be investigated and examined, not suppressed. It surely ought not to be the object and purpose of a committee of any legislative body to regard itself as an instrument for suppressing measures of legislation instead of acting upon them.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) A general provision of this sort, if made, would be impracticable of execution. If the gentleman from Tennessee wants to get any particular description of legislation out from a committee let him include in this proposition revenue measures, for example, or finance measures. But let us not make a general provision that when a committee has had possession for thirty or fifty days of a bill it shall come out of that committee. Take, for instance, the Judiciary Committee. This proposition if adopted might bring every bill out of that committee. I know exactly what the gentleman wants to reach. He wants to reach revenue measures relating to the tariff, and finance measures relating to the currency of the country; and if he would confine his proposition to those two subjects then it would be less objectionable than making it a general scoop to include every description of legislation. I agree, however, in the general principle the gentleman suggests, that measures of legislation should have a hearing in the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not want to open the way to throw this House into confusion, or to do anything that would result in any unwise legislation. My one object is to procure a consideration by the House of wise and meritorious measures.

The bill referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE,] the bill in regard to interstate commerce, is one, in my judgment, of more merit than any which has been submitted to the Forty-sixth Congress. And I believe to-day, if it could be submitted to the popular vote in this country, it would receive a larger majority than any measure which has been brought into this Congress. I am satisfied further, Mr. Chairman, that notwithstanding a majority of the Committee on Commerce has obstructed the will and has seriously injured the interest of the vast majority of the people of this country—I am well satisfied a large majority of the members of this House are in favor of a measure of that nature.

What has been the result? Because that committee has a majority hostile to that measure we are deprived of the opportunity and the people are deprived of the privilege of being heard upon it. What I want to do is to get some sort of rule adopted by which we can put aside the majority of that committee and allow the majority of this House to have something to do with regard to the legislation of the country. That is my object.

Now one word further. We do not propose here to send to the public Calendar all measures that have been introduced and referred to committees. We propose to give ample time to the committees to consider the measures coming before them. But if the committees will not consider those measures after fair and full opportunity we then want the opportunity for a majority of the members of this House to consider them. Gentlemen who oppose this amendment argue, it seems to me, that a majority of a committee are wiser than a majority of this House. I have more faith in the judgment of the majority of this House than I have in the judgment of a majority of any committee composed by it. And for that reason I simply desire to have the way opened by which we can obtain the opinion of this House upon important measures. We do not propose to bring these bills back without having the will of the House expressed. The amendment, as I understand, contemplates that after the expiration of fifty days the question shall be submitted to the House as to whether the bill shall go upon the public Calendar or not. And I would rather trust—I say in conclusion, as I see the hammer in the Chairman's hand about to fall—I would rather trust the collective wisdom of the majority of this House than I would the collective wisdom of any committee of this House.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not oppose the object stated by the friends of this measure at all. It ought to be in the power of this House to take from an unwilling committee a valuable bill. There is no doubt about that. It ought to be in the power of this House to take from a committee a bill that a few men upon that committee may desire to throttle, but which the great majority of this House may desire to pass.

But the amendment which has been proposed will reach infinitely further than the very wise and discreet purpose of the supporters of that amendment. Suppose that you give twenty days' or forty days' time for a committee to consider a bill. A committee cannot perfect any important bill that comes before this House in twenty days. Many of the bills will not be perfected by committees in forty days.

And what then will be the result? Suppose that a bill has been introduced into the House and sent to a committee. Toward the end of a session, not long before the final adjournment, when an uneasy and feverish minority happen to be in this House, perhaps a bare quorum of members present, that minority of the House will insist upon taking that bill out of the hands of the committee, although the committee may be willing to report it as soon as it can prepare it properly for reporting. Yet under this proposed rule that bill may be taken from the committee and dragged before the House in a half-baked condition. I take it that the disadvantages which would arise under the practical operation of such a rule will more than offset any advantage which gentlemen seek to gain by it.

Again, this proposed rule will open the door to a flood of subsidiary questions. Every uneasy man in this House, who feels that his bill is not being considered by a committee, every man who fancies that he has a grievance against a committee, will come before the House and make a motion to discharge that committee. Some of the members of the committee will oppose it and some will favor it. Toward the close of the session you will in that way occupy half of the time of the House upon these propositions to discharge committees.

The tendency of a majority of the amendments offered here this afternoon is to multiply subsidiary propositions, to multiply opportunities for debate, to multiply opportunities for speeches, without any real practical gain of time for the consideration of business. That I think will be the effect of this amendment.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this is the most important amendment offered to the report of the Committee on Rules during the entire time that report has been under discussion, and I do not think it should be lightly or hurriedly disposed of. It is designed to remedy an evil of long existence, and which, it seems, can be reached in no other way. The proposed amendment may, like all other rules of a general character, be open to some objection, and I am willing to concede that it is. The strongest objection which has or, I think, can be offered has just been presented by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL;] but even this can, I think, be easily answered.

Admit it to be true, as he claims, that bills frequently go before committees which cannot be examined and reported upon advisedly within thirty, or even sixty, days; yet, if the committee having any such bill in charge were to state to the House that they had not had sufficient time to report upon it, there can be no question that more would be cheerfully granted; and if any such bill should be placed upon the Calendar under the operation of the proposed amendment, and the committee from which it was taken should signify a desire for further time in which to consider and make a report upon it, a motion to recommit would scarcely fail to take it from the Calendar and send it back to the committee. So there need be no apprehension that any very objectionable bill could be passed into a law over the opposition of a committee that had had it in charge. Only such measures as would commend themselves to the judgment of the House and the popular approval of the country would be at all likely to pass under such circumstances.

To my mind, there are reasons why this amendment should be adopted which very far outweigh any and all objections which have or can be urged against it. Some of them have been very strongly and forcibly presented by my colleague, [Mr. HOUSE.] He has just given us a most suggestive illustration of the evil it is intended to remove, in the statement he has just made, and which was previously known to the House, that on a very recent occasion the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce declared himself unable to report either favorably or adversely the most important measure that has, in my judgment, been offered to the House during the present session; a measure that would undoubtedly pass by a most decided majority, and for the enactment of which the whole country has been clamoring for years. If a measure thus approved by the members of this House and thus demanded by every expression of the popular will which has reached us, can be defeated by a majority of a single committee, and that, too, over the constant and vigorous efforts of an able and fearless chairman to have it acted upon, it can easily be seen what may be the fate of other measures equally meritorious. Everybody here knows that an overwhelming majority of the people of this country desire the passage of the bill to which I refer, and yet in contempt and defiance of the clearly expressed popular will it has been defeated thus far by the action of a single committee and the House deprived of all opportunity to vote or even to be heard in its advocacy.

This is not the only instance in which a like action has been had and the will of the people and that of a majority of their Representatives on this floor been disregarded and set at defiance. The bill to remove the duty upon quinine slumbered in a committee for months, though there was a constant demand for its passage, and it would most likely have been there yet had not the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCKENZIE] had the address to get it before the House and secure its passage by a two-thirds vote, under a suspension of the rules.

During my service in Congress I have seen more than a score of bills urgently demanded, as I thought, by the public interest strangled in committees without giving the House an opportunity to act upon them, so that practically the whole legislation of the country has been placed in the hands of a very few members of this body, and the remainder of them had almost as well have been at home as to be here without the power of acting upon measures which they deemed important to the public interest. Every member of this House who has been here any length of time has learned something of the agencies and appliances which have been and can be brought to bear for the purpose of influencing public legislation. If these agencies and influences are ever of an improper character they can much more easily be brought to bear upon a few than a large number of members. The lobbyist can reach a committee with less difficulty than they can the entire House. So to avoid vicious legislation that may by any possibility be secured by improper agencies, it would be safer to vest the legislative power of the country in as great a number of hands as possible, in order to increase and magnify the obstacles which these agencies would have to encounter.

The tendency of our legislation is growing more and more toward centralism and the concentration of power in the hands of the few to the exclusion of the many, and that feature is as objectionable in the rules governing this House as it is elsewhere. Legislation in a government like ours should represent the popular will, and anything which defeats that object is subversive of the highest legislative aim and duty. I warn gentlemen from two of the great sections of this country, the South and the West, that they are sacrificing the highest interest of their constituents if they defeat this amendment, for they are placing themselves completely in the power of those whose interests are antagonistic to theirs, and the time will soon come when they will be compelled for self-protection to demand the adoption of some such rule as this. A bill was introduced only yesterday by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] to remodel in some measure our tariff schedule, and I desire to inform him that under existing rules and the present organization of this House he will be hoary with age before that bill ever leaves the committee to which it was referred. I think, sir, that the most pernicious legislation of past years has found its way upon the statute-books by the faulty construction of our system of rules as they have heretofore existed, while measures of the highest importance and greatest public interest have been defeated by the same machinery, and I feel confident that the people will soon compel us to change it.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WRIGHT to amend the amendment of Mr. HOUSE by striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty," it was not agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] If I did not believe that an important principle was involved in this amendment I should not detain the committee a single moment. The whole question is, shall this House retain control over the business brought before it, or turn it over to its several committees with plenary power to determine what shall be done with it?

When we refer to the several committees matters that are introduced here, I do not understand that it is for final disposition; it certainly ought not to be. Measures are sent by the House to the committees for consideration, investigation, and report. Committees are to weigh, digest, and formulate, but ought not to have power to finally determine anything—certainly not to say a measure shall not have consideration in the House because a majority of the committee may be against it, while a majority in the House may be for it. I do not want to surrender to committees that power. I do not want to put it out of the power of the House to take up an important measure because a committee has decided not to report it back. That act of a committee ought not to preclude after-consideration in the House, provided a majority of the House, after a sufficient time has been given to the committee for action, decide to bring up the subject for review and final determination in the House. The action of a committee ought not to bar this House from the consideration of any question which a majority desire to consider. An important principle seems to me to be involved here. In making rules for the House, I do not see how we can consistently vote to give to committees the power to decide finally measures which the whole House only ought to decide. I hope, therefore, the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will be adopted. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE.] I want, however, to reply to a remark which the gentleman made in advocating his amendment, and which, in my judgment, is calculated to do great injustice to the Committee on Commerce. It was stated by him as a reason why such a rule as this ought to be adopted, that the Committee on Commerce—perhaps he did not name the committee, but that was undoubtedly his meaning—had the other day refused to allow the chairman of that committee to make an adverse report to the House.

Mr. HOUSE. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Commerce to so state on the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not object to his statement. I desire to say that if it is stated here or elsewhere that the majority of the Committee on Commerce have acted in any improper manner in regard to the bill referred to, or any other, I deny the imputation. I voted myself with the chairman of the committee to report his bill to the House; but when the majority of the committee voted against reporting it the question before the committee was not disposed of and the committee was certainly not prepared to make any report at that time, and no report whatever should have been made at that time upon the subject. In the first place there were several bills upon the same subject before the committee, and when the vote was taken upon one bill and the result was unfavorable it did not dispose of the other bills before the committee. It was but just and right that the committee should take action upon the several bills before any report should be made to the House.

I do not think the chairman of the Committee on Commerce has ever intended to charge any wrong upon the majority of the committee who voted against him at that time. If so, I regret it; for certainly the action of the committee was in no manner improper, and was such that it can be defended here on the floor of this House or elsewhere.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. WARNER. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the purport and object of this amendment, it proposes to enable a majority of this House to discharge any committee from the further consideration of any bill after that bill has been before the committee for fifty days, and to bring the measure before the House for reference to the appropriate calendar, or for immediate passage. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that the mover of this amendment and the gentlemen who favor it are actuated by a sincere desire to facilitate legislation, but I very much apprehend that if the amendment be adopted and the attempt be made to put it into practical execution, gentlemen will discover, when too late, that they have made a very serious mistake.

The chief defect in the proposition lies in its failure to make any distinction as to the character of measures referred to the various committees. There are committees of this House that may be in constant session for five or six days in a week; and to such a committee may be referred a measure so important that it would be utterly impossible to do justice to it and present it to the House in proper and intelligible form within the time limited. Take, for instance, the Committee of Ways and Means, which has been in almost constant session from the 1st of December last, but has been unable to consider one-third of the bills referred to it by the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. In view of the statement of the gentleman, might it not be well to relieve the Committee of Ways and Means by dividing among several committees the work which now falls upon the Committee of Ways and Means alone?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am coming to that. The gentleman makes a very pertinent inquiry. The House refers to the Committee of Ways and Means measures which should go to other committees. One-third of the bills before us are private claims, so that every member of the committee is charged with considering, investigating, and reporting upon private claims, many of them involving important principles, which require a great deal of study and care for their proper disposition.

When these bills are before us we have either to ask the House to discharge us from further consideration of them or to report upon them at once. We have the funding bill, we have the tariff question, we have very many important measures involving great detail, and we have patiently and laboriously to the best of our ability given all our time and all our energies to the consideration and elucidation of those questions. Now for the House to step in and in the midst of our consideration—and the same may be said of the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Commerce or any one of the other leading committees of the House—for the House, I say, to step in in the midst of our deliberation on those bills, when members have given the greatest care and attention for the purpose of understanding them, to take them from them and bring them before the House without discussion, without deliberation, without that proper investigation which all subjects ought to require, to take them, bring them before the House and act on them or send them to the "tomb of the Capulets" where they never can be heard of, is certainly not what this House intends to do. Under these circumstances, therefore, I hope the House will pause before it takes any such step as we propose by the adoption of the amendment moved by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, the country and the House cannot regret this discussion. All the time we spend on this point is well spent, for I concur in the motive which suggested the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, although I do not agree in the amendment itself. I hope this House will be impressed with the idea that to conceal or suppress a public measure simply and purely because a committee is not favorable to it will be regarded by every member of this House and every member of any future House as a crime against the House and the country itself.

But while we may bring the House to that judgment, the question occurs whether we are in a condition to adopt the rule the gentleman suggests, and I think if looked at from a practical stand-point it cannot be done. Why? The fundamental objection to all our legislation is this: The Congress of the United States continues in session for two years, and one is a long session and the other a short session.

The result of that is necessarily in every Congress we begin legislation, but, like Sisyphus of old, when we have almost rolled the stone to the top of the hill the session comes to an end and it goes over to the next session, and, like Sisyphus, we have to begin the work again of rolling the stone up the hill, and so on. Until we can have a term of Congress for three years, to extend over three years, the Senate going out in six years and the House in three, having three long sessions, if it be desirable the Congress of the United States shall legislate, we can then legislate, but never can legislate before.

What have we to do? We have to apply the doctrine which holds in natural history, the doctrine of the survival of the fittest, and the fittest must come to the front and it cannot be helped. Who is to determine? Who had better determine? We are always supposed to be honest and upright men, to have no jobs—it is not a violent supposition although it may fail in particular cases—and that when these things go into committee they are considered, taken up, those of the greatest public importance first, and those of the least left to be taken up afterward. What is the result? Take the Judiciary Committee, of which I was a member in the last House. I can give you one public measure which cannot be considered by that committee in less than six months' time. There is before that committee now the question of the Geneva award, and I say they cannot in less than six months give it the consideration it ought to have. I do not say that is the most important bill before that committee, but suppose it was the most important. If that committee was considering that for fifty days, what is the result? When brought before the House it does not go to the head of the Calendar. The fifty days having expired, it comes into the House. In the mean time, unimportant measures, more for individual interest than for their constituents at large, have been brought into the House and put on the Calendar, and all that business precedes it and has first to be disposed of.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I want to ask my friend from Ohio whether he does not believe if the Committee on the Judiciary, for instance, were to come into the House after a bill had been considered, brought before the House and put on the Calendar, and ask to have that bill recommitted, this House would not in every instance grant the request of that committee. If the bill were of any importance could it pass the House over the opposition of the committee which had been considering it?

Mr. McMAHON. How is the Judiciary Committee to get the floor to move that a certain bill on the Calendar shall be recommitted?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The Committee on the Judiciary has the privilege to report at any time.

Mr. McMAHON. Not at all; I beg your pardon. Oh, no; you must consider in regard to these rules which have been changed in the House of Representatives, have been adopted because this is a great and cumbersome body. You must adopt that rule which enables you to put before the country that which the committees of the House think most important; and yet I do not want my friend from Tennessee to understand for one moment I consider a committee of this House should have the power, at any time, simply because it does not favor a bill to suppress it. I think that is a crime against the House of Representatives. I am in favor of fair and due consideration, but I do not wish to see bills come before the House unless they have been considered by a committee and favorably reported.

Mr. HOUSE. In the eighth line of the amendment after the word "considered" I move to insert "without debate;" and I wish simply to say a word in addition to what I have already said on this subject. I have heard no objection urged against this measure by any gentleman who has spoken upon the question. I have heard nothing excepting what I may term the fancies of gentlemen.

In reply to the gentleman from Ohio and the objection which he has made to it, when he says that the Geneva award bill would occupy the committee more than fifty days for its consideration, I would simply say that is a question which no gentleman would be likely to make the motion to take from the committee—the motion that is required to be made by the amendment which I have suggested. And if any gentleman was to make the motion to discharge the committee from the consideration of such a measure as that, how many votes would he get here?

A MEMBER. Not a majority.

Mr. HOUSE. He could not get anybody.

Mr. ATKINS. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOUSE. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask my colleague if he does not think the object which he has in view would be defeated by not applying his amendment exclusively to bills of a public character? It would be necessary to get rid of a great many unimportant bills which might be upon the Calendar before the important bills could be reached, and if my colleague would confine his rule to the great important questions that he refers to, for instance revenue matters, finance matters, and internal improvement matters, then perhaps he could effect the reform which he seeks, but by applying it to all public matters indiscriminately I think he defeats his object.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, unlike the gentleman from Ohio who has just addressed the committee, I do deprecate this discussion. I think I am in sympathy with a fair majority of this House when I enter a protest against consuming this whole day in passing over less than six lines of this report. I think the majority of this House is in full sympathy and accord with me when I enter a protest against consuming two months in the consideration of this report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to say to the gentleman that this is the first minute of time that I have occupied during this discussion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not apply my criticism to the gentleman from Tennessee at all; but I merely desire to say that unless we can have unanimous consent for immediate action upon the pending rule I shall move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate to one minute.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. HOUSE.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 75.

Mr. HOUSE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOUSE and Mr. BROWNE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 94. So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk proceeded to read Rule XXIX.

Mr. THOMAS TURNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment, which is in substance the same as that which was offered by the gentleman from Tennessee which has just been disagreed to, with the exception that it refers exclusively to measures affecting commerce, revenue, finances, and internal improvements.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already passed from the consideration of the rule to which the gentleman now refers.

Mr. THOMAS TURNER. I attempted to get the floor for the purpose of offering this amendment, but the Clerk commenced to read the next rule. I tried to get the eye of the Chair for the purpose of offering this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, if the gentleman states that he rose for that purpose the Chair will now recognize him. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a bill or proposition of a public nature affecting commerce, revenue, finance, or internal improvements has been referred to a standing committee of the House, and such committee shall fail for fifty days to make any report to the House thereon, it shall be in order on any Monday immediately after the expiration of the morning hour, to move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the same; which motion shall then be considered without debate, and, if decided in the affirmative, the bill or resolution shall be placed on the proper calendar, unless a majority of the House shall then determine to consider the same.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXIX.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I offer the following as an amendment to the rule which has just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And such reports, instead of referring by number to the amendments or propositions agreed to in conference, shall be so written out as to inform the House from the reading of the report what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

So that, if adopted, the rule will read as follows:

"The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition; and such reports, instead of referring by number to the amendments or propositions agreed to in conference, shall be so written out as to inform the House from the reading of the report what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin, speaking for myself, and I doubt not the Committee on Rules, that there is no objection to the proposed amendment except in this: it must of necessity be effected by incorporation into the joint rules of the two Houses. This House has no power by any action which it may propose to bind the conferees on the part of the Senate; so that, to accomplish the purpose which the gentleman's amendment seeks to reach, there must be a provision made in the joint rules between the two Houses that will bind the conferees of both. Of course the same conference report made to this House must be made to the Senate, and we cannot bind the Senate through its conferees to anything unless we do it by a general rule. I am in favor of the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) There is force in what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] states, that this ought to be provided for by a joint rule. But joint rules are not likely to be agreed upon. For myself I maintain, and always have maintained, they are still in force until the same power which made the joint rules should vacate them. But the Senate chooses not to subscribe to that view. This proposition in itself has great merit. There ought to be no conference report brought into this House for its consideration unless the House by the reading of it is thoroughly informed as to its effect upon the bill proposed to be passed. I myself would prefer to have the proposition go into these rules, even although it only went there with the force of a recommendation to our conferees on the part of the House, so that this provision shall be in the future binding, at least in a suggestive way, upon our conferees.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I am obliged to the honorable Speaker for making the very suggestion which I had risen a moment ago to make, namely, that this is a preliminary step, in which I have no doubt the House will be followed in its action by the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin allow me to suggest an amendment which has been suggested to me by the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? A conference report must be a report to the two Houses, and must be identical in word and line and syllable. But if the gentleman by his amendment will simply require that the members of the conference on the part of the House shall append that statement to their conference report, I will support it.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I very gladly accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the modification of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is that the amendment be altered so as simply to require the House members of a committee of conference to append to their conference report a statement of the points covered by the numbers of the amendments which the conference report embraces.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I hope it will not be said, "append to their report," but that the statement will be included in the report to the House. Then the House conferees, in obedience to the House rule, would not consent to a report until the information the rule requires is embodied in the regular conference report, the duplicates respectively for the House and for the Senate being the same.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We cannot coerce the Senate by a rule of this House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am speaking of what would be the practical working of such a rule.

Mr. BLACKBURN. A conference report means the report of the conference committee of the two Houses. The reports to the two Houses must be duplicates, the one of the other. There cannot be a syllable in the conference report made to this House that is not embraced in the report made to the Senate. We cannot compel the Senate to do what is here suggested; but I pledge myself I will use my best endeavor as a member of the Committee on Rules and of the Joint Committee on Rules to have this incorporated into a joint rule to govern the two Houses. While assenting to the idea of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I am in favor of so modifying his amendment as to require the House members of the committee of conference to furnish with each conference report an explanation, by a statement in detail of the points in controversy covered by such report.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it well we should understand this question. I am not entirely satisfied with the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky. I would be afraid that the House members of the committee of conference would undertake to report something in addition to the conference report, understanding they were required to do this by the new rule. That would be a very great anomaly.

The terms of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, as I understood by the reading, do not require the committee of conference to report verbatim the amendments to which their report refers, but requires them merely to state the substance, the effect, of what is proposed to be done by and through the conference report. Now, it is suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky that by adopting such a rule we would appear to be compelling or coercing the conferees on the part of the Senate. To a certain extent that is true. But I would like to inquire how it happens this very vicious system has grown up at the conference meetings between the two Houses; how the system has grown up of drawing conference reports in the way in which we have been in the habit of having them presented in the past.

I remember that we have had some of the most important things done here in the last two years by conference reports. The whole matter of post-office legislation was put into a report here on one occasion and passed in the Forty-fifth Congress, leaving out a great many things that had been passed upon and adopted in this House in committee. And that was passed through the House without half a dozen members outside of the committee of conference knowing what was in the report at all. There were merely certain numbers referred to.

Now I want to state, as there seems to be a great deal of unanimity about this, there can be no danger of adopting an amendment which would at least operate as a suggestion to the Senate. And they have no more right to say to us, "We shall have our conference reports drawn up merely by members as to the matters to be amended," than we have to insist that the substance of the report shall be stated.

Mr. HAYES. In view of what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has said, that the two reports to the two Houses must be identical, I would ask the gentleman from Ohio, would this rule, if adopted, have any binding force on the joint committee of conference?

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the reports must be identical, and that is the reason why I do not want to modify this rule so as to require the House members of the committee to state something in addition to the report.

Mr. HAYES. The House members of the committee of conference could not live up to this rule in case it should be adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the gentleman that I do not see anything inexplicable or difficult of comprehension in the suggestion

I have made. Does not the gentleman know as well as he may know anything, that there is under general parliamentary law no power given to a committee of conference to inject anything into a conference report that is not already in dispute between the two Houses?

Mr. KEIFER. Let me answer the question by asking the gentleman if he does not know that in a conference report made to a former Congress a whole body of legislation, amounting to a long bill, amounting to pages of print, as it appeared afterward, in reference to postal matters, was introduced into a conference report, because there was a little dispute about some post-office matter? Does not the gentleman know that the whole matter of postage on different classes of mail matter was reorganized in a conference report, although up to that time we had not heard anything of it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not know to what the gentleman refers, unless it be the Brazilian mail feature; if so, that was lost.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, that was lost; it was adopted in the Senate and lost in the conference; but that is not what I refer to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have only this to say; the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] and myself understand each other. I am in favor of requiring the House members of every conference committee to accompany every conference report with an explanatory statement, showing exactly what points are covered by that report. I am in favor of putting that in the rules of the House, if the gentleman will consent to so modify his amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Allow me to make a single suggestion. My amendment goes simply to the matter of form rather than to that of substance. It requires that the conference committee shall use apt and proper words instead of numbers in their report. Now, can there be any doubt in the world that if we adopt a rule requiring the members of our committee of conference to adopt a certain form of report, the members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate will accept it? I am willing to accept any amendment which the gentleman may propose, if it will accomplish the purpose I have in view.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Then accept his modification.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I will accept it.

Mr. ATKINS. Allow me one question?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman design by his amendment that this statement or explanation of the various items in the conference report shall constitute a part of the report itself, or that it shall be a statement to simply accompany the report?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Simply a statement, independent of the report.

Mr. ATKINS. If it is to be a simple statement to accompany the conference report, I have no objection to it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask that the amendment be read.

Mr. FRYE. Has the amendment been modified?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. My design is to accept the modification suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] if he will put it in form.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will do so in one moment.

Mr. BRIGGS. A single word. It seems to me that this proposition, which commends itself to nearly every member of this House, was in a proper shape when submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] Let us see what will be the practical operation of it. A conference committee is appointed; that committee agrees upon matters of substance, and they also must agree upon matters of form. If the members of the House on that committee insist upon having the substance of their report fully explained in the report before they will assent to it, then you will have accomplished all that the gentleman desires. And that, I think, is reached by his original amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will furnish my modification to the Clerk in one moment. [After a pause.] I now send up to the Clerk the modification which I suggest.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the modification proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.]

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, which was to add to Rule XXIX the following:

And such reports, instead of referring by number to the amendments or propositions agreed to in conference, shall be so written out as to inform the House from the reading of the report what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

The amendment of Mr. BLACKBURN was to substitute for the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, the following:

And there shall accompany every such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I will accept that in lieu of my amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment as modified, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSE. I offer as a separate rule that which I send up to the Clerk's desk. I do not want to debate it, and will simply state that it is identical with the proposition which I offered a few moments ago, except that I have modified it so as to relate alone to bills for raising revenue and reducing taxation.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a bill, resolution, or proposition relating to the raising of revenue or the reduction of taxation shall be referred to a standing or select committee of the House, and the committee shall fail for fifty days to make any report thereon, it shall be in order on any Monday, immediately after the expiration of the morning hour, to move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the same, which motion shall then be considered without debate, and if decided in the affirmative the bill, resolution, or proposition shall be placed on the appropriate calendar, unless a majority of the House shall determine then to consider the same.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOUSE, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 51, noes 65.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXX.
SECRET SESSION.

Whenever confidential communications are received from the President of the United States, or whenever the Speaker or any member shall inform the House that he has communications which he believes ought to be kept secret for the present, the House shall be cleared of all persons except the members and officers thereof, and so continue during the reading of such communications, the debates and proceedings thereon, unless otherwise ordered by the House.

RULE XXXI.
READING OF PAPERS.

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Mr. BOWMAN. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the rule last read the following:

Reports which have been printed shall not be read unless such reading shall be called for by vote of the House.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I do not know whether the committee object to this amendment. I am sure I shall be pardoned if by taking a few minutes now I can save days or hours hereafter. It is within my limited observation that if there is any one thing which more than another (not even excepting "filibustering") uselessly consumes the time of this House, it is the reading of reports. We frequently see presented here the spectacle of a clerk going on for half an hour, three-quarters of an hour, or longer, reading voluminous reports while members are immersed in their newspapers or correspondence. No one ever dreams of listening to the reading of a report. A member, if he wants to be informed upon a subject, prefers to take in the substance of the report through his eyes rather than his ears; and he sends a page for the document.

In some of the State Legislatures we never think of having a report read; such a thing is unknown. The reading is utterly useless, or, if necessary in any case, my amendment proposes that it shall be subject to the control of a vote of the House.

Under our present practice when a proposition is made to dispense with the reading of a report a member jumps up and says, "I call for the reading of the report;" then all business must stop and nothing be done until the reading is concluded, not because the House wants to hear the reading, but because one single member demands it and no one cares to bring the question to a vote.

Mr. Chairman, we have been in session three months, and when a member of this House is asked, "What have you done?" he is obliged to pause and cannot give any answer. He cannot tell what business has been accomplished. It does seem to me—and I appeal to the Committee on Rules whether it is not true—that the reading of reports consumes uselessly more time in this House than any other thing.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I disagree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOWMAN] in his view that the reading of reports is of no particular use to the House. It seems to me the best possible way of getting information. While in many cases the great body of the House may not listen to reports, it is within my experience that there are always some members who do listen carefully, and thus are enabled in many instances to decide whether a bill should be passed or not.

Mr. BOWMAN. Let me ask why it is not safe to leave the House to say by vote whether it wants to hear reports or not?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Because every member who is called upon to vote on a measure recommended by a committee ought to have the privilege of knowing the reasons which influenced the committee in reaching the result they recommend.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Committee on Rules have sought to reserve the right of every member in his individual capacity to demand the reading of any paper upon which he is called upon to give a vote. Apart from this the rules leave the question of the reading of papers to be determined by a vote of the House without debate. Whenever objection is made to the reading of a paper other than one on which a vote is to be taken, the House can determine by a vote of the majority and without debate whether the paper shall be read. I think that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts would be, to say the least, mere surplusage.

The amendment of Mr. BOWMAN was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXII.
DRAWING OF SEATS.

1. The Clerk shall, at the commencement of each Congress, place in a box the name of each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives, written upon a separate slip of paper, and, at an hour to be fixed by the House, shall proceed in its presence to draw from said box, one at a time, the said slips of paper, and as each is drawn shall announce the name of the Member or Delegate thereon, who shall thereupon choose his seat for the present Congress.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By the direction of the Committee on Rules I move to amend by striking out before the last word of this paragraph the words "the present" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "that;" so as to read: "for that Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend by inserting after the word "box," in line 2, clause 1 of Rule XXXII, the following:

Sufficiently large to admit of mixing the names; and after the names shall have been thoroughly mixed, the names of the members shall be put into the box separately, in alphabetical order, and.

I will explain the object of this amendment. If the box used for this purpose is small, as it generally is, and if the names be put in by States, I do not see how they can ever be mixed so as to comply with the spirit of the rule. My amendment proposes that the names be put in alphabetically instead of by States.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman propose that names beginning with A, B, and C, shall be in the bottom of the box?

Mr. REAGAN. It has been suggested to me to modify my amendment by inserting after the word "members" the word "delegates." I make that modification.

Mr. STEELE. I move to substitute for the first clause of the thirty-second rule what I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition of the gentleman will be read for information; but the vote must first be taken on the proposed amendment to the text.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out clause 1 of Rule XXXII, and insert:

At the commencement of each Congress the Clerk shall place in a box prepared for that purpose a number of small balls of marble or other material equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be separately numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for the purpose the Clerk shall, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box, and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on the numbered alphabetical list shall conform to the number of the ball shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I have hitherto forbore engaging in the discussion of the rules to be adopted for the government of the House. My main reason for that perhaps, outside of my modesty, was that it was a subject totally incomprehensible to me, and I have never had any great ambition to figure in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD upon matters I did not understand. [Laughter.] I do not say anybody else has not done the same. Now, it will be recollected by every member of this House that at the opening of the Forty-sixth Congress, when the names of members were called out to enable them to choose their seats, in one instance the names of five members from the same State were called consecutively, showing conclusively there could not have been a proper intermingling of the slips of paper placed in the box. Indeed, it is thoroughly impracticable to do it. And the only means by which a fair drawing of seats can take place is, according to my opinion, by the operation I have suggested. It is quite as simple, and secures absolute fairness in the selection of seats.

Mr. REAGAN. By consent of the House I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question then recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina as a substitute for the first clause of the rule as reported.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I give notice that in the House I shall demand the yeas and nays on that amendment moved by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STEELE.]

The Clerk read as follows:

2. Before said drawing shall commence, each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished, and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during the same Congress.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am instructed by the committee to move a verbal amendment:

In the last line strike out the words "the same" and insert "that;" so it will read: "during that Congress."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. VALENTINE. There seems a considerable portion of the latter part of the clause just read, since the adoption of the substitute of the gentleman from North Carolina, is wholly unnecessary. I allude to that part about seats becoming vacant where the party leaves them.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no!

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXIII.
HALL OF THE HOUSE.

The Hall of the House shall be used only for the legislative business of the House, and for the caucus meetings of its members, except upon occasions where the House by resolution agree to take part in any ceremonies to be observed therein; and the Speaker shall not entertain a motion for the suspension of this rule.

Mr. CASWELL. I move to insert after the word "therein," in the fourth line, the following:

And the corridors and lobbies of the Capitol, so far as the House has control of the same, shall not be occupied by lunch-tables or parties offering for sale articles of merchandise other than newspapers and other printed matter usually kept for sale at news-stands.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CASWELL. Very well, let there be a vote.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 60.
Mr. CASWELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCGOWAN and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, in this obscure corner of the Hall we do not hear anything that takes place at the Clerk's table, and I ask that the amendment be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made every effort to keep order in the Hall, but without effect.

The amendment was again read.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXIV.
OF ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The persons hereinafter named, and none other, shall be admitted to the Hall of the House or rooms leading thereto, namely: The President of the United States and his private secretary, judges of the Supreme Court, members of Congress and members-elect, the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, heads of Departments, foreign ministers, governors of States, the Architect of the Capitol, such persons as have, by name, received the thanks of Congress, ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim pending before Congress, and clerks of committees, when business from their committee is under consideration; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am not directed by the committee, but I offer the following amendment, which I think will meet the approval of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 3 the following words, "of the United States and his private secretary," and insert in lieu thereof "and Vice-President of the United States and their private secretaries."

Mr. BLACKBURN. That admits to the floor of the House the Vice-President of the United States and his private secretary, which is simply a return for the courtesy extended to the private secretary of the presiding officer of this House.

Mr. BREWER. I move a substitute for that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope my amendment will not be encumbered, but will be voted on by itself. There are a number to come in, I see.

Mr. BREWER. I move my substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will be read, but will not be voted on until the text has been perfected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "Secretary," in line 3, the words "ex-Presidents and Vice-Presidents, Cabinet officers, Senators." Also insert after the word "Congress," in line 7, these words, "also ex-Vice-Presidents, ex-Senators."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact, of which he does not seem to be aware, that there is not an ex-member of this House to-day who is allowed to go upon the floor of the Senate Chamber. I have already taken occasion to call the attention of the gentlemen of the Committee on Rules to that fact as a want of reciprocity on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BREWER. I will strike out the word "ex-Senators."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think it would be premature and hasty.

Mr. FRYE. Senators are covered by members of Congress, for Senators are members of Congress.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Vice-President is not a member of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WRIGHT. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that an ex-President of the United States is excluded from the floor. While the President is in office he may come upon the floor, but after his term of office expires he is excluded by this rule.

Mr. BREWER. I offered my amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, and not as a substitute for the whole section.

Now, I desire to make a suggestion. The proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky is entirely correct. There is no doubt about that. But it seems to me we should not only allow the Vice-President and President but ex-Presidents as well the privileges of the floor. The rule proposed by the committee does not allow that, or does not even allow Cabinet officers or Senators, except under the construction suggested by the gentleman from Maine. If that construction is correct, and it is understood that the term "ex-members of Congress" also includes ex-Senators, I do not wish to change that portion of it. But I think we ought to make it more explicit by including Cabinet officers and Senators.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. Does the proposed amendment exclude members of the press from the room in rear of the Speaker's seat?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir; that is not contemplated in the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to retain the word "Senators?"

Mr. BREWER. No; I am willing to strike that word out.

Mr. FRYE. Cabinet officers are necessarily heads of Departments. The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. BREWER.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 73.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question next recurred on the amendment of Mr. BLACKBURN. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TALBOTT. I propose to strike out all after the word "consideration" in the ninth line, and insert the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And such persons as may be admitted by a resolution of the House upon the request of a member.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the rule the following:

Or to present from the Chair the request of any member for a suspension of the rules.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is not now covered fully. The rule as it stands says "it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule." Now, that rule is avoided at the present time by having the request presented by the Speaker from the chair, and I want the rule to absolutely shut off the possibility of anybody getting upon the floor, excepting those admitted in express terms.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Say the Speaker shall not entertain a question by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is covered by the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let it be read.

The proposed amendment was again read by the Clerk.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Strike out "suspension of the rule" and insert "unanimous consent."

Mr. DUNNELL. I accept the amendment.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEDDES. I present the following amendment to Rule XXXIV to be inserted in the sixth line after the word "Capitol."

The Clerk read as follows:

The Librarian of Congress and his assistants in charge of the law library.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I ask for a division of that question so that we can vote between the Librarian and his assistants.

The question was taken upon the first branch of the question, namely, "the Librarian of Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the second branch of the amendment, namely, "and his assistants in charge of the law library."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I offer an amendment to come in after the word "Departments," in line 5. It is simply for this purpose: The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Commissioner of Patents, the Commissioner of Pensions or any other bureau are absolutely needed here on the floor on the passage of appropriation bills.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I want to say but a word on this question. I think the Committee on Rules have gone far enough in this matter of admissions to the floor.

Mr. MCGOWAN. I rise to a point of order. No motion is before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, after the word Departments, insert the words "and of bureaus."

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I hope that will not prevail. I think we have gone far enough. We have witnessed in our past experience the efforts of bureau officers to come in here and control Congress. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee. It has been suggested to me that the Chief Clerk and the disbursing clerk of the House ought to be admitted. I leave the matter to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Personally, I have no objection to such an amendment, but I have no authority to accept it.

Mr. FRYE. I will offer that amendment after the pending one is disposed of.

The question being taken on Mr. BAKER's amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I now offer the following amendment:

After the words "law library" insert "Chief Clerk and disbursing clerk of the House."

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 26, noes 62.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "claim," in line 8, insert "or directly in any bill."

So that it will read:

Ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim or directly in any bill pending before Congress.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I offer the following amendment.

After the word "elect," in the fourth line, insert the following:

Contestants in election cases during the pendency of their cases in the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.
The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk resumed the reading of the report and read as follows:

RULE XXXV.

OF ADMISSION TO THE GALLERIES.

The Speaker shall set aside a portion of the west gallery for the use of the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, justices of the Supreme Court, foreign ministers and suites, and the members of their respective families, and shall also set aside a portion of the same gallery for the accommodation of persons to be admitted on the card of members. The southerly half of the east gallery shall be assigned exclusively for the use of the families of members of Congress, in which the Speaker shall control one bench, and on request of a member the Speaker shall issue a card of admission to his family, which shall include their visitors, and no other person shall be admitted to this section.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to Rule XXXV the following:

And on the request of any member the Speaker may issue a card of admission to the family of said member to the new room adjoining the Hall of the House of Representatives and in the rear of the Speaker's seat.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I desire to say that when the families of members come here and take their seats in the galleries they frequently find the atmosphere very oppressive; and it would cause no inconvenience to allow their admission to this large and magnificent hall behind the Speaker's seat. I have offered the amendment at the request of the wives of many members; and I can see no impropriety in their having the privilege of going into the large room adjoining the Hall.

Mr. COX. I hope that will be adopted.

The question being put on Mr. OSCAR TURNER's amendment, there were—ayes 48, noes 78.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that that part of the rule which relates to the giving of cards for the admission of the families of members be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And on request of a member the Speaker shall issue a card of admission to his family, which shall include their visitors, and no other person shall be admitted to this section.

Mr. CONGER. Is it intended that for each day such a card shall be required?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not.

Mr. CONGER. It would be a very great inconvenience if we had to go every day and get such a card.

Mr. McMAHON. Get a season ticket.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It will last for a Congress.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out in line 2 the words "or rooms leading thereto."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order that we have passed that rule.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman's amendment is to Rule XXXIV, and we have been considering Rule XXXV.

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdraw the amendment. [Laughter.]

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report, and read as follows:

RULE XXXVI.

OFFICIAL AND OTHER REPORTERS.

1. The appointment and removal, for cause, of the official reporters of the House, including stenographers of committees, and the manner of the execution of their duties, shall be vested in the Speaker.

2. Stenographers and reporters, other than the official reporters of the House, wishing to take down the debates and proceedings, may be admitted by the Speaker to the reporters' gallery over the Speaker's chair, under such regulations as he may, from time to time, prescribe; and he may assign two seats on the floor to Associated Press reporters, and regulate the occupation of the same.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I ask the chairman of the committee what is the necessity of the word "down," in second clause of Rule XXXVI. Would it not be sufficient to say "wishing to take the debates and proceedings." Why must they be taken "down?"

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not suppose any member is to be "taken down." [Laughter.]

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report and read as follows:

RULE XXXVII.

PAY OF WITNESSES.

The rule for paying witnesses summoned to appear before the House, or either of its committees, shall be as follows: For each day a witness shall attend, the sum of $3; for each mile he shall travel in coming to or going from the place of examination, the sum of five cents each way; but nothing shall be paid for traveling when the witness has been summoned at the place of trial.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the following amendment:

In the third line of Rule XXXVII strike out "three" and insert "two," so that it will read:

"For each day a witness shall attend, the sum of $2."

This House after long debate and deliberate discussion declared that witnesses before the United States courts should be paid $2 a day. In view of that fact, witnesses ought not to be paid $3 a day here.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

RULE XXXVIII.

PAPERS.

The clerks of the several committees of the House shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, deliver to the Clerk of the House all bills, joint resolutions, petitions, and other papers referred to the committee, together with all evidence or testimony taken by such committee, under the order of the House, during the said Congress.

Mr. FRYE. I desire the attention of the gentleman in charge of this report. I am informed that there are quite a number of committees whose clerks leave before the Congress ends, and that there are special committees whose clerks are discharged long before the close of Congress. In regard to them this rule would really be impracticable, and I suggest that it be amended so as to read as follows:

The Clerk of the House shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, take into his keeping all bills, joint resolutions, petitions, and other papers referred to committees, together with all testimony taken by committees under the order of the House.

It seems to me that that is better than the rule which has been reported from the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am myself cognizant of the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] and I think some provision should be made to remedy it.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Would it not be better to add that as an independent clause?

Mr. FRYE. I prefer it as a substitute for Rule XXXVIII.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then you should add to it that the Clerk of the House shall be charged with the duty of collecting such papers.

Mr. McMAHON. What would you do with those clerks who are annual clerks?

Mr. CLAFLIN. If the gentleman would add his amendment to the proposed rule I think he would accomplish his object.

Mr. FRYE. If gentlemen prefer it I have no objection to making it clause 2 of this rule.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I think it had better be added as an independent clause, rather than to interfere with the rule as reported.

Mr. FRYE. I will move it, then, as an additional clause.

The amendment of Mr. FRYE was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

RULE XXXIX.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

No memorial or other paper presented to the House shall be withdrawn from its files without its leave, and if so withdrawn therefrom certified copies thereof shall be left in the office of the Clerk; but when an act may pass for the settlement of a claim the Clerk is authorized to transmit to the officer charged with the settlement thereof the papers on file in his office relating to such claim, or may loan temporarily to the officer or bureau of the Executive Departments any papers on file in his office relating to any matter pending before such officer or bureau, taking proper receipt therefor.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the first part of the rule which has just been read. It reads:

No memorial or other paper presented to the House shall be withdrawn from its files without its leave, and if so withdrawn therefrom—

That is, withdrawn without its leave.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Strike out the word "so" before "withdrawn."

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well; that will do.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report of the Committee on Rules, as follows:

RULE XL.

BALLOT.

In all other cases of ballot than for committees, a majority of the votes given shall be necessary to an election, and where there shall not be such a majority on the first ballot, the ballots shall be repeated until a majority be obtained; and in all ballots blanks shall be rejected and not taken into the count in enumeration of votes or reported by the tellers.

RULE XLI.

MESSAGES.

Messages received from the Senate and the President of the United States, giving notice of bills passed or approved, shall be entered in the Journal and published in the RECORD of that day's proceedings.

RULE XLII.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Estimates of appropriations, and all other communications from the Executive Departments, intended for the consideration of any committees of the House, shall be addressed to the Speaker and by him submitted to the House for reference.

RULE XLIII.

No person shall be an officer of the House, or continue in its employment, who shall be an agent for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, or be interested in such claim otherwise than as an original claimant; and it shall be the duty of the Committee of Accounts to inquire into and report to the House any violation of this rule.

RULE XLIV.

JEFFERSON'S MANUAL.

The rules of parliamentary practice comprised in Jefferson's Manual shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable, and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the House, and joint rules of the Senate and House of Representatives.

RULE XLV.

These rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the present and succeeding Congresses unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend Rule XLV by adding that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the adoption of these rules shall not be construed to interfere with special orders of this House heretofore made on pending bills.

Mr. COX. I would like to have that explained.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That ought to be the action of the House; it is hardly a matter to be incorporated in the rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that these rules are yet to be adopted by the House. When we go out of the Committee of the Whole and come into the House, that will be the time for the gentleman to move the proviso he now offers.

Mr. REAGAN. I would then labor under this difficulty: as soon as this is reported from the Committee of the Whole the previous question will be ordered upon it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will give the gentleman an opportunity to offer his amendment if it is deemed necessary.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It should be a resolution of the House, not a provision of a rule.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well, then; I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to amend Rule XLV by adding to it the following:

Provided, That Rule 85 (of the present rules) shall continue in force during the present Congress.

The new rules discontinue absolutely one of the committees of this House. Of course it is not proposed or intended to strike down that committee during the present Congress, but to leave it as appointed in full force and effect.

Mr. KEIFER. That had better be done by a resolution of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would as soon do it in that way as to have it incorporated in these rules; and I will therefore ask the Clerk to hold it, and I will not offer it at present.

Mr. GILLETTE. I offer as a substitute for Rule XLV that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

These rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the present Congress, and of succeeding Congresses only when adopted by them. And no Speaker shall be authorized to construct the committees of any future Congress without direct authority by vote of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Chairman, we have some of us used our best efforts to amend these rules so as to protect the country at large from discriminations against individual members, from actual usurpation by a few of the powers and privileges of this whole House. Thus far those efforts have failed. While most of the rules presented are well enough and do not militate against the rights of individual members, a few are so bad, so antagonistic to every principle of justice and freedom that language too severe cannot be used in their condemnation. The most dangerous are those by which this House farms out to one member the right to appoint all the committees of this body, and then accords to those committees power to suppress any and all the bills referred to them.

Only yesterday it was charged that one member of the Committee on Commerce accused the Speaker of having packed the committee to kill a certain bill. I mention this only to show how naturally suspicions attach to the Speaker whenever measures considered important are suppressed by a committee, and not to reflect upon our Speaker.

During the consideration of these rules there have been ten amendments introduced to enable a majority of this House to demand a bill not reported by a committee after abundant time had passed for its consideration, but the leading members of both old parties have joined hands to protect the committees in any efforts to stifle the bills referred to them although desired by this House for their action.

These rules make an autocracy of this government, inasmuch as they give to the Speaker, who controls the floor of this House, the practical control of his appointees, the various committees, and makes it impossible to get a solitary measure before the House unless by the favor of these committees. It makes no difference how worthy the Speaker may be. There is no man in the nation or in any nation to whom such powers over legislation should be granted. The United States Senate, a less republican body than this is supposed to be, is unwilling to trust even the Vice-President of the nation with such powers, but appoints its own committees and makes them directly accountable to the Senate.

The rules first adopted by this House were explicit, and prepared with the utmost care to protect the rights of the members, and provided that "committees consisting of more than three members shall be balloted for by the House." The important committees consisted of more than three members; for example, the one on elections had seven members.

As great an abomination as I believe these rules to be, as thoroughly anti-republican and anti-democratic as they are, practically subverting the representative feature of this Government, we might endure the injustice for this Congress, if compelled to, in the hope that our successors would indignantly throw off the yoke, but we are even asked to stretch this pall over them. We are asked, not only to yield our own rights, but also those of succeeding Congresses.

What right has one Congress to impose its laws upon a succeeding Congress? No more, in my judgment, than it has to impose them upon the English Parliament. It may be asked, then, what harm in passing a rule which can carry with it no authority. Every harm; for this implied authority will in the future, as in the past, be seized as a pretext on the part of the Speaker to appoint all his committees the moment he is elected, if indeed it is not done before he is elected, and these appointments used as a legal tender with which to purchase his election.

This Congress has never by vote authorized directly or indirectly the Speaker to appoint a single standing committee. We have never even indorsed the appointments that have been made, and yet we have been divided out under authority of some preceding Congress. We have never even adopted one of the hundred and sixty-six rules that have been used like bits and bridles upon us from the hour we first met. If we must submit during this Congress let us do it with the hope that our successors may be more jealous of their rights and give to this House a republican government.

I believe these rules practically surrender the legislation of this country into the hands of one man, and give him more power than a dozen Presidents.

When Kossuth fled to this country for protection from Austrian despotism, he was welcomed to the Capitol by the greatest statesmen of the time. In reply to Daniel Webster and others, while comparing the Old World with the New, he said:

The Old is awful with unrestricted power; yours is glorious with having restricted it. At the view of the Old, nations tremble; at the view of yours, humanity hopes.

I repeat, the inevitable effect of these rules is to give the Speaker of this House almost unrestricted power. He may and will fill the few committees that control legislation with men who reflect his own views and wishes, and govern their action with undisputed sway, almost totally subverting the object of the annual gathering here of the so-called Representatives of the people.

When this Republic goes down, if go down it must, it will not be through the "man on horseback" or any President, but through the man on the wool-sack in this House, under these despotic rules, who can prevent the slightest interference from individual members; who can, if he will, make and unmake laws like an emperor, hold back or give the sinews of war and the salaries of peace.

The amendment of Mr. GILLETTE was not agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend by striking out, in Rule XLV, all after the words "House of Representatives;" so as to make the rule read:

These rules shall be the rules for the House of Representatives.

By the Constitution it is provided that—

Each House may determine the rules of its proceeding.

Contrary to this provision, we propose by the pending rule to declare that we are making rules for the government not only of the present but of future Houses of Representatives. This we can only do by laws enacted in conformity with the Constitution. The Constitution expressly reserves to each House the right to make its own rules; and if it be said that there must be some rules under which a new House shall organize, I answer that parliamentary law and parliamentary practice furnish such rules. I simply desire this House not to adopt a rule in violation of the Constitution; not to attempt to do that which it has not the power to do. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I do not wish to detain the committee, but only to call attention to the fact that by Rule XLV as it stands we are undertaking to do what we have no authority under the Constitution to do. Let us not undertake to deny the right of each succeeding House to adopt such rules as it may deem fit; let us not make ourselves ridiculous by proposing to bind in this way any future House of Representatives.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. REAGAN, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 39, noes 63.

Mr. BLACKBURN. At the time Rule V was under consideration the committee on rules reserved the right to go back to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Committee on Rules also reserved the right, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] not now present, to return to the third clause of Rule IV for the purpose of disposing of the matter of the execution of the bond of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that the Committee of the Whole may return to Rules XXIII and XXIV, so that I may offer some amendments which the Committee on Rules had unanimously agreed to, but which when these rules were under consideration were in the hands of the clerk of the committee, who was absent on that day.

Mr. FRYE. We can dispose of Rule IV in a moment, because in the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] I feel at liberty to say that we came to the conclusion that if anything was to be done in relation to the Sergeant-at-Arms it must be done by law, not as a rule of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has also an amendment pending to the third clause of Rule IV. His amendment was passed over with the other.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) With reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, I will say that the committee took it into consideration and thought the features he proposed were very valuable and ought to be enacted into a law, as well as the suggestions of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FRYE. But not into a rule.

Mr. NEW. I have no disposition to occupy the time of the committee by anything in addition to what I have heretofore said in support of my amendment. I will remark, however, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] said to me a few days since that it was believed by the Committee on Rules to be best to have a statute upon this subject, but that it might be well, and probably would be best, to adopt the amendment which I had offered, inasmuch as it was uncertain when there would be such legislation. I am willing, in the mean time, that the clause which I have offered to amend should remain as it is.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If the gentleman will introduce and have referred to the Committee on Rules a bill embracing his views, I have no doubt it will be promptly acted upon.

Mr. NEW. As it seems to be the sense of the committee that the amendment had better be withdrawn, I withdraw it.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The committee think that any provision on this subject had better be in the shape of a law.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NEW] being withdrawn, the Committee of the Whole will now return to Rule XXIII.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to move to amend by adding to clause 1 of Rule XXIII the following:

Who shall, in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries or lobby, have power to cause the same to be cleared.

This relates to the power of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole. It is Rule 9 of the existing body of rules, and was accidentally omitted.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The amendment simply gives to the chairman of the Committee of the Whole the same power in this respect that the Speaker has in the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to move to amend by adding the following to the second clause of Rule XXIII, which relates to occasions when the Committee of the Whole finding itself without a quorum reports that fact to the House:

But if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

That is the present rule exactly.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now offer from the Committee on Rules a substitute for clause 4 of the twenty-third rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, excepting bills for raising revenue and general appropriation bills, which shall have precedence; and when objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide without debate whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We simply provide the machinery looked to in the fourth clause.

Mr. CONGER. Would that require in passing every bill each time when the bill was reached that the committee should rise?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; and that was insisted upon.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) On your side.

Mr. CONGER. I know no sides in this matter.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I mean it was insisted on by the minority.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is the present clause of the rule, and explains more elaborately, but conforms to the general order of business in that it gives priority to revenue bills and general appropriation bills.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it understood that the rule which permits the privilege to the Committee on Commerce on bills relating to rivers and harbors is unaffected by this amendment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not affected in the slightest, as the river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I move it shall embrace, then, the river and harbor appropriation bill, too.

Mr. COX. I should like to hear it read again if there be no objection.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. REAGAN. I move, after the word "appropriation," to insert the words "and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I give notice that I shall demand the yeas and nays on that amendment when we get into the House.

The amendment, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move, in the seventh clause of the twenty-third rule, to strike out the words "recommendation to strike out the enacting words" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "an adverse recommendation."

That simply means not to report a bill back from the Committee of the Whole by striking out the enacting words, but simply to report it back with adverse recommendation, which is broader and covers all adverse action in committee.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I am directed by the Committee on Rules to move an amendment, which is not a substantial change, but merely makes the language more harmonious. It is in the nature of a substitute for the first clause of Rule XXIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

Each Monday morning during a session of Congress, after the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting has been read and approved, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and resolutions for reference, on which call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State Legislatures may be presented and appropriately referred; and on this call only resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments shall be in order for reference to appropriate committees, which resolutions shall be reported to the House within one week thereafter.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And territorial Legislatures should be added.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I will modify my substitute by inserting those words so as to read, "memorials of State and territorial Legislatures."

The CHAIRMAN. The clause as it now stands has been very materially amended in the Committee of the Whole, and, as the Chair understands, the amendment moved by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a substitute for the clause as it now stands.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I move it as a substitute for the entire first clause as it has been amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the clause as it now stands, having been amended in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

Each Monday morning during a session of Congress all the States and Territories shall be called in their alphabetical order for bills and joint resolutions and memorials of State and territorial Legislatures and House resolutions for reference; and on this call only resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments shall be in order to be submitted; and said resolutions shall lie upon the table, and the mover or proposer of such resolution shall be permitted to call up the same after the reading of the Journal, at any time after the expiration of one week, and have the same submitted to a vote of the House without debate.

Mr. RANDALL's substitute, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I am directed by the Committee on Rules to move, in the fourth clause of the twenty-fourth rule, where the word "Monday" is used to insert "the first and third Monday," so as to make it conform to the action of the committee recently taken.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I am also directed, in clause 6 of the same rule, to strike out in the first paragraph after the word "Union" the words "to consider, first, bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then other business on its calendar."

Mr. CONGER. What is the object of that?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) In order that it may conform to the previous action of the committee. It is provided for in Rule XI, and is unnecessary here.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move now that the committee rise and report the rules as amended to the House.

Mr. CONGER. Before that motion is put, I desire to ask that either the Committee on Rules or the chairman of it shall cause a copy of the rules to be printed as they have been adopted by the Committee of the Whole in order that we may see what action has been taken upon them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is my purpose when we get into the House to ask that the rules as adopted by the Committee of the Whole shall be printed with all the amendments in italics and each one numbered. I will say further that up to this time the clerk of the committee has kept up with all of the amendments, so that there will be no delay in preparing this copy for the printer. I now move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with sundry amendments thereto.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I now give notice to the House that I shall ask to call up in the House for action, on Tuesday next, immediately after the morning hour, the revision of the rules as reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ATKINS. Why not to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the Committee on Rules would like to see the rules in print.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. COX. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to adjourn over; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EULOGIES ON SENATOR HOUSTON.

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Speaker, as some gentlemen may desire to prepare remarks upon the occasion, I desire to give notice that I shall call up for consideration the resolutions in regard to the death of Senator HOUSTON at one o'clock on Wednesday next.

PRINTING THE REVISED RULES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to request an order of the House that the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in reference to the revised rules be printed, and the Chair, if there be no objection, will consider that as the order of the House, and also that this report be printed in the manner suggested by him, that is, the amendments in italics and numbered.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BAYNE, for one day, on account of important business.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, March 1, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers and a report of Colonel J. H. Simpson, Corps of Engineers, upon the improvement of Alton Harbor, Illinois, made under the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers and an accompanying report of Major C. R. Suter, Corps of Engineers, of an examination and survey made of Gasconade River from its mouth to Vienna, in Maries County, Missouri, made in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter of the Chief of Engineers covering a copy of a report from S. T. Abert, United States civil engineer, of an examination and survey of Dan River from Clarksville to Danville, Virginia, being a continuation of the survey of the same river between Danbury, North Carolina, and Danville, Virginia, made in compliance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of June 13, 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, showing the urgent necessity for repair of the old public buildings at Fortress Monroe, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with the eleventh section of the act of Congress approved August 26, 1862, a statement of the civil employes of his Department during the year ending June 30, 1879, together with the time each employe was actually employed and the sums paid to each; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3462) to amend section 3020 of the Revised Statutes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of Marion Butcher and others, citizens of Mill Grove and other towns in Missouri, praying for the passage of an equalization bounty bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the memorial of John W. Griffith, a citizen of the State of New York, who has prepared a bill to accompany the memorial, the object of which bill is to revive the shipping interest of America. I move that the memorial, and the bill as a part of it, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also a memorial signed by a number of citizens of the State of New York, who were soldiers for the Union in the late war, protesting against the passage of Senate bill No. 496.

That is a bill, establishing, as I understand it, a large number of pension districts. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of William Stockwell, of Manchester, Iowa, praying that he be placed on the pension-roll as a soldier of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition signed by a large number of merchants, manufacturers, and other leading business men of Auburn, New York, praying for the passage of a law establishing a uniform system of bankruptcy for all the States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Davis, Bardeen & Co., of Syracuse, New York, publishers, praying for the passage of a bill placing wood and straw pulp, soda ash, and other chemicals used in the manufacture of paper, on the free list, and reducing the duty on printing-paper used for books, &c., at least to 5 per cent. ad valorem; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a memorial signed by F. N. Drake, president of the Tioga Railroad Company, and George I. Magee, president of the Corning, Cowanesque and Antrim Railway Company and of the Syracuse, Geneva and Corning Railway Company, and director of the Buffalo, New York and Philadelphia Railway Company and of the McKean and Buffalo Railway Company, representing three hundred and nineteen miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton, as proposed in House bill No. 3234. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I also present a similar memorial signed by S. S. Jewett, president of the Buffalo, New York and Philadelphia Railway Company, representing one hundred and twenty-one miles of railroad, remonstrating to the same effect. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I have the concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New York giving instructions to the Senators of the State. I suppose it to be proper to present such resolutions to go on the files of the Senate, although not, as I understand it, for reference to a committee, as they call for no action of a committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be reported.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK. IN SENATE.
Albany, January 16, 1880.

Whereas the city of New York is the most important seaboard center, not only of this State but of the United States, and the proper protection of the commercial and industrial interests of the city is by necessity connected with the prosperity of the country at large; and

Whereas the harbor defenses and fortifications of the city of New York against attacks from marine forces are manifestly inadequate to afford security to the city, should such attacks be made upon it, and the erection and maintenance of proper and suitable defenses to the city is a matter of national importance and properly belongs to the Federal Congress: Therefore,

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur.) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their influence to secure an early appropriation sufficient for the speedy erection and proper maintenance of the fortifications and defenses necessary for the protection of the city of New York against hostile attacks.

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur.) That a copy of the foregoing resolution be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

By order.

JOHN W. VROOMAN, Clerk.

IN ASSEMBLY. February 18, 1880.

Concurred in.
By order.

EDW. M. JOHNSON, Clerk.

Mr. CONKLING. As the resolutions speak to the delegation from New York alone, I move that they go to the files of the Senate; I suppose it is not appropriate to refer them to a committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order to place the resolutions on the files will be made.

Mr. RANDOLPH presented the memorial of F. S. Lathrop, receiver of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Solo Phillipowski, of Hudson County, New Jersey, praying for the passage of a law which will prevent his being mustered into the Russian army on a contemplated visit to his parents; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WITHERS. I present the petitions of A. S. Lee, John Enders, P. J. Haskins, administrator, &c., Charles D. Yale & Co., John Stewart, Samuel M. Bailey, John Enders, executor of William Greanor, Eugene Carrington, administrator, &c., D. T. Madigan, surviving partner, &c., citizens of Richmond, Virginia, praying for compensation for the rent of buildings while occupied by the United States Army during the late war. These are duplicates of petitions presented on the 27th of March last, which have been accidentally misplaced. I ask their acceptance, and move that they be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of J. B. A. Brouillet, praying for an appropriation by Congress to reimburse the Christian Brothers of the Saint Michael's College and Sisters of Charity of Santa Fé, New Mexico, for the expenses of a school for Pueblo Indian children at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KERNAN. I present a copy of concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of New York, instructing her Senators to favor an appropriation by Congress for the erection and maintenance of the fortifications and defenses of New York City. They have been read; and I ask that they go on the files of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. BAILEY. I present the memorial of the governor, justices of the supreme court, and other officials of the State of Tennessee, in which they represent that what are known as the Regie contracts and monopolies in leaf-tobacco are injurious to all dealers in leaf-tobacco in the several markets of the United States, and ruinous to the producer, and praying relief therefrom. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I present a memorial of E. T. Warner, vice-president of the Wilmington and New York Steamship Company, George W. Bush & Son, of the Philadelphia freight line, and many others, who are the owners of more than six miles of river front on the Christiana River, protesting against any appropriation to build an ice-harbor at the mouth of the Christiana River, Wilmington, Delaware. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN presented the memorial of E. B. Thomas, general manager of the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis Railroad Company, representing four hundred and seventy-two miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of citizens of Concord, Butler County, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture establishing a department of agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Butler County, Pennsylvania, and a petition of citizens of Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Butler County, Pennsylvania, and a petition of citizens of Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, praying such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which were referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the petition of J. N. Conger and 71 others, citizens of Oneida, Illinois, praying for the passage of a law to protect the public health from the injurious effects of food manufactured from refuse or diseased fats; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of R. A. Huse and others, citizens of Maine and soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a law to pay them the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time of their payment during the war; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TELLER presented the petition of W. G. Smith, of Jefferson County, Colorado, praying that certain articles used in the printing of papers may be put on the free list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of F. J. Kinney and some 70 or 80 others, among the most respected citizens of Worcester, Massachusetts, praying for the passage of House bill No. 269, known as the Wright supplement to the homestead bill. I move its reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented additional evidence to accompany the petition of Anna Butterfield, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of N. S. Cutler and others, citizens of Massachusetts, praying that the Government may regard its treaty obligations with the Utah Indians, and especially see to it that they are confirmed in the title to their lands in severalty; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CARPENTER presented the petition of H. E. Huxley and others, citizens of Wisconsin, and the petition of Henry Clark and others, citizens of Winnebago County, Wisconsin, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of H. E. Huxley and others, citizens of Wisconsin, praying such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of George Melrose and others, citizens of Wisconsin, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of Albert Keep, president of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company, representing twenty-one hundred and fifty-eight miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Sarah R. Bleecker, widow of the late John F. B. Bleecker, paymaster in the United States Navy, praying to be relieved from a judgment against her late husband standing on the books of the Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF A PAPER.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, some days since I presented a paper purporting to be the petition of Mrs. R. H. Nicholas and Mrs. Jeannie N. Bromhall, residents of Abingdon, Washington County, Virginia, asking to be relieved from political disabilities and to have the right to vote, any State laws to the contrary notwithstanding. I had the paper referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. After that was done I got a letter from Mr. Nicholas, written on behalf of Mrs. Nicholas, in which he says:

Mrs. Nicholas does not consider that she is laboring under any political disabilities, has no desire to exercise the privilege of voting, nor has she, to her knowledge, signed any petition for that object.

Upon receiving this letter I sent for the paper and found that it was not signed, and I then ascertained that somebody had practiced an imposition both upon me and upon Mrs. Nicholas. Under the circumstances I ask that the paper be withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the paper will be withdrawn.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of California in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of Humboldt Bay, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred a letter from the Secretary of War transmitting additional information relative to the construction of quarters for officers at Fort Omaha, Nebraska, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2328) to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations instruct me to report favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4432) making additional appropriations for the support of certain Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1880. I desire to say that this bill ought to be considered at a very early day and I shall take occasion to call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. FARLEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 251) granting a pension to Margaret Mills, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Daniel Houlihan, praying for arrears of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 183) granting a pension to Hugh Gallagher, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Reese Lamme, praying to be allowed a pension on account of a son killed in battle, who was his support, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1384) granting a pension to Reese Lamme.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH L. LEWIS.

Mr. BAYARD. A bill (H. R. No. 2046) to authorize a compromise of the claims of the United States under the will of Joseph L. Lewis was reported adversely by the Committee on the Judiciary and postponed indefinitely. I am now instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to ask for the recommitment of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be regarded as reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSIDERATION OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MORGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] April 1, 1879, relating to the consideration of appropriation bills, to report it adversely.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and they hereby are, directed to inquire into the expediency of an amendment to the rules of the Senate which shall provide that the several committees shall receive the estimates and report the annual appropriation bills as hereinafter named:

First. The Committee on Appropriations: Bills for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, for all deficiencies, and for sundry civil expenses.

Second. The Committee on Military Affairs: The bills for the support of the Army, the Military Academy, and for fortifications.

Third. The Committee on Naval Affairs: The bills for the support of the Navy and the Naval Academy.

Fourth. The Committee on Foreign Relations: The bills for diplomatic and consular expenses, and for carrying out the treaties of the United States with foreign countries.

Fifth. The Committee on Indian Affairs: The bills for the expenses of the Indian Department.

Sixth. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads: The bills for the expenses of the Post-Office Department, and mail transportation by land or sea.

Seventh. The Committee on Commerce: The bills for the improvement of harbors and rivers, and construction and repair of light-houses.

Eighth. The Committee on the District of Columbia: The bills for the expenses and support of the District of Columbia.

Ninth. The Committee on Pensions: The bills for the payment of pensions.

Tenth. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds: Bills for such public buildings and grounds as the needs of the Government may require.

Eleventh. The Committee on Agriculture: The bill for the expenses of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Rules ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate concur in the recommendation of the Committee on Rules? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the recommendation of the committee is agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COKE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1385) to amend an "Act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census.

Mr. WITHERS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1386) to incorporate the Potomac Union Railway Company, of Washington, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GORDON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1387) amending section 4237 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONAS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1388) to provide for deepening the mouth and removing obstructions to the navigation of Red River, and appropriating $200,000 for said purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1389) to provide for the relief of aged and faithful employees of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1390) to provide for the distribution of the regular edition of the public documents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1391) authorizing the appointment of justices of the peace and constables in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1392) to authorize national savings-banks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (by request,) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1393) to provide for greater economy in the public expenditure for gas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) regarding the printing and distribution of CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS to certain libraries; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. EDMUNDS subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent, as I was not able to get in at the proper time, to introduce a bill. I interrupt the regular order because I think this bill, which provides for an increase of the police force of the District of Columbia, is absolutely necessary, and the public exigency requires prompt action upon it. I beg leave to introduce the bill and ask to have it read twice and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and addressing the chairman of that committee I beg to express the hope that his committee will consider it as speedily as possible.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1394) to increase the police force of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

STAR-ROUTE POSTAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. BECK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate, as soon as possible, the amount paid out of the appropriations made for the star postal service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, from the 1st day of July, 1879, to March 1, 1880. He is directed to make such report by quarters for the first half of the current fiscal year, and by months for the months of January and February, 1880, stating the amount paid on each route at each period, and to report what amount will be required to pay in full for all of said star postal service at the rates and under the contracts now existing for the remainder of the current fiscal year, stating the amount required for each route separately.

J. J. KEY AND W. G. M. DAVIS.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire the consent of the Senate for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. No. 87) for the relief of John J. Key and W. G. M. Davis. It is a small bill, reported from the Judiciary Committee, and with the unanimous report of the committee in favor of the substitute.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to John J. Key the sum of $10,000, and to W. G. M. Davis the sum of $10,000, for their services, respectively, as attorneys at law, employed by the United States Attorney-General to aid in the case of John Young, assignee of Alexander Collier, against the United States, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which said sum shall be the balance in full of the compensation of the said John J. Key and W. G. M. Davis, respectively, for their services in said cause under said employment, and that said amount shall be charged to the fund now in the Treasury of the United States known as proceeds of captured and abandoned property, under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property, and for the prosecution of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States," approved March 12, 1863. (Statutes at Large, volume 12, page 820.)

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana who made the report a question. The report does not specify whether the large claim against the Government here referred to, amounting to nearly a million dollars, is for captured and abandoned property?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir; it is for property seized by the United States authorities as captured and abandoned property.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is one mere verbal amendment that I should like to suggest. Where the bill says that the money shall be charged to the captured and abandoned property fund, I should like to have it read "paid out of and charged to," so as to avoid all technical question hereafter whether the fund has been diminished by this amount.

Mr. McDONALD. I accept the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 13 of the committee's amendment, after the word "be," it is proposed to insert "paid out of and," so as to read:

And that said amount shall be paid out of and charged to the fund now in the Treasury of the United States known as proceeds of captured and abandoned property, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I presume there is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be made if there be no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TREASURY PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. MORRILL. The chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was not present at the time of closing the last consideration of bills on the Calendar, and one bill was passed over because there was no one here to explain it. I therefore ask the Senate now to take up Senate bill No. 1157.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall not object to this request, for the peculiar reason stated by the Senator from Vermont, but I give notice that I shall object after this to the consideration of anything but the bills on the Calendar in their order during the few minutes that are devoted to the Calendar each day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand the Senator from Rhode Island to object to this bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not object to it, because it was reached on the Calendar and was passed over by inadvertence.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1157) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional lots of ground adjoining the new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to explain the bill so far as may be necessary.

Under the rule adopted by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds we do not report any bills for the erection of buildings for public uses unless they are to be independent of and apart from any other building, so as not to be exposed to fire from anything that is contiguous.

In addition to that point, I will say that this building covers nearly all the ground that we purchased for its site. It is a building that has been put up for the smallest sum of money, considering the quality of the building and its size, of any building, perhaps, ever erected by the Government. It is absolutely necessary to have a little more ground in the rear of it, in order that it may not be exposed to fire, and also for the purpose of erecting a high fence to protect it against ordinary burglars. The price is limited to the same which was paid for the land that we have already acquired. If it cannot be obtained for that, the bill does not provide for giving anything more.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that this ground is to be purchased for the new building of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Only a few years ago we bought the lot, I believe, on which that building is being erected. The Senator from Vermont was chairman at that time of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I believe, and I ask him to state why it was that at that time we did not buy a sufficient amount of land, and whether the rule we have that a public building must be on a square to itself was not in force then?

Mr. MORRILL. It was supposed at that time that the lot was large enough, but upon putting up the building it is found to be too limited.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The question I asked the Senator is whether the entire square was bought originally.

Mr. MORRILL. Not the whole square, but an area sufficient, as was supposed at the time, for the building that was to be erected; but when the building has been put up it is found to occupy so much of the space that the rear will be exposed to the lots owned by private citizens.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now I will ask the Senator whether when this new purchase is made we shall own the entire square?

Mr. MORRILL. If we purchase what is proposed in the bill we shall own enough, so as to leave all the open space that we may require.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I approve of the idea of public buildings being so constructed as not to be endangered by fire; and I supposed in this case that we had bought the square. It is something unusual to erect a public building unless there is an entire square bought as its site; but it appears that in this case we did not do so.

I wish to say only a word further. In future I hope the rule which the Senator has stated will be carried out, and especially in Washington. If that rule is required to be observed all over the country, in towns of much less importance than this and in buildings of much less importance, it certainly ought to be required here. To me it is strange that at the time the purchase was made the entire square was not bought, for this certainly is a large building. I think it is going to be a very creditable building, and I understand it is put up very cheaply, and probably will fall within the appropriation, which is something very unusual.

While I do not object to the passage of the present bill, I think it was quite an oversight that originally the whole square was not bought.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the Calendar, commencing at the point reached when it was last under consideration.

The bill (S. No. 528) to abolish the office of water register of the District of Columbia, and to transfer the charge and control of the water supply to the Chief of Engineers in charge of the Washington Aqueduct, was announced as being first in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That bill was adversely reported, and I think that is understood to be always an objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is adversely reported. The Committee on the District of Columbia object to it. It will be passed over.

NARCISSE GIBSON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 855) for the relief of Narcissa Gibson, widow of the late Captain Alexander Gibson, United States Navy; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJOR THORNBURGH'S WIDOW.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1046) granting an increase of pension to the widow of Major Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over, being reported adversely.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand that no action is taken upon the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is merely passed over.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If there is no objection I wish to offer an amendment to it, which I think will carry the bill through in a moment's time. There is nothing more deserving before the Senate now.

Mr. WITHERS. I would suggest to the Senator that the best mode of procedure would be to offer the amendment and ask to have the bill recommitted, with the amendment, to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I was only going to move an amendment to strike out "$100" and insert "$50" as the rate of the pension. If there be no objection to that, I will make that offer.

Mr. WITHERS. I would suggest that it had better be sent to the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Very well. I move, then, that that bill be taken from the Calendar and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks that Senate bill No. 1046 be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

R. GORTHY AND C. GREEN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 38) for the relief of Robert Gorthy and Calvin Green; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, which were, in line 4, after the word "conveyance," to strike out "without terms," and at the end of the bill to insert:

Provided, The said Gorthy and Calvin Green pay all the costs of the proceedings in court on the bond of Benjamin Ballard, on which they were sureties.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Solicitor of the Treasury be authorized and directed to convey, by proper deeds of conveyance, to Robert Gorthy, of Victor, Clinton County, in the State of Michigan, all the interest of the United States in and to the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter and the east half of the northwest quarter of section 17, in township 6 north, of range 1 west, Michigan; and to Calvin Green, of the same place, all the interest of the United States in and to the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 17, and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 18, in township 6 north, of range 1 west, Michigan: Provided, The said Gorthy and Calvin Green pay all the costs of the proceedings in court on the bond of Benjamin Ballard, on which they were sureties.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the purpose of the bill stated.

Mr. GARLAND. A gentleman by the name of Ballard was arrested by process issuing from the district court for Michigan for obstructing process. He gave a bond to appear at the succeeding term of the court to answer any indictment that might be preferred against him for that offense. Gorthy and Green were his sureties. The term of the court came on and the court was held. After that term a suit was brought on the bond against the sureties, and they, supposing that Ballard had defaulted and had not answered the indictment, did not appear to the suit, and a judgment was rendered against them by default. An execution was issued upon that judgment and levied upon the lands mentioned in the bill. The lands were sold and the United States purchased them in.

Mr. TELLER. Whose land was it, the sureties'?

Mr. GARLAND. The land of the sureties.

Mr. TELLER. All right.

Mr. GARLAND. The suit on the bond was the ordinary suit for a forfeiture of recognizance in failing to answer an indictment. It transpired after a while that Gorthy and Green looking into the matter found that, in point of fact, no indictment had ever been presented; none ever came from the grand jury against their principal, Mr. Ballard. They went into the court and moved to set aside this judgment and cancel the proceedings. The judge held that, the term at which the judgment was rendered having elapsed, he could not interpose to set aside the judgment; but he expressed his opinion that in equity it ought to be done; that they were entitled to relief. They appealed to the proper Department for relief, and the Department remitted them to Congress, the Department holding that under the law it had no power to remit this judgment and return them the land. The clerk of the court has diligently searched the records and he can find no indictment and no trace of any indictment, so that in point of fact their principal was not in default. The Government has not been injured at all. These lands were bought in by the Government, and now the parties ask the Government to return them the lands upon their paying all the costs that have accrued in these proceedings. That is the whole case.

With the papers there are letters from the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as the Solicitor of the Treasury, stating these facts and recommending that the bill be passed, the United States paying no costs and incurring no expense in the matter.

Mr. TELLER. I do not see but what the bill ought to be passed; but I do not see why these parties should pay costs if the Government had no claim against them at all.

Mr. GARLAND. That is a very correct suggestion, and I am pretty much of that opinion myself; but on looking into the precedents I find that the Government is not in the habit in any case of paying any costs or expenses. These gentlemen were in default in the first instance in not appearing to see whether or not an indictment had been found against their principal.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEDERICK BLANK.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 338) granting a pension to Dederick Blanck; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to amend the bill by striking out "and pay him a pension at the rate of — dollars per month from and after the passage of this act" and in lieu thereof to insert: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Dederick Blanck, of Company B, Thirty-seventh Regiment Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT HEALTH ORDINANCES.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (H. R. No. 189) legalizing the health ordinances and regulations for the District of Columbia; which was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendments proposed by the committee, but before concluding was interrupted by Mr. TELLER. I think that had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

MILTON L. SPARR.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1193) granting a pension to Milton L. Sparr; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Milton L. Sparr, as second lieutenant of Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER CLAESGENS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1197) granting a pension to Peter Claesgens; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Peter Claesgens, late captain of Company F, of the One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment New York Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETTLEMENT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 818) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a long bill, but I do not know that there is any objection to it. I shall not object.

The Chief Clerk commenced to read the bill—

Mr. TELLER. Let that go over. It will lead to some discussion, and it is a long bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

THE GENEVA AWARD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose that goes over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REDMOND TULLY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 592) for the relief of Redmond Tully.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MAJOR P. P. G. HALL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 175) for the relief of Major P. P. G. Hall; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Major Peter P. G. Hall, a paymaster of the Army, of $3,141.39, being the amount paid by him into the Treasury of the United States on the 15th of January, 1872, in liquidation of a deficiency in his accounts as paymaster, caused by the criminal acts of his clerk, James Thomas, in 1868-'69, and of which the clerk was duly convicted.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is there a report with that bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BURN-SIDE February 3, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 175) for the relief of Major P. P. G. Hall, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

This is a bill directing the refundment to Major P. P. G. Hall, a paymaster in the Army, the sum of $3,141.39, being the amount paid by him into the Treasury, January 15, 1872, in liquidation of a deficiency in his accounts as paymaster, caused by the criminal acts of a clerk named James Thomas, occurring in 1869, and of which said Thomas was duly convicted.

The bill referred to has twice been acted upon favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs, and the last report made in the case is again adopted by the committee. It was as follows:

"This matter was thoroughly investigated by the committee of the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, and a favorable report, accompanied by a bill for relief, made to the Senate. (See Report No. 604, second session, Forty-fourth Congress, January 23, 1877.) The bill was not reached before final adjournment of the Forty-fourth Congress, and now comes up by identical bill. Inasmuch as the facts and record are the same as those submitted to the consideration of the committee heretofore, your committee adopt the report of the previous committee, as herein-after set forth, and recommend the passage of the bill.

"[Forty-fourth Congress, second session, Senate report No. 604.]

"Mr. SPENCER submitted the following report, to accompany bill S. No. 1175:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Major Peter P. G. Hall, praying to have refunded certain money he was obliged to pay in consequence of the embezzlement of a clerk, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

"The record shows that the petitioner, a paymaster in the Army of the United States, was stationed in the years 1868 and 1869 at Vicksburgh and Jackson, in the State of Mississippi, where, in addition to his duties of payments to the officers and soldiers of the Army stationed in the various parts of the military district, and which required him to travel over parts of the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Alabama to perform the same, he was also charged with the arduous and responsible payment of what is known as "reconstruction vouchers," the funds of which were separate from those furnished for the payment of the Army.

"The additional duty imposed upon the petitioner a vast amount of labor, in the performance of which, in addition to his regular clerk, he was allowed by the proper authorities other clerks, and also enlisted men, from time to time, as occasion required, to the number of fifteen or twenty, for the purpose of assisting in the work of preparing for payment the said reconstruction accounts. Among the number of clerks so employed to meet the exigencies of this extra service was one James Thomas.

"The said James Thomas, while thus employed as a clerk, and engaged in the preparation of the vouchers on which said reconstruction accounts were paid, at various times between March 1, 1868, and February 1, 1869, without petitioner's knowledge, fraudulently and feloniously altered a large number of reconstruction vouchers which had been approved and ordered paid by the proper military authorities, so as to largely increase the amount of money due on the same, and raised and altered checks signed by the petitioner for their payment, by means of which felonious practices he obtained the money on said vouchers and checks, and embezzled of the money of the United States the sum of $3,409.62 before he was detected thereof.

"During this period the petitioner was engaged in the discharge of his regular duties of paymaster, which necessarily called him frequently away from his headquarters into various parts of the military district where troops were stationed, and he therefore had no knowledge of the frauds committed by said Thomas until they were discovered by the accounting officers of the Treasury. Upon the discovery of these facts, the said Thomas was, at the request of the petitioner, immediately arrested, by order of General A. C. Gillem, commanding the military district, and on the 19th of October, 1869, he was arraigned before a general court-martial convened at Jackson, Mississippi, by order of General Ames, the department commander, charged with the following crimes:

"First. Making claims against the Government of the United States, knowing the same to be fictitious and fraudulent, in violation of the act of Congress of March 2, 1863.

"Second. Making and using false vouchers, knowing the same to contain false and fraudulent statements and entries, for the purpose of obtaining the approval of false claims, in violation of the same act.

"Third. Knowingly and willfully appropriating to his own use money belonging to the United States, in violation of the same act.

"Fourth. Conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline.

"On the 28th of January, 1870, after a full investigation by the court-martial convened for that purpose, the said Thomas was declared guilty upon all the charges, and sentenced to forfeit to the United States all pay then due or that may become due, to pay a fine of $3,299.01, and to be confined at hard labor for the period of five years; which proceedings were approved by General Ames, and the said Thomas was incarcerated in the penitentiary at Jackson, Mississippi.

"In consequence of this embezzlement, there was found to be due, upon settlement of petitioner's accounts by the proper officers of the Government, a deficiency of $3,141.39, which amount was made a charge against him. Thereupon the petitioner was suspended from duty and pay until he should pay over and reimburse to the Government the amount of said deficit, a refusal to comply with the same rendering him liable to be court-martialed and dismissed the service as a defaulter. Accordingly, the petitioner did pay over to the United States the said sum of $3,141.39, the amount of the moneys so embezzled by the said Thomas.

"After the said payment and liquidation by said petitioner of the amount so charged against him, he filed, on the 29th of October, 1873, his petition for relief in the Court of Claims, under the act of May 9, 1866, by which said court is invested with jurisdiction to grant relief in cases of this character; and whenever said court shall have ascertained the facts of any such loss to have been without fault or neglect on the part of the officer suffering a loss of the public funds, it is provided by said act that a decree shall be made, setting forth the amount thereof, upon which the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall allow to such officer the amount so decreed as a credit in the settlement of his accounts.

"On demurrer to the said petition, the Court of Claims held 'that petitioner could not recover, for the reason that his liability for the defalcation had been discharged by the payment of the money. The court held that an officer entitled to the relief contemplated by the act must not only have been, but must still be, held responsible to the Government for that which is lost. If the responsibility has been discharged, he is no longer entitled to relief. His account has by his own act been settled and closed, and there is, therefore, no unsettled account upon which a credit decreed by this court could be allowed.'

"Therefore the petitioner was denied the relief he sought because he had, under the orders of his superiors, previously paid over the deficit charged against him. The record shows that the petitioner had no time to present his case to the Court of Claims previously to the payment of the deficit. Although petitioner made application for delay for the purpose of endeavoring to obtain relief, the record shows such delay was peremptorily refused, and by Special Order No. 139 of the War Department, dated August 4, 1870, which was issued immediately upon settlement of his account by the Second Auditor of the Treasury, the petitioner was ordered to repair without delay for duty in the Department of Texas. It also appears in the record that, by letter of the Adjutant-General of date August 16, 1870, petitioner's request for delay was denied, and the order to proceed at once to Texas was reiterated.

"A letter from the then Paymaster-General is in the record, from which it appears that officer, in suspending petitioner and threatening him with court-martial unless he paid over the deficit, disclaims all intention of barring petitioner from his legal remedy in the Court of Claims. But, it is proper to remark, the effect of the Paymaster-General's acts was so to debar petitioner and therefore to force him to seek congressional relief. Had the exigencies of the public service and the consideration of his superior officers so permitted, there can be no reasonable doubt he would have been relieved by the Court of Claims under the broad and equitable provisions of the act of May 9, 1866, had he not, in obedience to orders, previously paid the amount of the deficit so charged against him.

"The Hon. E. B. French, Second Auditor of the Treasury, and the officer charged with the settlement of paymasters' accounts, certifies 'that, with the exception of the reconstruction accounts, wherein fraud was alleged to have been committed by a clerk, the petitioner's accounts have been rendered in an acceptable and satisfactory manner, and his payments appear to have been made with care and ability.'

"Thus far the case presents unquestionable merit, and the remaining point for consideration is whether the prisoner had exercised proper care and caution and such reasonable prudence as is required of a disbursing officer. The Secretary of War, being addressed on this subject, submits the following report:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,

"Washington City, January 22, 1877.

"Sir: Returning your letter of the 19th instant, requesting information in the matter of defalcation of Major P. P. G. Hall, paymaster United States Army, through his clerk, James Thomas, I have the honor to invite your attention to the report of the Paymaster-General, dated the 20th instant, (indorsed on your letter,) and accompanying papers.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

"Hon. GEORGE E. SPENCER,

"Of Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

"UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
Washington, January 19, 1877.

"Sir: Referring to the petition of Major P. P. G. Hall, paymaster United States Army, praying to be reimbursed on account of certain defalcations occurring through the criminality of a clerk named James Thomas, while said petitioner was charged with the duties of paying vouchers under the reconstruction act, which petition is now pending before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, I have the honor to request such information as may be within the province of the War Department to afford, touching the question whether Major Hall exercised, under the attendant circumstances, such care and due diligence as a disbursing officer as would be reasonably and justly required by the precedents and practice of the Department. As the committee desire to determine this case on Tuesday next, please direct an early reply.

"Very respectfully,

"GEO. E. SPENCER,

"Of Senate Committee on Military Affairs, Acting Chairman.

"Hon. J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

"[Indorsement.]

"Respectfully referred to the Paymaster-General for report.

"By order of the Secretary of War.

"H. T. CROSBY,
Chief Clerk.

"JANUARY 19, 1877.

"[Second indorsement.]

"Respectfully returned to the honorable Secretary of War.

"As these transactions occurred several years before I arrived here, I have to make a statement derived from a variety of sources, mostly from the records of this office. These embezzlements by James Thomas, clerk to Major P. P. G. Hall, occurred when he was stationed at Vicksburgh, Mississippi, from September, 1868, to February 1, 1869, from funds on "reconstruction account," deposited with the assistant treasurer at New Orleans. The vouchers were paid by check on that depository, printed as payable to "bearer." It was customary to pay them (after the approval of each voucher by Brigadier-General Ord, commanding the fourth military district) by checks to the order of the claimant. Thus the word bearer on the check was erased, and the word order substituted. It appears that Thomas would write the word order on the check by a black lead pencil when presented to Major Hall, who has the misfortune to be near-sighted, which facilitated the crime of the offender. With a rubber he would erase the pencil marks, and thus, as the check would become payable to bearer he was able to appropriate the money to his own use. As no complaint of non-payment ever reached this office, Thomas must have first passed to Major Hall a correct voucher, duly countersigned by General Ord, and obtained a correct check to the order of the claimant, which was sent to him. Afterward he would alter and raise the amount of the voucher, and present a new check for the increased amount, as he performed the duty of preparing the voucher and the check necessary to pay it.

"When these vouchers were critically examined in this office, these alterations became apparent and were disallowed.

"A careful overhauling in this office, and afterward in the office of the Second Auditor, led to a disallowance in this manner amounting to $3,141.39. This amount was made good by Major Hall, being deposited with the United States depository at San Antonio, Texas.

"I do not doubt that Major Hall, as stated in his report on the subject, of the 19th instant, addressed to this office, was in the habit of comparing carefully the total amount of the voucher with the amount of the check before signing the latter—his near-sightedness, as in case of the check, rendering less obvious to him than to most disbursing officers the changes and alterations of the vouchers. He had severe work imposed upon him at Vicksburgh, being required to make these reconstruction disbursements in addition to his ordinary duty of paying the troops. His disbursements on the latter account, during the five months from September, 1868, to January, 1869, were $185,623.97; on account of reconstruction, $79,445.60.

"The vouchers (true amount) were often small, varying from $10 up to $63, and a few over $100.

"The general reputation of Major Hall for industry, fidelity, and accuracy of his accounts has been very good; and he appears to have made these disbursements at a time when extraordinary labor was imposed upon him.

"I inclose herewith Major Hall's letter of 19th instant, and copy of General Order No. 4, of February 5, 1870, from headquarters, military district, by which it will be seen that James Thomas was tried by a general court-martial, found guilty, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment for the offense, and to pay a fine of $3,299.01.

"I also inclose a statement of Major T. F. Barr, judge-advocate of said court-martial, whose duty it was to thoroughly investigate the case, and who expresses an opinion favorable to the present claim of Major Hall.

"BENJ. ALVORD,

"Paymaster-General, United States Army.

"PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

"January 20, 1877.

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 17, 1877.

"Sir: I am a petitioner to Congress for reimbursement in the matter of the embezzlement of Thomas, my clerk. As you prosecuted this case on behalf of the United States Government, and are conversant with it, will you be so kind as to favor me with your views, based on your knowledge of the case, regarding the manner in which my business was transacted, and if there was the necessary care and diligence exercised on my part.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"P. P. G. HALL,

"Paymaster, United States Army.

"Col. THOMAS F. BARR,

"Judge-Advocate, United States Army.

"[Indorsement.]

"WASHINGTON, January 17, 1877.

"Respectfully returned through the Secretary of War.

"In the spring of 1869 I was ordered by the Secretary of War to proceed to Jackson, Mississippi, in response to a telegram received from General Ames, asking for a judge-advocate to prosecute a case of embezzlement.

"Upon arriving at Jackson, I found that a Mr. Thomas, clerk to Major P. P. G. Hall, paymaster, was in the guard-house in Vicksburgh, charged with embezzlement of public funds, and that a writ of habeas corpus had issued from the United States district court (Judge Hill) for his release.

"I made an investigation of the case, and satisfied myself of the man's guilt, and then made a return to the writ, and argued the case successfully, the petitioner being remanded to military custody. He was subsequently tried by military court for embezzlement of public funds and sent to the penitentiary for a term of years.

"I could not at the time conceive that Major Hall would be held responsible for the money embezzled by Thomas. With the arduous duties imposed on him in the administration of the reconstruction laws, in addition to his regular official labors, the administration of his office appeared to me commendable in every way. That he should have been held peculiarly responsible for the criminal act of a subordinate has ever appeared to me a great injustice."

—THOMAS F. BARR,
"Judge-Advocate, United States Army."

"From these reports it appears that the petitioner exercised such reasonable prudence and diligence as could be fairly required under the circumstances, and that the defalcation of Thomas was not owing to any want of care or diligence on the part of the petitioner."

"Your committee also believe that where public funds have been lost by disbursing officers by robbery, accident, or the default of subordinates, without any fault or want of care on their part, it has been customary not to hold such officers liable for the sums thus lost, or, in cases where the money has been paid into the Treasury, as in the case of this memorialist, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund the same. Believing that this case comes within the principle established by the precedents referred to, your committee report herewith an act for the relief of the memorialist."

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I desire to have some explanation from the Senator who reported this bill. The clerk alluded to here, as I understand, raised a Government voucher; in other words, he forged a voucher which this paymaster recognized and paid. Now I wish to know whether this clerk was the appointee of this paymaster, his own selected agent.

Mr. BURNSIDE. He was.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The paymasters' clerks always are.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There is a class of cases where subordinates are put under disbursing officers, and when defalcations occur it is inequitable to hold the principal liable because higher authority here puts the subordinates under him. I know cases of deputy collectors and clerks of customs who are put into position without the collectors having anything to say about it, and in such cases I think it is very hard to hold the principal officer liable for a defalcation committed by a subordinate. But, as I understand, this clerk was the selected agent of the paymaster, and he committed the forgery which was afterward recognized by the paymaster himself, for which he seeks remuneration from the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the act of 1866 read, which, it is said, the Court of Claims was not able to execute, on account of the money having been paid into the Treasury by this officer. If the Senator in charge of the bill will have the act of 1866 read, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will state that this report is one which was adopted by the Military Committee at the last Congress, and was simply readopted as a portion of the present report. I believe it was once acted on by the Senate. I think this bill once passed the Senate, but was not reached in the other House. It was acted upon favorably by the Military Committee again at this session.

The Chief Clerk read the act referred to from the Revised Statutes, as follows:

SEC. 1062. Whenever the Court of Claims ascertains the facts of any loss by any paymaster, quartermaster, commissary of subsistence, or other disbursing officer, in the cases hereinbefore provided, to have been without fault or negligence on the part of such officer, it shall make a decree setting forth the amount thereof, and upon such decree the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall allow to such officer the amount so decreed, as a credit in the settlement of his accounts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should doubt whether this case would come within that act at all. I should hardly think that the provision was intended to let off a paymaster from the default of his own clerk, usually his own son, or somebody that he has employed, but I should think that it related to quite a different state of things. That I should say referred to some loss of money, as where a military chest being carried along was lost off a train; but when it comes to the mere fact that he is short in his accounts himself or that his own clerk has not taken proper care, or any care, or all care in respect to the vouchers that he has got, I should doubt very much whether that would apply.

I am a little afraid we are making a precedent, if we pass this bill, to set a premium upon the employment of paymasters' clerks by declaring that every paymaster whose clerk turns out to be a defaulter and you cannot say that the paymaster has been guilty of gross negligence—because that is what it comes to—shall be relieved. The excuse for this officer that is stated is true, I have no doubt, that he is near-sighted. It would hardly do to say that every near-sighted officer of the United States shall not be obliged to take the same means to examine vouchers that are changed by a lead-pencil so that they can be put into a condition that will suit the defrauding clerk afterward, which anybody else would be bound to take. That would be a pretty dangerous principle to adopt.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired. The Chair will take the occasion to present a message from the President of the United States just now received.

EAST FLORIDA CLAIMS.

The message was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I deem it proper to invite the attention of Congress to the subject of the unsettled claims of Spanish inhabitants of East Florida during the years of 1812 and 1813, generally known as the "East Florida claims," the settlement of which is provided for by a stipulation found in article 9 of the treaty of February, 1819, between the United States and Spain.

The provision of the treaty in question, which relates to the subject, is the following: "The United States will cause satisfaction to be made for the injuries, if any, which by process of law shall be established to have been suffered by the Spanish officers and individual Spanish inhabitants by the late operations of the American Army in Florida."

The act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1823, (Statutes at Large, vol. 3, p. 768,) to carry into effect the ninth article of the treaty in question, provided for the examination and judicial ascertainment of the claims by the judges of the superior courts established at Saint Augustine and Pensacola, and also made provision for the payment by the Secretary of the Treasury of such claims as might be reported to him by the said judges, upon his being satisfied that such claims were just and equitable, and a subsequent act, approved the 26th of June, 1834, (Statutes at Large, vol. 6, p. 569,) gave further directions for the payment, and also provided for the hearing and determination by the judge of the superior court of Saint Augustine, of such claims as had not then been already heard and determined. Under these acts of Congress I understand that all claims presented to the judges in Florida were passed upon and the result of the proceedings thus had reported to the Secretary of the Treasury. It also appears that in the computation of damages the judges adopted a rule of 5 per cent. per annum on the ascertained actual loss from the date of that loss to the time of the rendition of their finding, and that the Secretary of the Treasury, in 1836, when the first reports were presented to him, not deeming this portion of the claims covered by the 5 per cent. rule just and equitable, within the meaning of the treaty and the acts of Congress, refused to pay it, but did continue to pay the ascertained amounts of actual loss. The demand for payment of this rejected item has been pressed at various times and in various ways, up to the present time, but Mr. Woodbury's successors in the Treasury Department have not felt at liberty to review that ruling. Under these circumstances I have thought it proper to lay the subject before Congress for its consideration and such action as may be deemed necessary. The history of the proceedings already had in regard to the matter is of record in the Treasury Department and will be furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury should Congress desire it.

R. B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, March 1, 1880.

The message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3462) to amend section 3020 of the Revised Statutes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE GENEVA AWARD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States Volunteers and colonel of the Army, pending the consideration of which the Chair recognizes the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] pursuant to notice given by him and the understanding had on Friday last.

Mr. RANDOLPH. My understanding is, according to the agreement had on Friday last, that the Senator from Massachusetts will occupy the next thirty or forty minutes, or such time as he may desire, to make remarks concerning the Geneva-award bill, and I yield to him for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, will be considered as before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, we have in the Treasury some ten millions of dollars received from Great Britain in payment of the award made at Geneva. There are several schemes before the Senate for its disposition. One class of persons claim that it is theirs. They say that it was held to be due to them from Great Britain by a court to whom the United States submitted the question; that it was asked for by the United States in their behalf, paid over by Great Britain for them, and received for them by the United States as the result of such judgment and payment. They say that it was not only their due originally from Great Britain, not only held by the court to be their due, not only paid over by Great Britain as their due, but the Government of the United States so conducted itself when it claimed and accepted it as to be bound in honor and conscience not to deny their title or interpose any obstacle to their possession; least of all, not to claim for itself any right or discretion in the matter. On the other hand, it is claimed that the money was received by the United States as an indemnification for an injury which another nation had inflicted upon its interest and dignity, and that it has the right to retain it for itself or distribute it as an act of grace and bounty among such of its citizens as in its high discretion it shall deem proper objects of special consideration by reason of their special suffering from the national injury of which this fund was to some extent the compensation.

I wish, very briefly, to state my views on these three questions. Was the money in fact received and held in trust for the insurance companies? Did the transactions at Geneva estop the United States from denying such a trust? Upon whom, if we may exercise a sound and sovereign discretion, ought the money to be bestowed?

I approached the consideration of this question with a strong leaning in favor of the insurance companies. Their argument is a very simple one. On well-known principles of law, an underwriter who has paid for property destroyed by the cause against which he insures is entitled to be substituted to all other rights or remedies which the owner may have to reimbursement for his loss. He owns what may be saved from the property. He succeeds to every rightful demand against wrong-doers, whether individuals or nations. These underwriters insured against capture. The vessels were captured. The money in the hands of the United States is the result of the prosecution of a rightful claim by an appropriate remedy against a wrongdoer who caused the loss. The underwriter, therefore, has the same right to it that the owner would in case he had not been insured.

If this argument be sound in all its parts the claim of the insurance companies is established.

I feel bound to say further, Mr. President, that the inclination in their favor has been strengthened in my mind by much that has been said by their antagonists. If there is anything which would induce a man with legal or judicial instincts to set his teeth, it is the character of some of the arguments with which these claimants have been assailed for the past seven years. It is said that they are rich; that they have made money by the misfortunes of their countrymen; that they are trying to get "up to their armpits" in the national Treasury; that they have employed able and famous counsel.

These companies seek no gratuity. I have never heard that one of them asks this money as a bounty. They claim it as a right. If it is theirs, it is theirs; if not, they disappear from the list of claimants. They defend their right to it by a simple, open, straightforward argument, an argument powerful enough to convince the understanding, the unbiased understanding, of some of the first lawyers of the Senate. Certainly their occupation is an honorable one. That nation must have a low rank among civilized states which should discourage the business of marine insurance in time of war. They are to be dealt with as any good citizen would be dealt with who should claim title to a piece of land in the possession of the United States. The facts they allege are to be inquired into. The questions of law which arise on these facts are to be discussed and decided. A function more purely judicial in its nature never devolves on the Congress than that which the insurance companies invoke. If they are right there is no room in the case for discretion.

On the other hand, we ought equally to repel the suggestion from the underwriters that the United States will be dishonored by any decision to which Congress on full consideration may come. The United States are just. Congress is just. The Senate is just. If we refuse to give effect to this alleged trust, it will be because in our judgment no trust is established by the case. It would be as proper for a complainant, seeking to enforce a trust in a court of equity, to urge that the court would dishonor itself if it decide against him as to say that we cannot come to a particular result in dealing with this difficult and complicated case without "doing violence to our self-respect and forfeiting our good name among the nations," and that "no man having a just perception of right would hesitate in condemning so flagrant a breach of good faith and common honesty."

The claim by the United States against Great Britain was a claim for damages which resulted from the omission by Great Britain of a public duty of government imposed on her by international law. Nations at war cannot enter the territory of nations who are neutral to protect themselves against the hostile acts of their adversaries committed on the neutral territory. It follows that the neutral itself is bound to such protection so far as reasonable precaution can effect it. Neutral nations have therefore no right to permit their territories to be used as a base of warlike operations; they have no right to permit ships of war to be fitted out in their ports; they have no right to permit armies to be recruited in their territory for hostile operations by land. If they had, it would follow that the belligerent must protect himself against such acts, and must have the right in so doing to convert the neutral's dominions into the theater of war if necessary. But what the neutral is bound to is not absolute prevention, but due diligence.

The liability, therefore, of Great Britain, which was the cause of action at Geneva, was an omission of a public duty, a duty of Government. No act injurious to any public or private person was imputed to her. She only failed to act.

In the next place, what was it that occurred which would not have occurred but for such failure? The destruction of certain vessels by an act of war.

Now, sir, nothing is better settled than that for neither of these two things, for the neglect of a public duty or for the act of war which that neglect made possible, would any private citizen have, either by municipal or international law, any right or remedy whatever against anybody. He could have none under such circumstances against his own Government, none against a foreign government, none against a fellow-citizen, none against a foreigner. The omission of public duties—I do not speak of exceptional cases created by express statute—furnishes no ground of individual claim. If this neglect had been that of our own officers, if the Alabama had escaped from New York or from a ship-yard on the Delaware, no citizen could have maintained a claim against a negligent district attorney or marshal, or been heard to demand redress of the Government. Still less was it ever heard that such demand could be urged against another State.

Still further: the act by which these vessels were destroyed was an act of lawful war, out of which no claim can arise for a private injury. When a soldier or sailor in the service of a State with which any country is at war injures any person or property by acts of war, no civil or criminal responsibility attaches to him. This is equally true of a rebellion when the rebellious combination is treated as a belligerent and is encountered in war. The Government of the United States made war upon the confederates, and in a thousand ways recognized the fact that the rebels were making war upon them. From the condition of belligerency results the legality of every act of public hostile force, as between the citizen and the person committing it. The liability of the latter is for treason. When the rebellion is put down those who gave aid and comfort to it may be punished for the treason if the Government see fit. But their acts of war, as between them and private citizens, were as lawful as the due and orderly levy of an execution by a sheriff.

If, therefore, Great Britain had had a court into which she permitted all persons, whether aliens or citizens, to come as suitors to prosecute demands against her, and these ship-owners had asked indemnity for these losses there, she would have given them two perfect and conclusive answers: "You have no claim, because no claim by any law, international or municipal, can arise to an individual against any nation or any citizen for a mere omission of a public duty. You have no claim, because your loss was by an act of lawful war, which, as between you and the person who inflicted it, was rightful."

Let us take these considerations with us in examining the propositions on which the claim of the underwriters rests. Most of them, as stated by the learned and able Senator from Illinois, have my full assent. But he has failed to make the important distinctions which I think ought to be made, and which, when made, render the principles he so clearly and correctly states inapplicable.

The Senator from Illinois states in various forms, sometimes in his own language, sometimes in language borrowed from eminent jurists, that the payment of the loss transfers to the underwriters all claim for indemnity, whether the remedy for that claim be by process in law or equity, by application to the justice of the nation of which the loser is a citizen, or by compelling amends from foreign nations. He cites and adopts the language of Mr. Justice Field, in Erwin vs. The United States, 7 Otto, 392:

Demands against the Government, if based upon considerations which would be valid between individuals, are property, although there be no court to investigate and pass upon their validity, and their recognition and payment may depend upon the caprice and favor of the Legislature.

This sentence states the doctrine and states the limitation: "Demands against the Government, if based upon considerations which would be valid between individuals."

Every case cited by the Senator from Illinois is a case of direct trespass for which a private person would be held liable in a like case on the ordinary doctrine of respondent superior.

Randall vs. Cochran, 1 Ves., 98, was for an indemnity secured by reprisals against the Spaniards for unjust captures.

Comegys vs. Vasse, 1 Peters, 193, was the case of indemnity secured by treaty for like captures.

Erwin vs. United States, 7 Otto, 392, held that a claim against the Government for the proceeds in the Treasury of the United States of cotton captured and sold passed to an assignee in bankruptcy.

Phelps vs. McDonald, 9 Otto, 298, was to a like effect. That was a claim by a British subject resident here for damage for the unlawful burning of his cotton by our troops.

The Senator from Illinois concludes his citation of authorities by very accurately stating the doctrine:

It thus appears to be settled by the highest judicial authority in this country that the claim of a party for goods taken by this or a foreign government, though it can only be made available by legislative enactment or negotiation in his behalf, is a right and interest attached to and growing out of the goods.

The claim presented by the United States at Geneva is commonly and quite conveniently spoken of as a claim for the acts of certain confederate cruisers. But this is not an accurate statement. The claim is for the omission on the part of the British government to take certain precautions which were required of them as neutrals by international obligation. That this is a practical and not a fanciful distinction is seen when we reflect that the British liability to us had already arisen before the capture of a single vessel. When a rebel cruiser left a British port, having been fitted out in violation of the obligation of public law, Great Britain having failed to exercise due preventive diligence, her international liability was complete. The extent of the injury done to our commerce by such cruiser concerns only the measure of damages.

At this moment—

Said Mr. Adams in his famous note to Earl Russell, of September 5 1863—

when one of the iron-clad vessels is on the point of departure from the kingdom on its hostile errand against the United States, I am honored with the reply of your lordship to my notes of the 11th, 16th, and 25th of July, and of the 14th of August. I trust I need not express how profound is my regret at the conclusion to which Her Majesty's government have arrived. It would be superfluous in me to point out to your lordship that this is war.

Let me repeat. The claim against Great Britain grew out of no act upon her part whatever. Her government omitted to take the proper precaution to prevent the fitting out and arming in her ports of ships which were employed by the confederacy for hostile purposes. This was a continuing neglect, and in the absence of such precautions the cruisers issued from her ports and destroyed the vessels these companies had insured. Now, is it not clear that for such an omission of a public duty no claim would ever have arisen as between individuals?

Suppose the loss had been of goods of an American in a warehouse in Liverpool, insured against fire. If an officer of the British government had by its orders set fire to the goods, compensation, whether enforced by the owner by suit or recovered on application to the British government with or without the intervention of our arms, would belong to the underwriter who had paid the loss. Suppose a like destruction of goods so insured by fire set in the Saint Albans raid. In one case the British government does the act and is directly responsible. In the other, the act is done by belligerents and the British government, owing no duty to foreign citizens, is under direct obligation only to our Government; and is no more responsible to an individual than it would be to a man robbed in the streets of London if it had failed to furnish adequate police force. In the one case the sovereign is injured by the wrong done to his subject; in the other the subject is injured by the omission of the duty to the sovereign.

Any person who will read the case of the United States, the argument of her counsel, and the opinions of the arbitrators, it seems to me, will be satisfied that it was the obligation to the United States alone that was enforced. The claim is put in all these discussions on both sides as a claim for failure by Great Britain in "due diligence." Mr. Adams cites lexicographers to show that the word "due" means "that which is owed," "due from one to another" "owed to some other party" "which that party may claim as its right." Opinion, pages 142, 143. "When a neutral government is bound," he says, "to use due diligence in regard to certain things, it incurs an obligation to some external party." He proceeds further to speak of it as "the diligence due by her as a neutral to the United States as a belligerent." (Page 145.)

The United States maintain, as matter of fact, that the British government was guilty of want of due diligence in permitting, or not preventing the equipment, construction, &c., of confederate men-of-war in the ports of Great Britain; that such acts of commission or omission on the part of the British government constituted violation of the international obligation of Great Britain toward the United States, and that thus and therefore Great Britain became responsible to the United States for injuries done to them. (Page 17.)

Again, Mr. Evarts, in his colloquy with Lord Chief-Justice Cockburn, page 450, distinctly repudiates the suggestion that the American claim is based on or confined to the acts of any cruiser as the foundation of the demand:

We are not calling into judgment the authorities of this or that place. We are calling into judgment the British nation. It is a question of due diligence or not of the nation in all its conduct in providing, or not providing, for the situation, and in preparing, or not preparing, its officials to act upon suitable knowledge.

Later in his argument, page 454, Mr. Evarts deals with the British claim that the fitting out of a cruiser which goes out unarmed, although an offense against municipal law, is not a violation of neutrality. He says:

There is no act that the law of nations prohibits within the neutral territory that is not a hostile act. The law of nations prohibits it, the law of nations punishes it, the law of nations exacts indemnity for it only because it is a hostile act.

Indeed, Mr. Evarts begins his discussion of the question of due diligence, page 443, by stating the position of Great Britain in substance to be—

That this was a matter not of international duty, not of international obligation, and not to be judged of in the court of nations as a duty due by one nation, Great Britain, to another nation, the United States.

And by affirming that that question is expressly concluded by the three rules of the treaty:

The interesting question is, whether the nation is supplied with adequate legislation, if that is to furnish the only means for the exercise of international duty. If it is not so supplied, that is a fault as between the two nations; if it is so supplied, and the powers are not properly exercised, that is equally a fault as between the two nations. The course of the American argument is to show that, either on the one or the other of the horns of this dilemma, the actual conduct of the British Government must be impaled.

Undoubtedly, direct relations may arise between American citizens and foreign nations. We may hold their bonds. We may contract with them. Like other bodies corporate engaged in various business concerns, they may, through their servants, commit torts or cause injuries by their negligence. In such cases direct obligations may doubtless be created for which direct remedies may, at the discretion of the foreign state, be afforded. Such obligations may in many cases be assigned, and may in appropriate cases become legally or equitably vested in an insurer. The government of the nation to which the citizen belongs has no concern with such a case, unless a refusal to do justice justifies its interposition according to the law of nations, as the guardian of its subjects. Such claims do not arise under the law of nations, but arise under contracts or under municipal law, or from those general principles of justice and right which underlie all the transactions of mankind with each other. But these claims grow out of international law, a code which regulates the duties of nations to each other, under which no individual has either rights, duties, or responsibilities. They are claims not growing out of contract, not for property destroyed or injured by a foreign nation or its servants, not for injuries traceable to any single act, but for the failure to perform an international duty extending over an indefinite period of time, the duty of exercising due diligence to prevent certain illegal and hostile acts by a belligerent on the territory of the neutral.

The distinction which I have stated is recognized in our legislation. Revised Statutes, section 5335, re-enacting the statute of 30th January, 1799, provides:

Every citizen of the United States, whether actually resident or abiding within the same, or in any foreign country, who, without the permission or authority of the Government, directly or indirectly, commences or carries on any verbal or written correspondence or intercourse with any foreign government, or any officer or agent thereof, with an intent to influence the measure or conduct of any foreign government, or of any officer or agent thereof, in relation to any disputes or controversies with the United States, or to defeat the measures of the Government of the United States; and every person, being a citizen of, or resident within, the United States, and not duly authorized, who counsels, advises, or assists in any such correspondence, with such intent, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, and by imprisonment during a term not less than six months, nor more than three years; but nothing in this section shall be construed to abridge the right of a citizen to apply, himself or his agent, to any foreign government or the agents thereof for redress of any injury which he may have sustained from such government, or any of its agents or subjects.

Now, suppose we were at war with France and a fleet of transports were to land a French army at Quebec, which should be there organized and equipped, and should thence march across Canada and invade New York, England taking no steps to interfere, would every citizen whose farm should be ravaged have his separate claim, and be entitled to make his separate terms with Great Britain? Could he, without incurring the penalties of the statute, undertake to thwart or interfere with the policy of his Government in obtaining redress? Would indemnity to such citizen by Great Britain deprive the United States of her just and lawful cause of war, to be taken advantage of at her discretion?

I fully concede that an individual whose property is destroyed by the lawless act of a foreign government, or its agents, may have in many cases a claim for compensation. His remedy for that claim may be imperfect. He may obtain compensation by individual application to the justice of the foreign state as in many instances of foreign citizens whose property was taken or destroyed by our armies in the late war; he may obtain compensation through negotiations conducted by his own government; he may obtain redress through reprisal. In all these cases, an underwriter who has paid the loss is substituted to his right. The same principle applies to the case of the citizen whose property is destroyed by the lawless act of his own government, or its officers. But in no case is there a remedy to a citizen against foreign governments, against his own government, or against public officers, for a mere neglect of a duty of government. In no case does a capture or destruction by act of war create a claim on the part of the owner for compensation.

The insurance companies then cannot be subrogated to the claims of private owners, for the simple reason that no private owner ever had a claim against anybody to which they can be subrogated. The ship-owners suffered by war. Through Great Britain's neglect the war was carried on in a mode and place which otherwise might have been beyond the power of the belligerent. But the war and the negligence were alike offenses against the United States, and against them alone.

Did anything happen at Geneva which bound the United States in equity or in honor to hold this fund as trustee for one party or excused them from listening to the prayer of any other party? It is said that the United States acted as attorney or trustee for several classes of claimants and recovered damages awarded by the court for one class, while the same decree rejected the claim for the other classes, and that the latter are estopped and concluded by the adjudication from further demand. The Senator from Illinois puts it in this way:

We did insist upon the justice and validity of the insurance claims; and, having received the money awarded in satisfaction of them, how can we, without doing violence to our self-respect and forfeiting our good name among the nations, refuse to appropriate it to the specific uses for which we claimed and received it? Can A, as the representative and trustee of B, receive from C moneys on the claim of B and then withhold them from the latter on the ground that the claim was unjust, although C makes no reclamation for them? The Government in all its relations is bound scrupulously to adhere to those rules of fair dealing which should control the transactions of men. * * * It is true that property was destroyed on the high seas by other confederate cruisers, and that an enhanced premium for insurance was exacted by reason of the peculiar hazards to which American commerce was exposed. It has been urged that the fund should be distributed to the parties who by either of these ways incurred loss or sustained damage. The obvious answer is that their right to the indemnity was submitted to the tribunal of our own selection, and its decision adverse to them is final and conclusive.

This position as one to be taken by the United States seems absolutely ludicrous when we recall the history of the proceedings at Geneva. It is well known that the concluding chapter of the original case of the United States, setting forth the so-called indirect claims, threw all England into a frenzy. Her press, with great unanimity, threatened not to proceed under the treaty if these claims were payable. When the tribunal assembled at Geneva, on the 15th of June, Great Britain asked an adjournment for several months. Mr. Davis, the American agent, reports that Lord Tenterden, the British agent, had previously met him "in a spirit of unreserve," and left on his mind the conviction that the judicial solution of the difficulty which the tribunal afterward adopted would be accepted by the British government.

I had already—

discussed with General Cushing the probability of adjusting these differences by the action of the tribunal. Before the tribunal convened again steps were taken for removing the difficulty through the action of that body. In the proceedings which followed we acted as a unit on our side. Happily they resulted in a solution by the tribunal which proved to be acceptable to both governments. The arbitrators announced their opinion that the claims known as the indirect claims did not constitute, on principles of international law applicable to such cases, good and sufficient foundation for an award of compensation or a computation of damages between nations.

The agent thereupon, by direction of our Government, announced to the tribunal that—

The above-mentioned claims will not be further insisted upon, and may be excluded from consideration in the award.

The Secretary of State, in giving this instruction, observed:

This is the attainment of an end which our Government had in view in the putting forth of those claims. We had no desire for a pecuniary reward, but desired an expression by the tribunal as to the liability of a neutral for claims of this character.

It is now sought to set up the judgment so obtained as a conclusive answer to the prayers of the claimants so excluded when addressed to their government.

An agent, a trustee, desiring to diminish the award to his cestui que trust on account of the advantage to be gained to himself in future in some other matter! Why, that is at once a failure of duty which destroys all value in the judgment. It becomes for every purpose of settling the rights of the beneficiary a judgment into which fraud has entered. Just test the proposition of the Senator from Illinois in the light shed upon the transaction by this one sentence. The agent, the advocate, the trustee, declares: "I did not mean or desire in presenting this demand to the court that it should prevail. I had an advantage of my own to gain by its rejection. I had a private understanding with the tribunal that it should be rejected." Now he proposes that the agent, or to use his own phrase, "the representative and trustee," should turn upon his client and cestui que trust, hold up the decree as a shield, and inform him that as between them his claim is barred by the judgment so obtained. I wonder how long an advocate serving his clients by such methods would retain his office in any court over which the Senator should be called to preside?

The United States were placed in no such degrading attitude. On the contrary, from the beginning to the end our Government did everything in its power that there should be no doubt in any mind of its absolute right to dispose of the fund which might be recovered according to its own sense of justice.

Mr. Cushing congratulated himself and his associates that they had "subordinated all personal considerations to the single object of winning a great cause." How ludicrous, how disgraceful such a boast in the mouths of counsel who had represented the trustee of persons who suffered loss by the exculpated cruisers or the payment of war premiums.

Certainly, Mr. President, our Government did everything in its power to prevent this relation of trustee from arising. It distinctly refused when demanding and receiving the money to accept it on behalf of any private claimant. Mr. Fish, the Secretary of State, gave the following instructions to the counsel:

The President desires to have the subject discussed as one between two governments. In the discussion of this question and in the treatment of the entire case you will be careful not to commit the Government as to the disposition of what may be awarded. The Government wishes to hold itself free to decide upon the rights and claims of insurers upon the termination of the case. If the value of the property captured or destroyed be recovered in the name of the Government, the distribution of the amount recovered will be made by this Government without commitment as to the mode of distribution.

These instructions were obeyed to the letter. The counsel conveyed the demand of their Government to the tribunal in these words:

These claims are preferred by the United States as a nation against Great Britain as a nation, and are to be so computed and paid, whether awarded as a sum in gross, under the seventh article of the treaty, or awarded for assessment of amounts under the twelfth article.

In giving and in obeying these instructions the representatives of the United States were observing the distinction made in the treaty of Washington itself. The first article of that treaty recites that—

Whereas differences have arisen between the Government of the United States and the government of Her Britannic Majesty, and still exist, growing out of the acts committed by the several vessels which have given rise to the claims generally known as the "Alabama claims:"

Now, in order to remove and adjust all such claims on the part of the United States, and to provide for the speedy settlement of such claims, the high contracting parties agree, &c.

Article 12 provides:

The high contracting parties agree that all claims on the part of corporations, companies, or private individuals, citizens of the United States, not being claims growing out of the acts of the vessels referred to in article 1 of this treaty * * * shall be referred, &c.

This difference is carefully heeded throughout the whole treaty. The arbitrators who met at Geneva, on neutral territory, were "to decide all questions that shall be laid before them on the part of the United States and Her Britannic Majesty, respectively." They deposited the archives of the tribunal among the archives of the council of state of the canton of Geneva.

The commissioners, under article 12, on the other hand, were to meet at Washington, were to hear counsel as to every separate claim, and to make a separate award in writing as to each claim.

The opinion of Sir Alexander Cockburn, the British arbitrator, can be inferred from his judgment in the case of Rustomjee vs. The Queen. 1 Q. B. D., 487, in which he says:

The notion that the Queen of this country in receiving a sum of money in order to do justice to some of her subjects to whom injustice would otherwise be done, becomes the agent of those subjects seems to me really too wild a notion to require a single word of observation beyond that of emphatically condemning it. In like manner to say that the sovereign becomes the trustee for subjects in whose behalf money has been received by the Crown appears to me equally untenable.

It is said that England will have cause of complaint if we reject the theory that the United States are trustees. How can this be said in the face of the declaration of her prime minister made when defending the treaty just after its ratification? Mr. Gladstone said to the House of Commons:

It appears to be implied that the government submitted the claims of certain persons not subjects of Her Majesty to arbitration. This is altogether a mistake. No claims of individuals have been submitted to arbitration in relation to the Alabama. What was submitted to arbitration was entirely a question between the two governments.

The highly respectable and learned court organized under the statute of 1874 repeatedly held that that statute repudiated altogether the doctrine that the United States holds this money in trust for the persons whose claims were presented at Geneva. Thus in Bateman vs. The United States Judge Porter says:

It has been more than once remarked in opinions heretofore delivered that the United States declined to receive the money due by Great Britain encumbered by any obligation to pay it to any class of claimants, but reserved the right to dispose of every part of it according to its own sovereign pleasure. When Congress entered upon the legislation necessary for a distribution of the money that body was untrammelled by any agreement, express or implied, in regard to the kind and mode of distribution. * * * It is true that claims of this nature are not to be found in the schedules presented at Geneva, but this is of little importance. Congress did not direct us to determine what claims were presented at Geneva. If this had been the object of the act much trouble might have been saved to the claimants and to the court. We have allowed many claims never preferred at Geneva. We have excluded some and reduced the amount of many more which were there presented. Congress required us to decide upon the amount and validity of the claims presented in this court and to see to it that these were decided according to the principles of law and the merits of the cases themselves.

See also Rhind vs. The United States; Secretary of the Navy vs. The United States.

Why, Mr. President, the bill proposed by the Judiciary Committee, the statute of 1874, every measure put forward in behalf of the insurance companies, practically abandon the doctrine of trust and of ownership. The court created in 1874, which this bill seeks to revive, provides for a new hearing of the claims upon new proofs. It does not limit the remedy to the claims presented at Geneva or to the amount there estimated for those claims. If the theory now urged be sound, by what right can we demand new proof from any owner or underwriter of a claim which was there presented? By what right, if you are trustee, can you exclude foreign corporations? By what right can you let in war premiums at all? The statute of New York, the State where the largest of these insurance companies are domiciled—a statute said by the Senator from Ohio to have been procured at their request—abandons the doctrine of ownership and of trust and seeks to bestow this money in accordance with their understanding of what is equitable.

Chapter 614 of the New York statutes of 1873 is this:

If any marine insurance company, organized under the laws of this State, having paid a loss, shall receive a sum derived from the Geneva award by way of reimbursement for that loss, it shall be lawful for such company to divide the net amount so received, after deducting the expenses and liabilities relating thereto, among the persons or parties who paid premiums and suffered by the payment of the original loss, or were prevented from receiving so much as they would otherwise have received by occasion of that loss, instead of dividing the same among the more recent scripholders or dealers with such company; such division to be in the form of an extra dividend or extra dividends upon the plan contemplated by the charter of such company, subject to all just claims for debts and liabilities, and payable to the same persons, or their representatives, and in like manner as the money from which the loss was originally paid would have been payable if the loss had not been borne by the company; and the action of the board of directors or trustees in ascertaining the amount and making such extra dividend or dividends shall have the like force and effect as their action in making and declaring dividends under the charter.

If these claims be property, to which the insurance companies have succeeded by subrogation, the purchasers of their stock in the market since the losses were paid have acquired an interest in them, as in all the other assets of the company. Some of these corporations are said to be bankrupt. These claims, on their theory, belong to their creditors. With what pretense of justice, to say nothing of constitutional authority, can the Legislature of New York vindicate this statute, if there be any vested rights whatever in this fund?

It is true that the United States presented the fact and the extent of individual losses to the tribunal at Geneva, and had called the attention of Great Britain to them year after year in diplomatic intercourse. It is also true that while other elements of damage were rejected, these were considered and allowed. There are many cases where matters may be considered as measuring or enhancing damages which do not of themselves constitute the foundation of a suit. In an action of trespass for breaking and entering his dwelling-house, a son or brother might recover larger damages because the trespasser by boisterous conduct and noise had increased the illness of a sick mother or sister; and that might in a similar case be the only thing for which substantial damages would be assessed. Yet the damages recovered would be wholly the property of the plaintiff, to which the suffering member of his household would have no claim whatever.

The doctrine of the insurance companies comes finally to this, that when a nation receives of another indemnity for hostile acts, it is bound to pay over the proceeds to citizens injured by the war if their injuries were considered or computed in estimating the amount to be paid. By this logic Germany must pay over to its citizens injured the amount of their losses by the war from the indemnity received from France. It can make no difference whether the losses were precisely estimated, measured, or were considered and provided for in some general way. If the fact that the citizen suffered in his property was considered in the indemnity the argument is applicable.

If I am right in my conviction that the United States holds this fund untrammelled by any trust, then we have a right in dealing with it to exercise a sound discretion. We have a right to act upon our own belief, not fettered by any technical or artificial logic. We will look to see what was practically the fault of England, and who were practically the losers by that fault.

Why is it that the losers by marine dangers occasioned by the fault of England stand differently from any other class of American citizens who suffered by the war? It is because from the beginning the rights of these citizens were left unprotected and unredressed, by design and of purpose, for the general public benefit. We had cause of war against England long before the Shenandoah left Melbourne. We did not make it and did not threaten it because we needed our armies to put down the rebellion and our navies to maintain the blockade, and we could not have two wars on our hands at once. We bought peace with England for the time being at the expense of these men. Some of their claims which our Government deemed just were extinguished by the treaty before we reached the tribunal. Some of them were thrown over before the tribunal to save the treaty. We bought and paid for with their loss immense national advantages. Their wrong has been used by the United States to buy its future peace and its perpetual neutral immunity.

I think, therefore, that we should indemnify the owners of all property lost at sea by any cruisers which ever were in a British port after the Queen's proclamation conceding belligerency at sea. They suffered a loss arising from a belligerency which that proclamation in fact created. I think, also, we should indemnify the owners of property for war premiums paid for its insurance. These persons carried on business as carriers or merchants at great disadvantage in competition with foreigners, who ran no risk of capture. The premiums could not therefore be added to the freight or the price of the goods, and the insurance only partially and imperfectly removed this disadvantage. I do not think that underwriters who conducted their business at a profit have any claim to the bounty of the Government. This is not because they are corporations; not because they are rich and prosperous; not because in other transactions they have made up their losses in these. It is because, if I am right in my view that the foundation of this whole claim is the omission by Great Britain of a duty continuing over a long space of time, the profits and the losses of the underwriters are attributable to precisely the same thing. Every loss for which the underwriter paid was due to the criminal neglect of England. Every profit by an insurance at 25 per cent. on a ship which escaped, on which the insurance would have been 5 only but for the war risk, was due to precisely the same thing. The insurer in that case made 20 per cent. by the same neglect of England. It is not the rebel cruiser, but the criminal negligence of Great Britain, extending over years of time, to have suitable laws, to give suitable instructions to her officers, to keep herself informed of what was going on in all her ports over the globe, to which loss and gain are alike to be imputed.

We have, then, in our Treasury a sum of money received by America as the result of claims presented against Great Britain not in the mode in which governments present their citizens' claims, but in the mode in which governments present their own; adjudged by the tribunal which awarded it as due to the nation and not to individuals; understood by the party who paid it as paid to the nation and not to individuals; accepted when we received it with the stipulation that it was to be held subject to our discretion, without obligation to any person whatever; received as compensation for injuries which by international law and by express treaty are declared to be national injuries, and which, either by international or municipal law, could not be ground of claim to an individual against any nation, corporation, or citizen whatever.

Upon whom shall we bestow it? Let it be paid over, not to those who have made vast gains by the circumstances from which it came, but to the actual losers whom the Government by design left unprotected, and with whose losses it bought for itself vast and incalculable advantages, alike in the darkest period of the war and in the remotest future in peace.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair now recognizes the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.]

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I desire to take the floor on this question when it comes again before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will be recognized.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment offered by me some time ago reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. RANDOLPH, which was to substitute for the original bill the following:

Whereas a board of Army officers was convened by order of the President, by special orders numbered 78, dated "Headquarters of the Army, Washington, April 12, 1878," to examine, in connection with the record of the trial by court-martial of Major-General Porter, such new evidence relating to the merits of said case as was then on file in the War Department, together with such other evidence as might be presented to said board, and to report, with the reasons for their conclusion, what action, if any, in their opinion, justice required should be taken on said application by the President, and said board reported that they had made a very thorough examination of all the evidence presented, and bearing in any manner upon the merits of the case, in addition to that which was before the court-martial; and also reported with entire unanimity, and without doubt in their own minds, with the reasons for their conclusions, that, in their opinion, justice required such action as might be necessary to restore Major-General Fitz-John Porter to the positions of which that sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from the service; and

Whereas the President did heretofore transmit the proceedings and conclusions of the board to Congress with a message declaring that, as he was without power in the absence of legislation to act upon the recommendation of the report further than by submitting the same to Congress, the said proceedings and conclusions were transmitted for the information of Congress, and for such action as in their wisdom should seem expedient and just: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Fitz-John Porter a colonel of infantry in the Army of the United States, his commission to bear date January 1, 1863, with the pay and emoluments of that rank from that date until he shall be retired according to law or as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That at any time after the granting of such commission it shall be lawful for the President to place said Fitz-John Porter upon the retired list of the Army, with the pay of a retired colonel of infantry.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, during seventeen years the case of General Fitz-John Porter has been within executive consideration, has received the attention of Congress, and has ever been of interest to the general public. In this respect it has been almost without parallel. The records of military history recite numberless cases of courts-martial where brave men and good soldiers failing in duty have met with merited punishment, whose names have passed from discussion and remembrance. That General Porter's case should have survived amid the countless number of apparently analogous cases is in itself remarkable; but that it has held its conspicuous place in public discussion notwithstanding the stirring events of contemporaneous years is most suggestive. There has been no year of all, cruel in its length to General Porter, nor seasons within those years, opening with hope and closing with disappointment, that has not known some urgent discussion of his case. It has ever been conspicuous in its character—to some because of their understanding of its cruel injustice to a loyal citizen and brave soldier, and to others, perhaps the multitude of unthinking men, an increasing perplexity.

The causes that have conspired to keep General Porter's cause in public view are variously reckoned. He had been a brave soldier and an eminently successful one up to the time of his dismissal from the public service. His military record had been most noticeable.

Educated at West Point, he had entered upon active service within a year of the completion of his studies. Assigned to duty in the Mexican war, he had participated in the battles of Cerro Gordo, Contreras, and Molino del Rey; had taken part in the sieges of Vera Cruz and Chapultepec, and participated in the capture of the City of Mexico. For his services in these battles he was twice breveted. He was also wounded in the memorable struggle that resulted in the downfall of the Mexican capital. At the close of the war General Porter was assigned to duty at West Point, and the records of that institution show with what fidelity and intelligence he performed his duties.

When the Utah campaign was organized, in 1857, General Scott named, and General Albert Sidney Johnston, with the instinct of a soldier, accepted, Porter as his chief-of-staff, and, with other brave officers and men of the command, he encountered the perils, hardships, and sufferings of that arduous campaign.

At the instance of General Scott, Major Porter was selected, in the early part of 1860, as the proper officer to proceed to Charleston and examine the defenses of that city. This duty he faithfully performed, and it was largely due to his recommendation that General Robert Anderson was placed in command and preparations were made which rendered possible the subsequent gallant defense of Fort Sumter.

Again selected by General Scott for difficult and delicate duty, he brought from Texas the only troops saved from that department and applied them to the security of Key West and Tortugas.

When active hostilities began in 1861, Porter was assigned to the duty of opening communication, which was then closed in every direction, between Harrisburgh and Washington. During this interval of interruption, however, important dispatches sent from Saint Louis, addressed to the War Department, or to the General-in-Chief at Washington, were necessarily detained at Harrisburgh. These were taken into possession by General Porter, who, recognizing their consequence and knowing the impossibility of having them forwarded, quickly assumed the responsibility of using the names of Secretary Cameron and General Scott, ordered the Federal officers at Saint Louis to muster into the United States service the Missouri quota of volunteers, and through them protected the Federal property. These orders were promptly obeyed by Captain Lyon, then in charge at Saint Louis, and the testimony of such men as General Frank Blair, and others of equal authority, is to the effect that this assumption of responsibility and promptness of action did more to save Missouri to the Union cause than all other acts of that period.

It is needless to say that, although General Porter acted in this emergency without orders, he was sustained by the authorities at Washington, and highly complimented by them for his nerve and patriotism.

The Fifth Army Corps, whose name and history will be known and gratefully remembered as long as that of any portion of the Army of the United States, was formed during the year 1862 with the understanding that General Porter should be placed at its head. It contained a large portion of the regular force of the United States Army, to which thoroughly disciplined element were added volunteer troops speedily trained to become the peers of their comrades of the regular service, and thus was created the famous organization whose services, beginning with the first eventful battles of the war, appropriately ended with the closing scene at Appomattox.

The Fifth Army Corps occupied a position of especial honor in the conduct of the Peninsula campaign, fighting the battles of New Bridge, Hanover Court-House, Mechanicsville, Gaines's Mill, and Malvern—and it was Fitz-John Porter who commanded that corps in all these battles. It is needless to speak of them as being among the most sanguinary of the war. At Gaines's Mill, alone, so fierce and stubborn was the struggle for mastery, that of the twenty-seven thousand brave men who entered that conflict under Porter's immediate command, nearly ten thousand of them lay dead or wounded at the battle's close.

It was the Fifth Army Corps, posted by General Porter in person, that took possession of Malvern Hill and held it through hours that, by friend and foe, have been deemed among the most terrible in the history of the war. A series of attacks, such as had not been witnessed in any preceding battles, left Porter where the enemy found him—in possession of Malvern. When night fell upon that day of carnage the slope of Malvern Hill ran with the blood of battle. I have heard scores of soldiers, Federal and confederate, say that from summit to base the hillside was covered with dead and dying. Certain it is, sir, that it was Fitz-John Porter's corps made that last and most terrible battle of the campaign of the Peninsula. No wonder that his commanding general asked that the highest position then vacant should be given to him! No wonder that he should have said that if still higher positions were known to the public service he would recommend General Porter for all that the Government could give him!

The Fifth Army Corps had among its commanders, under Porter, men whose names are familiar to every American. McCall, Reynolds, Meade, Buchanan, Morell, Warren, Sykes, Butterfield, were the officers who held command of its divisions and brigades.

It is quite probable that this narration of the personal services of General Porter, antecedent to the time when he stood charged with a foul crime against his comrades and his country, is but the repetition of a story well remembered by intelligent men. I have, as briefly as possible, glanced at his record and that of his command. It will not be forgotten that the men who fought at Malvern, and the officer who commanded them, were the same men and the same officer against whom, a few weeks later, was charged "shameful disobedience," "retreating from the presence of the enemy," "being within sound of a raging battle, and believing that comrades were being driven and defeated, shamefully left them to their fate."

Mr. President, if these charges against General Porter had been founded in fact, I do not believe any discipline would have restrained them from flying to their comrades' assistance without orders, or against orders. I have always regarded the charges as reflecting with almost equal severity upon the brave officers and men who were for the time subordinate to Porter, constituting the Fifth Army Corps. The history of that corps, subsequent to the second battle of Manassas, as well as its splendid antecedent career, gives imperishable evidence of its character and composition.

When, sir, a person stands charged with crime, antecedent history may usually be counted upon to indicate the probabilities of guilt. Undoubtedly men of military distinction have fallen, sacrificing the fame of years and the wealth of public confidence in an hour of temptation. But when this has occasionally happened, as in the conspicuous instance of Benedict Arnold, the public judgment, the judgment of all men of integrity, has been in full accord with that of the tribunal that condemned the culprit. No honest voice was ever raised in Arnold's defense—no patriotic pen has given expression to a word in his behalf. Treason was his crime, as it was the crime charged against Porter; the one fled with conscience, his never-ending tormentor; the other confronted his accusers with conscience, his never-failing support, with justice assuring him of the unerring result.

When General Porter's conviction was announced, careful readers of the proceedings in his trial stood confounded at the unexpected result. Immediately the press of the country, irrespective of political bias, was divided in opinion as to the judgment of the court-martial. Leading statesmen and lawyers, conspicuous for their loyalty and learning, disputed the verdict. Hundreds of officers who had served with and under General Porter as promptly refused to accept its decision. Most of these men had been educated in strict military schools; were jealous to the last degree of the honor of their profession; had attested their faithfulness and loyalty upon hard-fought fields, and bore upon their persons scars of honorable wounds in patriotic service. I have seen volumes of letters from brave and highly-honored soldiers, assuring General Porter of their continued respect for him and faith in his integrity and patriotism.

The army corps which he commanded—the gallant Fifth—through its officers and organizations, during and after the war, over and over again testified their unyielding faith in their first leader, and to their labors and unshaken confidence is largely due a public interest that could not, and would not, ignore the demands of men to whom the country owed so largely.

The public disappointment, not to say dissatisfaction, with the finding of the court-martial in General Porter's case manifested itself in many ways. To some of these I have alluded.

It will not be forgotten that General Porter promptly applied to President Lincoln for the re-opening of his case, and was sustained in his appeals by some of the most prominent men in the country, among whom were Edward Everett, R. C. Winthrop, Amos Lawrence, Gardner Howland Shaw, Henry Wilson, La Fayette S. Foster, Horace Greeley, Governor Curtin, and Ex-Presidents Fillmore and Pierce. Some of these appeals were made to President Lincoln soon after the sentence was announced, and it is upon record that just prior to his death he avowed his determination to reopen the case.

President Lincoln recognized that the conviction had been had at a time of great public excitement, in the midst of repeated disaster to the Union cause, under circumstances calculated to influence the judgment of the best and strongest mind; and admitted the propriety and justice of giving to Porter, with additional and vital evidence at hand, to be weighed in the calmer and cooler days which the conclusion of the war was about to bring, the rehearing he asked for. I know, personally, that President Lincoln intended to grant the rehearing.

General Porter's repeated appeals to the several Executives that have administered the Government since his dismissal from the Army have been sustained by some of the most distinguished jurists in the land. They were to one conclusion, sustaining and re-enforcing Porter's appeal, and agreeing that great injustice and wrong had been done him. There will be found among the documents published by order of the Senate in this case the favorable opinions of Daniel Lord, Charles O'Connor, and Judge Shipman, of New York; of Judge Benjamin R. Curtis, Sidney Bartlett, and Judge Abbott, of Boston, and of Montgomery Blair, himself a member of Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet at the time of the trial and conviction.

Mr. President, I have referred to the antecedents of General Porter prior to his conviction of the great offense of which he stood charged. I could speak of his honorable ancestry, with the fame of which it is to be fairly presumed he would be loath to trifle. I have spoken of his record at the Military Academy, whence he graduated; of his early and distinguished services in the Mexican war; of the hardships he encountered and endured in the memorable Utah campaign; of his prompt, faithful, and intelligent action in all the earlier days of the war; of his assumption of a responsibility, touching the saving of Missouri, which few men of less patriotic instincts and force of character would have encountered; of his gallant record as the commander of the Fifth Army Corps, and of the high state of discipline to which he brought that corps; of his personal courage upon many a field; of his skill, sagacity, and endurance, as displayed in the great battles in which he participated; and I have also spoken of the amazement and perplexity that fell upon the public mind when he was charged with foul crime, tried, and condemned. I have spoken, too, of his ceaseless appeals, seconded by the press, by brave soldiers, by distinguished and loyal jurists, and by eminent gentlemen in every department of the public service, and I have rather suggested than stated that the combination of all these elements and causes had something to do, very much to do, indeed, with the prominence with which this cause has ever been kept before the public mind.

But, Mr. President, there has existed during all these years another cause greater than all others combined, which alone would have sufficed to have kept this case an open one.

General Porter had been charged with the most infamous crime known under the laws of enlightened governments. Stripped of all surplusage the charge that he stood confronted with was that of treason. Reckoned by degrees no grade of treason could have been more despicable in form or malignant in character than that on which he was arraigned.

Part of an imperiled army, intrusted with one of its highest commands, composed of soldiers noted for discipline and courage, and accustomed to danger and death, charged by every honorable consideration with the soldierly use of this force, Porter, in the day of his trial, stood charged with and at the conclusion of his trial was found guilty of treason in the face of the enemy—"retreating from the sound of battle;" "failing to succor those of whom he was a part;" "knowing that defeat had overtaken his comrades in arms, yet raising no hand to succor them"—coldly, cruelly, deliberately sacrificing not only honor, duty, and patriotism, not only the lives of thousands (as was alleged) of his comrades, but placing in imminent jeopardy, perhaps in fatal peril, the cause of his country.

Mr. President, there is not upon record against any man who has held office under this Government a charge of a more damning character than that which Porter had to meet on the day of his trial. He met it with the testimony, in his favor, of every principal officer whose testimony was available in his command. He was confronted by witnesses of whom I shall not now speak. To his own amazement, and to that of thousands of loyal men who knew the evidence in his case, he was convicted of the monstrous crime with which he had been charged.

And then what? Adjudged of this foul crime against his country and dishonor to himself, he was sentenced. And, sir, what was the sentence? That he should die the death of a traitor? That he should be shot to death by the guns of his own soldiers,—men of the corps whose honor and reputation he had betrayed; that by their hands he should be pierced with all the bullets that could be fired into a traitor's miserable body? No! No such sentence: although if the charges had been true in part such a death—or any death that could have been measured out by ingenious cruelty—would have been too small punishment for his offense, this was not the judgment and sentence of the court. The judgment was that, being convicted of treason, he should simply be dismissed from the Army of the United States.

And so, Mr. President, it came to pass when the people of the country read that Fitz-John Porter, charged, tried, and condemned of treason, was sentenced only to dismissal from the Army of the United States, a question arose in the public mind, infinitely more significant, all-pervading, and persistent than anything that the ingenuity of General Porter or his friends could have invented, asking, "Was ever finding so grave with punishment so totally inadequate?"

From the day the charges were first published, but one opinion possessed plain, honest-minded people, and it was that justice demanded Porter's acquittal, or his death.

Thus, sir, to the court-martial's conclusion, more than to all other causes combined, this case has been left at least an unsettled one.

Mr. President, I have before alluded to General Porter's appeals to the Executive. The number and frequency of them are well known to the Senate. It is a noticeable fact they were never refused by administrations past, but they were never granted. It would have been difficult indeed to have given satisfactory public reasons for refusing him. His appeals were not to have his sentence reversed and annulled; not that he should be reinstated in the Army by executive order; not to blot out at the instigation of personal or political influence, by the executive mandate, the record of his alleged offense. No! through all these appeals, some of them as touching as it is possible for pen to write, there is but one cry, simply "to be heard!" simply "to be heard!" Such was this brave man's confidence in the strength and justice of his cause, and such his confident reliance in the unbiased judgment of his countrymen, that he asked no other favor, made no other supplication than to be heard. That single cry, bravely answered at last, has rung through all these years.

In his petition to President Grant, appealing to him as a soldier, he says in substance, "I should be glad to rest the vindication of my name as a soldier and citizen with your examination and judgment of the case." In his communication to General Sherman he says, substantially, "I should be content if my hearing could be had before a board composed of officers like yourself." At all times, and under all circumstances, refusing to be the object of executive clemency, as I have occasion to know, his one cry, ever repeated, was, "to be heard!"

It seems strange that a request so simple and reasonable as this, coming from a person sprung from patriotic blood, and having himself achieved by eminent service so much of fame in his high profession, should have remained so many years without favorable answer.

It is not profitable, perhaps, and I am sure I have no disposition, to enter upon a discussion of the probable reasons delaying General Porter's vindication until a recent period. I think I can understand better now than I might have done in times past why men thought the public service required that such controversy should be delayed, for final decision by the Government, until the advent of calmer days.

Whatever the delaying influences—however considered in the light of his present vindication—the fact is that until a year ago no tribunal was appointed to hear him. The present Executive, after careful consideration, deemed it his duty to appoint a board of officers "to re-examine the case, with a view of suggesting to him what action, if any, public justice demanded" in Porter's behalf. The order reads as follows. But before I read it let me ask the attention of the Senate for a moment to the appeal upon which the executive order was granted. This was Porter's appeal:

To the President:

I most respectfully, but urgently, renew my oft-repeated appeal to have you review my case. I ask it as a matter of long-delayed justice to myself. I renew it upon the ground that public justice cannot be satisfied so long as my appeal remains undecided. My sentence is a continuing sentence, and made to follow my daily life. For this reason, if for no other, my case is ever within the reach of executive as well as legislative interference.

If I do not make it plain I have been wronged, I alone am the sufferer. If I do not make it plain that great injustice has been done me, then I am sure that you, and all others who love right and truth and justice, will be glad that the opportunity for my vindication has not been denied.

It is the old cry "to be heard," expressing anew his complete conviction, not only of the justice of his cause, but of his ability to make manifest that fact. His appeal must have impressed the executive mind, as it certainly did that of the general public. The President's order, which includes the appeal, is as follows:

In order that the President may be fully informed of the facts of the case of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of volunteers, and be enabled to act advisedly upon his application for relief in said case, a board is hereby convened, by order of the President, to examine, in connection with the record of the trial by court-martial of Major General Porter, such new evidence relating to the merits of said case as is now on file in the War Department, together with such other evidence as may be presented to said board; and to report, with the reasons for their conclusions, what action, if any, in their opinion, justice requires should be taken, on said application by the President.

The board detailed by the President consisted of Major-General J. M. Schofield, Brigadier-General A. H. Terry, and Colonel G. W. Getty.

There was but one voice concerning their special fitness for the duty assigned them. In all the Army, with its large number of faithful, intelligent, and distinguished men, I do not know where three officers of superior integrity, intelligence, and professional honor could have been selected. General Schofield, whose name became distinguished during the period of our civil war, and as military governor of Virginia thereafter, also held the position of Secretary of War, and is now intrusted with the command at West Point and superintendence of those who are to become the chief officers in the Army, was first upon this board, and presided over it. General Terry, well known before he joined the Army, in the profession of the law; carrying with him into his new profession, as was conspicuously shown during the proceedings in this court, his legal knowledge and training, as well as his accomplishments as a soldier, was the second member of the board. General Getty, brave, intelligent, and sensitive concerning the honor of the profession of which he is a conspicuous member, now commanding at Fortress Monroe, and in charge of the military school at that point, was the third member.

Thus, it will be observed, two of the three members of the board of inquiry in General Porter's case were selected from positions of especial trust, and were taken from duties of the most delicate character connected with the profession of arms. They were chiefs of departments, so to speak, wherein the youth of the country were being instructed in all that pertains to military life, military duty, and military honor. Least of all could men like these, holding positions of high and peculiar trust, afford to make any mistake in a case of such magnitude. Nor was the position of General Terry scarcely less delicate and responsible. He entered the Army from civil life, and because of his qualifications, conspicuously shown on many occasions, he has been retained in it; had been rapidly promoted; had been placed in high position over others, some of whom had graduated at Government military institutions. He had adopted the profession of arms later in life than most of those who are now his compeers. In forming a judgment, in a military case of the delicacy and importance of General Porter's, General Terry was unquestionably sensible of this fact, that if he made any mistake calculated in the slightest degree to lower the standard of honor or of duty in the profession which he had adopted, peculiar censure would be visited upon him for his error.

It has always seemed to me that the constitution of the board was a singularly fortunate one regarding the public service and its honor.

These were his judges! Men of high position in the profession from which Porter had been dismissed in disgrace; to which he sought to return; in which, should he return improperly or without complete and absolute vindication, he would be a cause of reproach both to the profession and to those whose action should assist him to re-enter it.

These were his judges! Not unprejudiced men, as has transpired, who had formed no opinion in the case, but men who had, with more or less of care in the excitement of war and in the pressure of passing events since the war, occasionally referred to the case, and, concurring in the public judgment or what was supposed to be the public judgment, had felt that somehow or in some way Porter must have been guilty of a great offense, else he would not have been condemned.

These were his judges! Men before whom he came asking not only that they should affirm his asseverations of innocence, but that in the vindication which he sought through them he might be restored to his former rank and position, this being the undoubted logic of a favorable issue.

I think it will be conceded, sir, that few men have ever had to encounter more difficulties in obtaining justice than General Porter in the course of his long, patient, and painful quest.

The report of the board of officers has been submitted to the Senate in various ways and at frequent times. Of those who made it I have already spoken. They knew the weight and value of every word within it; that their decision would encounter somewhat of prejudice, perhaps much of criticism, and that tendency of unreflecting minds, which, craving new matters of interest, prefers to leave the seal of decision upon matters deemed adjudicated.

Mr. President, the volumes before us, connected with this case, indicate to some extent their public importance. They are four in number, containing seventeen hundred pages and over thirty maps. Under the order of the Senate they include every pertinent paper on file in the War Department, and all papers and documents placed in the hands of the Military Committee. They also include the proceedings of the board convened at West Point, who, having had the matter under consideration from June, 1878, until March, 1879, a period of eight months, submitted their report to the President.

The reports of the majority and minority of the committees are also before us. That of the latter asserts in substance—

1. That the proceedings of the original court-martial were not founded in error;
2. That the findings of a court-martial, when approved by authority, are not open to review, and are as conclusive as decisions of the Supreme Court;
3. That the President had no authority in law to organize a commission to examine Porter's case by taking ex parte testimony; and
4. That when a person is out of the Army Congress shall not pay him for services unperformed.

Mr. President, my first answer is that it is now established—

That a grossly inaccurate map of the field of operation, wholly incorrect and delusive as to the position of the troops upon that field, was used and relied upon by the court-martial;

That erroneous and false statements of facts were made by the witnesses against Porter;

That conflicting testimony before the court-martial relating to plans of operations, interpretations of orders, and degrees of responsibility, are now rendered indisputably plain by new and unimpeachable testimony. And notably:

That concerning the time of the delivery of an order "4.30," August 29, upon which the most serious charge against General Porter was sustained by the court-martial, it is now proved, by "unquestionable testimony," that the principal witness against Porter deliberately perjured himself, and a supporting witness confessed to false statements. An attempt to sustain these witnesses, made before the recent board, resulting in failure, compelled the board to dismiss the testimony "as entitled to no weight whatever."

The court-martial condemning Porter was led to believe that less than one-half of the confederate forces were on the field of battle on the 29th of August—the day of Porter's alleged misconduct; that Pope's entire army, exclusive of Porter's corps, was engaged in a severe and doubtful contest; that a flank attack by Porter, on Jackson's force, would have insured his defeat and capture; that Porter was in a position two miles in advance of the place he actually occupied; that McDowell ordered Porter to attack the force in front of him; and that Porter disobeyed that order and allowed a large body of the enemy to pass him unmolested, going to Jackson's assistance, retreating himself to Manassas Junction.

The errors of the court-martial, touching these vital matters, are now made plain. It is undeniably established that Lee's army, comprising all of Jackson's force and all of Longstreet's, save one small division, was on the field on the 29th, and ready for battle, hours before the scattered forces of Pope were prepared; that Porter's corps alone, of the left wing of Pope's army, was in position and ready; that the remainder of the Union army were scattered over a territory not less than nine miles in length, in corps, divisions, and brigades and in no sort of military connection or correspondence; that the chief of one corps (McDowell) was absent and lost in the woods all the night before the battle, and as General Pope testifies in his joint order of the 29th, could not be found till a late hour that morning; that McDowell's division and brigade commanders, some of whom had been assigned to the vital duty of keeping Lee from passing the gap, at Thoroughfare, and reinforcing Jackson, had not only retreated and left the way completely open for Jackson's retreat or Lee's advance, but had failed to have the benefit of the personal presence of General McDowell, or of his orders, during the eventful night of the 28th and the early morning of the 29th of August—he being, as I have remarked, lost in the woods the night before; and from this misfortune, having no other command than that he was able to exercise over himself and the single orderly accompanying him.

In condemning General Porter, the court-martial unquestionably accepted as true the testimony of General Pope and the opinions of General McDowell and other witnesses, relative to the presence and position of Longstreet's forces. That testimony and those opinions are all to one purpose—to prove that Longstreet's force was far away from the field of battle of the 29th of August, and totally beyond supporting distance of Jackson, then confronting the right wing of Pope's army. This belief General Pope expresses in one of his dispatches, when he says: "The indications are that the whole force of the enemy is moving at a pace that will bring him here by to-morrow night (30th) or next day."

When General Pope was writing this dispatch on the morning of the 29th, the enemy of which he wrote even then was gathering on the field in front of him.

It is true that Porter insisted before the court-martial his knowledge of these facts, now conceded, and contended that Longstreet's army had joined Jackson early on the day of the 29th; that this superior force, and not Jackson's, confronted him, and, lying between him and Jackson's rear and flank, awaited all too anxiously, in their selected position, Porter's hoped-for attack.

Against this assertion of Porter's, General Pope testified that Longstreet's army was not in front of Porter, and that no such obstacle, therefore, prevented him from obeying his (Pope's) order to attack Jackson's "rear and flank."

It seems at this day almost incredible that knowledge of the presence in his front of an army of twenty-five thousand men should have been unknown to the commanding-general opposing them, who not only disregarded it in the use and disposition of his own forces, but actually ignored the fact on Porter's court-martial, and for years afterward.

But Porter knew of the enemy in his front, for he had captured some of its scouts, and had already been informed, through a dispatch from General Buford to McDowell, of the near approach of Longstreet's forces. He also knew that the order under which he was acting was given by his chief, miles away from the scene of action, in total ignorance of the facts of the situation; that it was addressed equally to General McDowell and himself, and if that officer, then the superior, and on the field with him, commanding, through their joint forces, twenty-seven thousand men, did not deem it his duty to make the attack, but did deem it his duty to march away to another portion of the field, taking with him nearly three-fourths of the joint force, and leaving Porter in an isolated position with only about nine or ten thousand men, it was manifestly Porter's business not to precipitate a general action unsupported as he was. And to this confession McDowell, after seventeen years, was brought when a witness before the recent board.

It has been adjudged by a competent tribunal that if Porter had taken other action than that which he did it would have been not only "a great blunder but a great crime." It is also the judgment of the same tribunal that "Porter's obedient, subordinate, faithful, and judicious conduct on the 29th of August, 1862, saved the Union Army from disaster."

Surely, Mr. President, I need not enlarge these statements to disprove the assertion that the judgment of the court-martial was not founded in error. Examination has shown its proceedings to be crowded with errors.

As to the second statement of the minority that "the findings of a court-martial, when approved by competent authority, are not open to review, and that they are as final and conclusive as decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States," it is possible, sir, that cheerful acquiescence will be given by the American people in the claim of the minority touching the infallibility of courts-martial; but I am not to be counted upon as among the number acquiescing. They are fully looked upon, and I think properly, as tribunals peculiarly liable to error; and, if so, their findings should be especially open to review.

Why are such courts constituted? To meet the exigencies of war; to set in judgment on those in the military service; to execute speedy justice.

By whom are the members of courts-martial selected? By a single person—the President, general-in-chief, or a subordinate commander; possibly, by one interested to condemn.

Who constitute the members of a court-martial? Impartial men, selected from a large number? No. They must be the peers in rank, at least, when practicable, of the accused; sometimes of under rank, yet just in the atmosphere of promotion, so to speak; frequently men whose judgments have been warped by the jealousies peculiar to the military service; often composed of officers whose own conduct may have been incidentally under review, as was the fact with members of Porter's court-martial; occasionally—not often, I trust—of officers who have had, for the time, to put off the judicial ermine, take the stand of a witness, and thereafter resume judicial functions, as was the case in Porter's trial.

And finally, sir, upon this head, what is the life of this court to whose decision we are to bow in reverent obedience? It is born of the breath of one human being, and dies, after its judgments, at the edict of another.

Chief-Justice Marshall, whose opinion may be respected, although he never sat on a court-martial, says:

What makes us trust our judges? Their independence in office and manner of appointment.

I submit, sir, if this test be applied to courts-martial, we are not called upon to give them our implicit confidence.

Mr. President, I am not a lawyer and not obliged, therefore, by a jealous regard for the honor of that profession, to defend the Supreme Court for what seems to me to be a most uncomplimentary comparison. The judges of that high court are selected with great care by the President of the United States; their fitness, learning, and character pass under critical review by the Senate of the United States before confirmation; and their independence of action is secured by life tenures of office. Is it possible that any proper and respectful comparison can be made between these tribunals?

The third objection of the minority, is that one which pertains to the power of the President to re-examine a case of this description. I do not know that it is important, in considering the merits or demerits of General Porter's case, to inquire especially concerning technical questions of authority under which the reviewing board of officers, exercised their powers. I have no doubt in my own mind as to the right of the Executive to call for the opinion of competent officers in a case of the seriousness of the one under consideration.

Touching this identical question, Mr. Daniel Lord, of New York—as able and loyal as any member of that bar—wrote years ago:

Major-General Porter, Washington City:

DEAR SIR: As your sentence is still being executed it is as much within the reach of the President as any case of pardon from after discovered proof of innocence, and if the President can pardon, and the lesser includes the greater, he may refer it to a board of officers to find out the facts, and the truth, and the justice, on whose report he may act. This must necessarily be so, or a pardon from after proof never could be granted except from mere executive instructed clemency.

Your friend and servant,

DANIEL LORD.

Congress has frequently requested or authorized the President to convene such boards of re-examination; and, notably, within a very recent period, in the case of Surgeon-General Hammond, this body, by a vote of 55 to 1, authorized the President to convene a board of review, and to accept the decision as conclusive, for his action, if he deemed it "right and proper so to do." It is not important, perhaps, but I may state in this connection that the officers who were originally appointed to re-examine the case of Surgeon-General Hammond were the same who examined the case of General Porter. Finding the double duty beyond their ability to perform, they were relieved of the case of Hammond and considered that of Porter.

Whatever opinion may be held by members of this body touching the constitution of the Schofield board, the fact remains that the President carefully considered the propriety of re-examining Porter's case before he ordered the board; that it was constituted; that its members were men of the highest position, intelligence, and integrity; that their deliberations were long, full, patient, and exhaustive; that they heard every witness summoned before them by either the petitioner or by the Government; and that every witness save one, summoned on either side, promptly appeared and fully answered. That one witness was General Pope—Porter's first accuser!

Another objection of the minority of the committee is to the effect that no compensation should be given to a person dismissed from the Army.

My reply to this objection is that Government should not seek to take advantage of its own wrong.

Since I have been a member of the Senate I have had occasion to act upon or to take notice of cases acted upon by Congress not dissimilar in character to that urged for General Porter's relief. Among them are these: Major George A. Armes, Surgeon-General W. A. Hammond, Captain Thomas B. Hunt, and Lieutenant E. R. Clark.

Concerning opposition to one of these cases the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] said:

If you once establish it that no matter what finding of a court-martial may happen to get approved there is no possible appeal here, I say God help some officers of the Army in future years.—Congressional Record of April 18, 1878, page 2633.

If we are willing to say a thing was unjust, do not let us stop at half measures.—Ibid.

It is a wholesome and good thing to hold the power of review in Congress, to exercise it of course always with discretion; but in meritorious cases to exercise it with absolute power.—Ibid., page 2637.

The minority contend that the board of which Generals Schofield, Terry, and Getty were members exceeded its authority in recommending to the President the restoration of General Porter. Yet the President, the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and, therefore, the superior officer of these generals, directed them to report "what justice required" in General Porter's case.

Surely, sir, we are not to inculcate disobedience by telling these high officers that they should have disregarded the great object of their convention. These officers were not to be the judges of the legality of the order; the Commander-in-Chief had decided it was lawful.

The board of review, it is contended, was merely an "association of gentlemen—very able and honest and intelligent gentlemen, no one denies—having no element of judicial function under law." Such an association has no power, it is asserted, to examine into the proceedings and findings of a court-martial, to swear witnesses, or to hear or determine any question of law or fact. The effect of such a commission is to set up an appellate court superior to a court lawfully constituted.

I shall not dwell, sir, upon other objections and observations of the minority of the committee concerning the board of review composed of the loyal and distinguished soldiers of whom I have spoken. I think it was scarcely necessary, however, to their view to intimate that the Schofield board "sought to prepare the conscience of Congress for raids upon the Treasury in favor of dismissed officers;" or that the whole appearance in the case indicates that it was made up by those desiring "confusion and misconception." I make no defense of the gentlemen comprising that board; they need none from me.

Mr. President, the proposed amendment to the bill, as offered by me, overcomes the main objections in law suggested by the minority of the committee. I could, therefore, have omitted all reference to them. This course, however, would have been capable of misconception, and I have preferred to express my dissent from most of the minority's conclusions.

I may add that my great desire has been to have General Porter's case considered upon its merits, and I am willing, therefore, to lay aside personal preferences as to the mode of accomplishing his restoration to the Army, if at last this just result may be honorably had.

The temptation, sir, to quote largely from the board's report is almost irresistible. To me it is a clear, unimpassioned recital of the facts, of the conclusions, and of the reasons therefor. It tells us they have made a thorough examination of all the evidence bearing upon the subject. It tells us that under instructions from the board, the recorder sought with great diligence for evidence, especially that having an adverse bearing upon General Porter; that they have had the benefit of testimony, not available at the original trial, of officers and soldiers of both armies, present upon the field of battle; of much documentary evidence; and, particularly, the benefit of accurate maps of the battle-field, made from recent surveys by a distinguished officer, who was a participant in the battle—without which maps no correct understanding of the testimony could be had.

The report of the board shows conclusively that the maps used in the original trial were extremely inaccurate; that the troops located thereon were erroneously placed; and that errors of statement were made to convey still more erroneous impressions, because of the grossly faulty and misleading map used by the court-martial.

A single illustration will suffice to show with what fatal force an error connected with the original map was made to tell against General Porter. It was charged that Porter was in a position somewhat to the right and rear of Jackson's force on the 29th of August, when he received the order to attack, yet no force of the enemy was designated upon the court-martial map as being in existence, save that of Jackson. It is now conceded that Porter's position was nearly two miles away from that fixed for him on the original map; that the position assigned him on that map was occupied, as I have before shown by Longstreet's force; and that Porter was not, and could not have been, to the right and rear of the force he was commanded to attack, but was in front of another army whose existence, on the map at least, was not recognized by the court-martial.

General Porter's conduct during the whole of the transactions involved was subjected by the board to the highest degree of responsibility recognized by military principles. The conflicting testimony relative to plans of operation and interpretations of orders, motives of action, and degrees of responsibility, were carefully weighed, and the report states that in every possible view of the subject, examined in the light of the facts, established by undisputed testimony, but one conclusion respecting the guilt or innocence of Porter can be had.

The charges against Porter were six in number. Of these not more than two or three were pressed with serious purpose. He was condemned for not obeying an order given to him on the 27th of August, 1862, to march at one o'clock of the morning of the 28th from Warrenton Junction to Bristow Station, delaying two or three hours in the attempt to march. The reviewing board declare that the testimony clearly shows that General Porter reached Bristow Station "as soon as it was practicable;" that the night upon which he was ordered to march was excessively dark; that army trains, numbering two or three thousand wagons, largely possessed the intervening road which was newly made in many places, crossed by small streams, and otherwise rendered impracticable for a night march by a large body of men. Upon this head the conclusion of the board is that General Porter "exercised only the very ordinary discretion of a corps commander, which it was his plain duty to exercise, in delaying the march until three o'clock;" and that "nothing was gained, or could have been gained, by the attempt to move before the dawn of day;" that "it would have been wiser to delay the attempt to move until four o'clock."

It was charged against General Porter that he did not obey a joint order addressed to General McDowell and himself on the morning of the 29th August, 1862, to move against Gainesville; but it is now shown that Porter moved as far as he could go; that he was overtaken by McDowell, who, as senior in rank, took the command, informing Porter that he was already too far advanced. McDowell, leaving, took with him about seventeen thousand men, the larger portion of their joint force, leaving Porter with eight or ten thousand to hold Longstreet, then in his front, in check, and to keep himself in readiness under the terms of General Pope's order to fall back behind Bull Run that night. The evidence sustaining this conclusion of the board is that of such officers as Generals Morell, Sykes, Griffin, Butterfield, Warren, Patrick, and others; sustained as to the presence of Longstreet by the evidence of Generals Longstreet, Robertson, and Charles Marshall, of the confederate army.

Perhaps the most conclusive evidence that Porter performed all that was possible for him to do, under the order cited, is found in the fact that General McDowell, when in command of both Porter's corps and his own, acting under the same order—that is, the joint order already referred to—decided not to attempt to execute it, but marched away from the field, then occupied by Porter and himself, on the advance to Gainesville, and going to the rear and right of Porter's remaining force, was practically performing no service in attacking the enemy, holding him in check, or remaining in supporting distance of Porter, who urged the retention of one of McDowell's divisions to support him in an attack.

The third charge against General Porter before the court-martial was that, being on the field of battle on the 29th August, and within sound of the guns and in the presence of the enemy, and knowing that a severe action of great consequence was being fought, and that the aid of his corps was needed, he failed to bring it on the field; that he shamefully fell back and retreated from the advance of the enemy without attempting to give them battle, and without knowing the force from which he retreated.

Mr. President, we shall show, if it become necessary in this debate, that Porter not only did know of the force from which he did not retreat, but that knowledge was largely had from General McDowell, who swore on Porter's trial that he had no knowledge of the force that made up the enemy, yet it was on record that hour in the War Department in his own report a month earlier that he had.

Mr. CONKLING. Had what?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I say that General McDowell swore on Porter's trial that he had no knowledge of the force in front of him, that is as to whether it was Longstreet's or Jackson's or either. That is his testimony before the court-martial that convicted Porter; and yet there is on file in the War Department, or ought to be—God only knows what there is there—a report from General McDowell himself, dated a month earlier, showing that he actually knew of these forces which on the court-martial he swore he knew nothing about.

I have only cited this single instance of what I shall term the incorrectness or the failure of memory upon the part of some of the important witnesses against General Porter. I want to add that I have very much more in corroboration of that which I have stated.

Mr. CONKLING. Would it be disagreeable to the Senator from New Jersey to be interrupted for a moment?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I would prefer to go on with my remarks.

Mr. CONKLING. I simply want the Senator to restate, if he will, a thing which is differently understood. I am sure the Senator will not object to such an interruption. I simply want to inquire whether he means that the report he refers to was made a month before the delivery of the testimony, or a month before some other event.

Mr. RANDOLPH. A month before the delivery of McDowell's testimony before the court-martial.

Mr. CONKLING. So I understood the Senator, but some other Senators understood him otherwise.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes, sir; I state the fact. That report of McDowell is dated in November, 1862, and the trial took place in December, 1862, according to my recollection.

It is now shown, by Federal and confederate testimony of the highest character, that from the time McDowell left Porter, on the morning of the 29th, until that evening, there was no infantry engagement except skirmishing and some short and sharp contests between small portions of the opposing armies. That a heavy artillery combat was going on during the afternoon, at a point remote from Porter's command, is the nearest approach to a "severe action" that can be demonstrated.

It is, therefore, shown that no "severe action," such as was contemplated under the charge, took place at the time named, and that the aid of Porter's corps was not "greatly needed;" but, to the contrary, it was performing a service, in the judgment of the reviewing officers, equal to that of any other portion of Pope's command; holding in check the superior forces of Longstreet, who, upon Porter's removal or defeat, would have fallen upon the exposed left flank of Pope's army.

Porter's conduct on that day is declared to have been "obedient, subordinate, faithful, and judicious, saving the Union Army from disaster."

The fourth charge against General Porter is substantially the same as the third—that believing the troops of General Pope were sustaining defeat, Porter failed to go to their relief, retreated and fell back with his corps, leaving Pope's army to the disaster of a presumed defeat.

Mr. President, the Fifth Army Corps that Porter commanded made no retreat. That is the evidence, and that fact will and can be substantiated. As to the force of Sturgis or of Piatt, whatever may be its designation, a force of eight or nine hundred men not then permanently connected with the Fifth Army Corps, but temporarily under General Porter, that was sent some distance on the road toward Manassas—as to that force the board of review say that in placing them there to occupy a defensive position Porter made the "ordinary soldierly disposition of his force," and which the Senate will also observe was required of him by the terms of the joint order to McDowell and Porter of that morning, which stated: "It may be necessary to fall back behind Bull Run to-night. I presume it will be so." Also, "one thing must be had in view, that the troops must occupy a position from which they can reach Bull Run to-night or by morning."

The evidence under this charge shows conclusively that Porter made no retreat whatever; that he held the ground whereon McDowell had left him; that he covered the deployment of McDowell's troops under the expectation and agreement that they should go into line and fill the perilous gap between the right of Porter and the left of Reynolds—a task never accomplished. It is shown that the preparations for retreat were "only the ordinary soldierly dispositions it was his duty to make under the circumstances then existing;" that he made frequent reports to his superior officers, stating what he had done, and what he had been unable to do; who and what the enemy in his front was, and what his impressions were from the sounds of action toward his right; how he had failed to obtain any replies either from Pope or McDowell, to whom his reports had been frequent during the day, and early enough to insure the receipt, from either of them, of orders or information if they had any to send. In these communications Porter stated that, should he receive no contrary orders, and only in that event, would he be compelled to retire for food and water, as Pope had suggested in his morning dispatch.

All these dispatches indicate a purpose to retire only when assured that the main army was doing so, and then to cover the retreat of that army as far as possible. It is a singular fact, Mr. President, that every dispatch that could be distorted to General Porter's prejudice was easily found by the prosecution, and quickly presented by certain witnesses. Other, and to Porter, vital dispatches, many in number, the receipt of which is acknowledged by Porter's superior officers, have, with an exception or two, never been produced, though they have been urgently demanded.

One dispatch, held by McDowell for seventeen years, and produced before the recent board, would alone have relieved General Porter of the most serious charge against him, that of receiving and disobeying the "4.30" order. Who shall measure the wrong this single omission occasioned?

I venture to assert before this body that if that dispatch had been produced before the court-martial which convicted Porter of the most serious charge against him, that of disobeying the 4.30 order of August 29, 1862, it would not have been possible for the court-martial to have convicted him, because that dispatch which McDowell now brings in after these seventeen years is dated at six o'clock, and throughout all of it there is the most substantial evidence that Porter could not have been in receipt of the 4.30 order at the time of the writing of the six o'clock dispatch, and so the board of review declare saying, that the terms of this dispatch from Porter to McDowell "utterly forbid the supposition that at that time Porter had received the 4.30 order." But I am not done with the 4.30 order or its time of delivery.

The fifth charge upon which General Porter was condemned was that he disobeyed what is known as the 4.30 order of the afternoon of the 29th August, to attack the enemy on his flank and rear. And the sixth and last charge against General Porter is substantially the same as the fifth, with the additional assertion that he not only disobeyed the order in not attacking the enemy's flank and rear, but that he retreated from the enemy—failed to give aid to the troops already fighting superior numbers, who were relying on Porter's attack to secure a decisive victory and capture the enemy's army; and finally, that the failure to obey this order resulted in the escape of Jackson's army and contributed to the disasters of the succeeding day.

As I have already stated, sir, this charge is deemed to be the most serious one brought against General Porter, and the reviewing board evidently so considered it.

It is not worth while to delay by repeating the testimony under this head or the conclusions of the Schofield board regarding it. A single fact, now placed beyond controversy, fixes forever the injustice of the finding under this charge. It is this: the order was dated at "4.30 p. m." of the 29th of August. It was given to General Pope's aid ten or fifteen minutes thereafter. It was carried by him to General Porter by what is now established as a most circuitous route, and it has been shown that he lost his way in endeavoring to reach Porter, and instead of delivering the vital order about five o'clock in the afternoon, as he once testified he had done, that he did not deliver the order until sundown of that day. The testimony upon this point cannot be read by any unprejudiced person without being convinced of the perjury of the witness and of the injustice done General Porter.

I speak of this regretfully because the witness has recently died. I only say that the witness who swore before the court-martial that he delivered this order at five o'clock or thereabout in the afternoon is shown not to have done so. Two officers of the United States Army now in the service were before the board of review, and one of them at least testified clearly that the witness stated to him after the war was over that he had not delivered the vital order until "near dark." These, sir, are not mere assertions of mine. The evidence touching all these points will be found in the volumes before us.

It is not necessary to inquire what Porter's duty would have been had he received the 4.30 order at five o'clock.

It is a well-established military maxim that a corps commander is not justifiable in making an apparently hopeless attack in obedience to an order from a superior who is not on the spot and who is evidently in error in respect to the essential conditions upon which the order is based. I leave to military men, and to better judgments than mine, to decide what Porter's duty would have been had the order been promptly received. The reviewing board are very clear that its receipt, even at the time Captain Pope testified he delivered it, would not and should not have made any difference in the result. They assert that Porter's duty would have held him where he was; that his disposition of troops had all the desired and all possible beneficial effect; that it was keeping Longstreet's superior force from going to the aid of Jackson, against whom Pope was using the remainder of his army. But all speculation upon this head is now unnecessary, for the simple reason that the "4.30 order" not having been delivered within the time when it was possible for Porter to have executed it, the whole charge falls to the ground.

Mr. President, regarding this case I shall not, at this time at least, much longer detain the Senate. The conclusion of the reviewing board, that "not one among all the gallant officers on that bloody field was less deserving of condemnation than General Porter," sums up and completes a report that will be considered among the most able, impartial, and carefully prepared documents connected with the history of military operations.

I shall be pardoned, sir, for saying to the Senate that to me this has been a case of peculiar personal interest.

Although I had no acquaintance with General Porter when he was charged, tried, and condemned, I formed my opinions at that time through a careful reading of the proceedings. During most of the years that have intervened since his condemnation I have been his immediate neighbor and personal friend. Thus I have seen his daily life. Necessarily an observer of his acts, participant in conversations, with free and unrestricted recourse to his very large correspondence, I say to the Senate that under no temptations, cruel and many as they have been, have I ever heard an expression from him, read a line from or to him, that would not have borne the criticism of the most patriotic man in the land. Through years I have been the daily witness of his patient endurance, and though he has borne himself, as only brave men can, with outward show of composure, I have often felt that it would have been infinitely more merciful had that brave and suffering soldier been shot to death on the day of his condemnation. Better this quick, though cruel fate, than have lived to encounter the desertion of timid friends, the taunts of cowards, the opprobrium of time-servers, and the dilatory justice of his Government.

But justice, though slow, has proved sure; the vindication of General Porter, in the full light of all the facts, has been rendered by a board of United States officers and gentlemen skilled in the art of war, and competent to pass judgment. It remains for us to complete the reparation so long withheld.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Illinois does not desire to proceed now, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LOGAN. I will give way in a moment. I desire to say a word first. I wish to proceed with my argument in the morning, but that impressions may not go out contrary to what I deem just, I desire to say to my friend from New Jersey now that the assertion made in reference to General McDowell's report and testimony disagreeing, I think he will find he is in error in. I am very sure he will.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If I find I am in error prompt and early reparation will be made. I do not wish to do any injustice to General McDowell.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course not.

Mr. RANDOLPH. But I have had placed in my hand a report of such a date, and I certainly have seen General McDowell's testimony of a later date. It may be, but I hardly think it is possible, that I am wrong.

Mr. LOGAN. The discussion here will develop the fact. I merely wish to put in a counter-statement at once, that the Senate may see afterward who is correct. I am satisfied the Senator from New Jersey is mistaken, for I have examined the matter very carefully. I do not wish to discuss it now, but I have examined very carefully and I find no such contradiction.

One other thing I desire to say in behalf of a man who is dead now—Douglas Pope—that the Senator will search in vain to find anywhere in the evidence, either before the court-martial or the reviewing board, where Douglas Pope ever admitted any such thing as he states.

Mr. RANDOLPH. As what?

Mr. LOGAN. That he ever admitted that he had made a misstatement on the trial before the court-martial. I have read the evidence very recently, and those who know me will know that I generally remember evidence well. Douglas Pope swears before this board that he never made any such admission. Not only that, but the orderly who traveled with him swears positively to the time and the road and the whole thing, both witnesses stating it exactly as he did before the court-martial.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it not true, let me ask the Senator, that two officers, Captain Moale and one other whose name I have forgotten, officers in the United States Army to-day, testified that Pope did make just that admission?

Mr. LOGAN. It is true that two officers stated before this board that in casual mess conversations they understood Mr. Pope to say that he had met some one on the road that had misguided him and delayed him. They make that statement, but Mr. Pope comes forward and emphatically denies it, and so does the orderly who was with him. That is exactly the evidence.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I have made my statement with care.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. And although I am liable to error unquestionably, as my friend from Illinois is, I have no doubt in the course of this debate it will be developed by the evidence I am correct.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wished to put it right now. Of course I do not mean to insinuate that the Senator has made any misrepresentation; he will not so understand me; but he and I understand the evidence differently. That is all I wish to say, so that the Senate may not gather the impression that the evidence proves what the Senator has stated in these particulars. That is the only reason why I wish to interpose now. Having said what I have said at this time, I give way to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to say, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me—

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to state, because I think it is just and right to say it, that I did not assert and did not intend to assert that Captain Douglas Pope ever admitted to the board of review that he had not delivered that order until six or seven o'clock, but it is in evidence by the testimony of two United States officers that to them he did make substantially that admission.

Mr. LOGAN. The evidence will show how that is.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Several SENATORS. Let us adjourn.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

REFUND OF COTTON TAX.

Mr. LOWE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4876) to return the cotton tax collected under acts of Congress which have since been declared illegal and void; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. LOWE. I move the reference of this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. This bill should be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. LOWE. I prefer that it should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It involves a judicial question.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Lowe] so as to refer the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means. It is simply a question of revenue.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CONGER, there were—ayes 47, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LOWE and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 84.

Mr. CONGER. I think it so important where these cotton claims which propose to take away revenue should go that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 92, not voting 62; as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. CONGER to the motion of Mr. LOWE was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MANNING. My colleague, Mr. MONEY, is detained from the House to-day by illness.

Mr. O'REILLY. I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.]

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague, Mr. SIMONTON, is paired with the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCOID.]

Mr. ACKLEN. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. O'NEILL. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. PAGE. If present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. STONE. The gentleman from New York, Mr. STARIN, is paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY.

Mr. FISHER. My colleague, Mr. HARMER, is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. SMITH.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. PHILIPS, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired, as I understand, with the gentleman from New York, Mr. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. BRIGHAM.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The motion of Mr. LOWE as amended on motion of Mr. CONGER was agreed to; and the bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

BRANDY MADE OF APPLES, PEACHES, ETC.

Mr. LOWE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4877) to abolish all taxes on brandy made of apples, peaches, or other fruits; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. LOWE. I move the reference of this bill to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. CONGER. All questions in regard to the revision of the tariff should go to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rule that this bill should properly go to the Committee of Ways and Means; but the reference is within the control of the House.

Mr. LOWE. This is not a question of tariff.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all taxes now imposed upon brandy made of apples, peaches, pears, grapes, or other fruits, from and after the 1st day of May, 1880, be, and the same are hereby, abolished.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House this bill would go to the Committee of Ways and Means. The House, however, if it desires to make a different reference, has power to do so.

Mr. LOWE. Mr. Speaker, I would prefer that the bill should be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws; but as the sense of the House has been tested on another bill, and it appears to be adverse to such reference, I do not oppose sending the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TOBACCO IN THE HANDS OF THE PRODUCER.

Mr. LOWE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4878) to repeal the tax on tobacco in the hands of the producer, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF TAX ON DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. LOWE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4879) to reduce tax on distilled spirits to twenty cents per gallon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. HUTCHINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4889) to reorganize and discipline the militia of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

DIKES, WING-DAMS, AND JETTIES.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to furnish to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, such information as may be in the possession of the War Department as will show the number of dikes, wing-dams, and jetties constructed by and under the authority of this Government since the formation thereof, where, when, and for what purposes respectively the same have been constructed, and what the cost thereof respectively has been.

Mr. CONGER. What is proposed to be done with that resolution? Mr. KING. It only seeks for information. I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done during this call, but the committee to which the resolution will be referred under the rule must report the resolution back within six days.

Mr. KING. Then let the resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. Answer to this resolution will involve a great amount of labor.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GEORGE E. ELY.

Mr. PHELPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4890) for the relief of George E. Ely, of Darby, in the State of Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

COTTON THREAD, ETC.

Mr. O'REILLY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4891) to amend United States Revised Statutes, title 33, section 2504, paragraph 7, No. 927; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. WALKER.

Mr. McMILLIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4892) granting a pension to William H. Walker, of Fentress County, Tennessee, late of Company C, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF DUTY ON PRINTING-PAPER.

Mr. McMILLIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4893) to place paper used in the printing of newspapers and books on the free list, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS D. HINE AND HOMER SMITH.

Mr. ACKLEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4894) for the relief of Thomas D. Hine and Homer Smith, of Franklin, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL JOHN G. PARR.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4895) granting an increase of pension to Lieutenant-Colonel John G. Parr, of the One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

KATE H. BLAKELY.

Mr. KNOTT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4896) for the relief of Kate H. Blakely, of Hardin County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee of Claims, and the bill ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. VAN AERNAM presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, relative to appropriations for the defense of the harbor of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON PRINTING-PAPER.

Mr. DICKEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4897) to place printing-paper suitable for books, magazines, pamphlets, and newspapers on the free list; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. DICKEY. I ask that that be referred to the Committee on Depression of Labor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the title of the bill to be again read. It would seem proper that this should go to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The title of the bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist upon his motion?

Mr. DICKEY. I do; I move its reference to the Committee on the Depression of Labor.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move its reference to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 36.

Mr. DICKEY demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DICKEY and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 41.

So the bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ALBERT BRUSE.

Mr. ROTHWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4898) for the relief of Albert Bruse, of Mercer County, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN COMMISSION AWARDS.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT MOUTH OF PEARL RIVER.

Mr. HOOKER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4901) to provide for the erection of a light-house at the mouth of Pearl River, in the State of Mississippi, where the same debouches into the Mississippi Sound; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BARBARA CHENOWITH.

Mr. TALBOTT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4902) for the relief of Barbara Chenowith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like to ask the gentleman who introduces that bill to explain briefly its character, as bills for mere relief ought not to go to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will state to the gentleman that the petitioner in this case had some United States bonds, which were destroyed, and this is to authorize their reissue.

Mr. GARFIELD. That reference, then, is of course appropriate.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business of this morning is the resolution coming over from a former Monday morning, which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday evening, February 18, and Wednesday evening, February 25, 1880, be set apart to be devoted exclusively to receiving reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and for consideration and action on pension bills in their order pending in the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; no other business to be transacted.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to change the dates in that resolution.

Mr. WEAVER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. If I understand, the Chair states that the business now in order is the unfinished business of a previous Monday morning, and that this business takes precedence of a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. This resolution is under a motion to suspend the rules; and no motion to suspend the rules can be made while another motion to suspend the rules is pending.

Mr. WEAVER. Do I understand the Speaker, then, to rule that this is pending?

The SPEAKER. It was pending on the last Monday morning, or the preceding Monday; and the Chair thinks it is in order now as the unfinished business.

Mr. WEAVER. I make the point of order that it has lost its place in not having been called up on last Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEVENSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he amend his resolution so as to assign the evenings of the first and second Wednesdays of March for evening sessions.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will change the resolution as to dates.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask for a ruling upon the point I made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has overruled the point.

A MEMBER. What was the point?

The SPEAKER. The point made by the gentleman from Iowa was that the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] had lost its place. The rule provides that upon a motion to suspend the rules one motion to adjourn may be entertained. It is because a motion to adjourn was made and prevailed that the resolution comes over as unfinished business. In addition to that, the rules do not allow more than one motion to suspend the rules to be pending at the same time. The Chair rules in both directions against the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER.]

Mr. WEAVER. I always understood that the motion to adjourn dispensed with the motion to suspend the rules, if successful.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa probably has not read Rules 56 and 161.

Mr. WEAVER. I make the further point that the 18th and 25th of February are gone, and that the resolution falls by its own terms.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read Rule 56.

The Clerk read as follows:

56. The consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may be engaged at an adjournment shall be resumed as soon as the Journal of the next day is read, and at the same time each day thereafter until disposed of; and if, from any cause, other business shall intervene, it shall be resumed as soon as such other business is disposed of. And the consideration of all other unfinished business shall be resumed whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order under the rules.—March 18, 1860.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will also cause Rule 161 to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

161. Pending a motion to suspend the rules, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House do now adjourn; but after the result thereon is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion till the vote is taken on suspension.—February 25, 1868.

The SPEAKER. Those are the rules which governed the Chair in his ruling on the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEAVER. Do I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] has moved an amendment to the pending resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes to modify his resolution as regards the dates. And the Chair is perfectly willing to state to the gentleman from Iowa that after this proposition is out of the way, having received notice from eight or more of the committees of this House that they desire to be recognized for motions to suspend the rules, he will be bound by the practice and his own decisions and the decisions of former Speakers to recognize committees in preference to individuals. He makes this statement for the information of the gentleman from Iowa if that is the point the gentleman desires to reach.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the Chair indulge me in one further remark?

The SPEAKER. Certainly, the Chair will hear as far as the gentleman wishes.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask the Chair if an appeal will lie from the decision of the Chair recognizing gentlemen who represent committees in preference to individuals for motions to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize always an appeal if any gentleman desires to appeal from the decision of the Chair while he is executing the rules. Does the gentleman from Iowa appeal?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the Chair misunderstands the gentleman from Iowa. I do not think he asked about an appeal from the ruling just had.

Mr. WEAVER. Not at all. I asked the question of the Chair with reference to the remark of the Chair made out of its order, about recognitions hereafter for motions to suspend the rules. My question was whether, when that point was reached, and the Chair holds to his decision to recognize a gentleman representing a committee, whether I can appeal from that recognition of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The recognition is in the Chair; but the Chair is perfectly willing to give to the House his reasons for that recognition.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I understand the Chair to rule that in the construction of a rule, he has made a rule that the House is powerless to correct on appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made no rule whatever. The House has made its own rule and the Chair is administering it.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to suggest that the Chair stated in language which I caused to be read by the Clerk on Monday before last that he had made a rule which he proposed should govern him in all time to come. I wish to suggest also that there is no written rule that a committee shall be recognized in preference to an individual. If there is, I would like to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the report to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman wants the unwritten rule to be read.

Mr. WEAVER. Yes; the unwritten rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the report to be read. The Chair has already caused it to be read, and the House accepted the ruling of the Chair without a division. The Chair thinks, however, it would be well to have it read again.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I believe there is a list on the Speaker's table of names of members who are to be recognized in the order in which their names occur on that list?

The SPEAKER. There is no such list. The Chair, in view of the action of the House, stated distinctly during this session he would not recognize any such list, since the House had overruled such a list both in Committee of the Whole and in the House.

Mr. WEAVER. I think the golden rule should apply in this case.

Mr. SPRINGER. How can you apply that to the greenback theory?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the golden rule of silence prevails.

Mr. LOWE. Did not the Speaker recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to introduce a resolution at this session of Congress to suspend the rules without being authorized by a committee?

The SPEAKER. He did by unanimous consent. But when the point is raised the Chair has to go by the rule.

Mr. KELLEY. That recognition occurred before the announcement of the rule to which the Chair has referred.

The SPEAKER. There are a number of gentlemen contending for the floor and under those circumstances the Chair rules that those representing committees shall have the preference. That is all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I would like to ask a parliamentary question of the Chair, if it is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Are there not other gentlemen who have asked the Chair to recognize them to submit motions to suspend the rules prior to the application of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER?]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] himself asked the Chair at the last session.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And at the beginning of this session.

The SPEAKER. That is so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And the request has not yet been granted.

The SPEAKER. It has not been. There are many other members who have asked the recognition of the Chair in the same way as the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And prior to that gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have frequently asked the Chair to recognize me to move a suspension of the rules; and if the Chair has nobody now in his mind whom he would like to recognize for that purpose, I would like to be recognized now.

Mr. WEAVER. I beg pardon of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER;] the Chair has another member in his eye now. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to move a suspension of the rules and have a vote of the House on a third-term resolution, which I think is one of great interest to the people.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better wait until the new rule is adopted, which gives individual members the right to move a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BREWER. Perhaps he had better wait until after the action of the national democratic convention at Cincinnati.

Mr. LOWE. Under the new rule members will not have more than one quarter of the privileges they now have.

The SPEAKER. The rule to which the gentleman refers was changed by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Rules so as to accommodate individual members.

Mr. LOWE. By the written rules of the House now every Monday an individual member has the same right which the chairman of a committee has to move a suspension of the rules. But by the new rule we will have just one-quarter of the privileges we now have in that regard.

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House to consider.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLANE. My point of order is that the pending question before the House is the report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COFFROTH.] That is the question now pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, at the instance of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER,] will cause the rule to be read.

Mr. McLANE. My point of order is that the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is not in order at this time, the pending question being upon the report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa rose to a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair recognized him.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman rose to a parliamentary inquiry.

and through the indulgence of the Chair that parliamentary inquiry is superseding the pending question. Now I make the point of order that the pending question cannot be superseded by the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is superseded now by the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLANE.]

Mr. McLANE. Not at all.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is doubly superseded now.

Mr. McLANE. My point of order is that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is not in order, pending the question before the House, and I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not want the impression made that he is doing otherwise than enforcing the rules.

Mr. McLANE. I am well aware of the indulgence of the Chair to the gentleman from Iowa; and for that reason I call for the regular order, which is the pending question upon the report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. WEAVER. I think the remarks of the Chair are very proper. A gross misrepresentation is going all over the country through the figures of a cartoon by Nast, which represents the Speaker with his back toward me. That is not the fact.

Mr. GARFIELD. Which figure represents you?

Mr. WEAVER. The large figure with the long ears, of course, represents me. [Laughter.] You know that the ass in the Bible saw the angel before Balaam, his rider, saw him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to his point of order.

Mr. WEAVER. I am doing so.

The SPEAKER. Not to the cartoon.

Mr. WEAVER. In reply to the remarks of the Chair, I say that an impression is going out to the country which is grossly unjust to the presiding officer of this House, in that it represents him in this cartoon with his back toward me while I am seeking to be recognized. The Speaker has never at any time more than shut his eyes. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is discharging his duty, and is un-mindful of any criticism of such a character.

Mr. WILSON. Is it in order now to ask unanimous action on a joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is not. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. WEAVER. I do not understand that the Chair has made any decision from which I can appeal under the rules. I ask unanimous consent of the House to have read and voted on the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the resolutions be read, and then we can tell if we want to vote upon them.

Mr. McLANE. I object to the resolution without its being read, and demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is in the nature of an objection.

Mr. CONGER. But the Chair has already decided that the gentleman might ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair submitted the request for unanimous consent to the House, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] objected.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I would request the Chair to ask unanimous consent of the gentleman from Maryland.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is merely exercising a right which he has, and which is often exercised by other members of the House.

Mr. WEAVER. I think Maryland will get out of the way.

Mr. McLANE. I insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order, and the Chair rules that the unfinished business coming over from Monday before last is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] in reference to evening sessions for pension business. The resolution will be read.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to modify the resolution, and ask the Clerk to read it as I desire to modify it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to modify my resolution so as to fix Wednesday evening, March 3, and Wednesday evening, March 10, for the proposed sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania modifies his resolution as indicated, and upon the resolution as modified moves to suspend the rules so as to adopt it.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that the gentleman cannot now move a suspension of the rules, if this is unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The motion before the House is the motion to suspend the rules, which comes over from a former Monday.

Mr. CONGER. The modification of the motion makes it a new proceeding.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects very distinctly that when the silver bill was before the House he decided that under the rules a proposition could be modified before a decision by the House. The Clerk will read the rule on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motions may be modified before the previous question is seconded, and before a decision or amendment; but not after the previous question is seconded.

The SPEAKER. Now, this modification is made before a decision. In the case of the "Bland silver bill," as the Chair recollects, he decided that under this provision of the rules the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] could modify his proposition, in which opinion the House concurred.

Mr. CONGER. I do not remember the question as having arisen where the House was acting upon a matter coming over as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it common sense to hold under the rule just read that a member moving a suspension of the rules may, before a decision upon that motion, modify his proposition.

Mr. CONGER. Of course I do not care for the point as regards this particular proposition, to which I suppose no one objects.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman making this motion would have had the right to modify it last Monday, and that right is not now divested.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the Speaker will not make his ruling so broad as to imply that a proposition may be modified by substituting another proposition altogether different.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not so rule. Of course the modification must be germane.

Mr. GARFIELD. I can see the danger of a ruling not qualified in the manner the Chair now indicates.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, as modified, will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday evening at 7.30 p. m., March 3, and Wednesday evening at 7.30 p. m., March 10, 1880, be set apart to be devoted exclusively to receiving reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and to consideration and action on pension bills in their order pending in the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; no other business to be transacted.

The motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution was agreed to; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 2804) for the relief of the administrator of John D. McGill; and

An act (H. R. No. 3288) for the relief of colored emigrants.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) authorizing the Public Printer to print additional copies of bills and public documents.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 38) for the relief of Robert Gorthy and Calvin Green;

An act (S. No. 87) for the relief of John J. Key and W. G. M. Davis;

An act (S. No. 208) granting a pension to Archibald Nelson and John Nelson, minor children of John Nelson;

An act (S. No. 299) for the relief of Joseph N. Lewis;

An act (S. No. 338) granting a pension to Dederick Blanck;

An act (S. No. 382) granting a pension to Ellen W. P. Carter;

An act (S. No. 551) granting a pension to James O'Connor;

An act (S. No. 855) for the relief of Narcissa Gibson, widow of the late Captain Alexander Gibson, United States Navy;

An act (S. No. 1157) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional lots of ground adjoining the new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing;

An act (S. No. 1193) granting a pension to Milton L. Sparr;

An act (S. No. 1197) granting a pension to Peter Claesgens; and

An act (S. No. 1358) for the payment of certain moneys to the heirs of Constantino Brumidi, deceased.

NEW POST-OFFICE BUILDING, BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.

Mr. KIMMEL. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who have agreed to a unanimous report in the matter of the Baltimore post-office, have instructed me to move a suspension of the rules for the consideration of the bill which I now present—a bill to provide for the purchase of a site for a post-office and other Government buildings in the city of Baltimore, Maryland.

The bill (H. R. No. 4903) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase at private sale in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, the site selected by him in the square designated by him in his letter of December 6, 1879, bounded by Monument Square, Fayette, Lexington, and North streets, for a post-office and other Government buildings; and for this purpose there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $550,000: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be used or applied for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the land for the said site shall be vested in the United States; nor until the State of Maryland shall duly release and relinquish to the United States all jurisdiction over the said land or piece of ground; also all right to tax or in any way assess said land or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know how this specific bill presented by the gentleman from Maryland obtains any precedence by right over any other bill which has been passed upon by the committee.

The SPEAKER. That is for the committee to determine.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well. I ask the question of the committee. The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules and consider the bill it was agreed to, there being—ayes 152, noes 10.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of December 6, 1879, and accompanying documents relative to the purchase of a site in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, for a post-office and other public buildings, report that June 20, 1878, Congress enacted as follows:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and the engineer officer in charge of the fifth light-house district, are hereby authorized and directed to examine into and report to Congress at its next session upon the necessity of a building for a post-office in Baltimore, Maryland, the price for which a site for the same can be obtained, and the cost of such a building thereon as the needs of said city may require."

February 1, 1879, the commission appointed under the above act reported as follows:

"[H. R. Mis. Doc. No. 18—Forty-fifth Congress, third session.]

"Report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives from the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department and the engineer of the fifth light-house district, relative to the necessity for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building for the post-office in the city of Baltimore, Maryland.

"WASHINGTON, D. C., February 1, 1879.

"SIR: In accordance with a provision in the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses, &c., approved June 20, 1878, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and the engineer officer in charge of the fifth light-house district, to examine into and report to Congress at its next session the necessity for a building for the post-office in Baltimore, Maryland, the price for which a site for the same can be obtained, and the cost of such a building thereon as the needs of said city may require, we have the honor to submit the following report:

"The rapid increase of population in the city of Baltimore since 1850 (see table annexed, marked A) more especially during the present decade, affords conclusive evidence that the number of people who will receive and send their mails through the city post-office will at an early date be far in excess of the number that can be properly served with the present ill-adapted accommodations. The truth of this statement is believed to be beyond dispute. The question presented, therefore, is whether the public and the increasing post-office business (see table marked B) can be properly accommodated in the building now occupied for this purpose. The post-office is now located in the custom-house building. By an examination of the table annexed, marked C, it will be seen that every room in that building is now occupied. The rapid increase of the customs business in the city, as shown by tables annexed, marked, respectively, D, E, F, G, and H, arising from the extensive harbor improvements made by general and municipal governments, together with extended railroad facilities afforded to the granaries of the great West, will necessitate an early removal of many of the subordinate officers to afford the necessary room for transacting the business of the custom-house and sub-treasury proper. These facts being established, the question arises as to whether it is better to rent such a building as can be obtained to meet the demands for increased post-office accommodations or to construct a building, and to have thereby a choice of location and a building adapted in all respects to the public business to be transacted therein. It is our opinion, after a personal examination, that other and more extended accommodations for the post-office department in Baltimore are an absolute necessity, and that it would be advantageous to the United States to construct a building rather than rent premises for this purpose.

"We would therefore recommend that the United States purchase a lot of sufficient size and erect thereon a post-office building of such size and plan as would best serve the public business of that office. It has been suggested that if a building should be constructed of sufficient size to accommodate the post-office business, with a proper regard to the continually increasing business of that office, and architectural effect in design and construction, that there would be much available space therein that would not be required for the post-office department. In reply to this suggestion it may be said that such additional room can be advantageously used by other Government officers now occupying rented premises in the city, (see table annexed, marked I), and also by such officials other than customs officers who are now accommodated in the custom-house building.

"A number of sites were inspected personally, and after much careful examination we believe that the square bounded by Baltimore, North Fayette, and Holiday streets, marked in blue in the accompanying map, containing one hundred and fifty-one feet by two hundred and eight feet, combines more advantages as to plan of building, access by street railroads, and centrality of location as to the business connected with the post-office, than any other site. We have also to say that, upon consultation with the following-named gentlemen after our personal examination, and after reaching the above conclusion, namely, Hon. F. C. Latrobe, mayor, Decatur Miller, president of the board of trade, James Carey Coates, president of the Merchant's Exchange, J. J. Middleton, president of the Corn Exchange, Walter B. McAtee, ex-president of the Corn Exchange, Colonel George W. F. Vernon, United States naval officer, and others, we ascertained that they heartily concurred in our views as to the advantages of this site. The estimated value of this property in 1875, as per report of William A. Potter, at that time Supervising Architect of the Treasury, was $329,000. We recommend that the property be acquired by condemnation.

"In our judgment, with the present low price of material and the great scarcity of employment for deserving laborers, a building of suitable size, durability, and architectural effect, affording the accommodation so much needed, together with the site, can be provided for less than $1,000,000.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN FRASER,

"Acting Supervising Architect, Treasury Department.

"O. E. BABCOCK,

"Brevet Brigadier-General, United States Army,
"Engineer Fifth Light-House District.

"Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,

"Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, District of Columbia."

[Indorsement.]

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

"February 4, 1879.

"While concurring in the view stated by the Acting Supervising Architect and the engineer of the fifth light-house district as to the expediency of constructing the building proposed by them, and the suitability of the site, I respectfully suggest that, in view of the number of important public buildings now in process of erection, it is not advisable to make provision for this building at the present session, nor until the chief buildings now being constructed are completed.

"JOHN SHERMAN,

"Secretary."

And that, June 18, 1879, Congress passed the following act:

"Chap. 26.—An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate for the purchase at private sale, or, if necessary, procure by condemnation, a site for a post-office in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to negotiate and contract for the conditional purchase, at private sale, or, if necessary, procure by condemnation, in pursuance of the statutes of the State of Maryland now in force, or any statute of said State which may hereafter be passed by its Legislature for that purpose, a suitable piece of ground or site in the city of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, for the erection of a building to be used for a post-office, court-house, and other public offices, the cost of the same not to exceed the sum of $500,000; and the sum of $4,000 is hereby appropriated, or so much as may be necessary therefor, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the cost and expenses of condemnation of said ground or site, if proceedings of condemnation are, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, required to procure the same: Provided, That no money except the sum hereinbefore appropriated for expenses of condemnation be expended for purchase of said site until the purchase and contract for the same shall have been approved by Congress nor until a valid title of such ground or site is vested in the United States, and the State of Maryland shall have released and relinquished jurisdiction over the same, and exempted from taxation such site and such buildings as may hereafter be erected thereon, so long as the same are the property of the United States."

"Approved June 18, 1879."

And that December 6, 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives the following letter:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,"

"Washington, D. C., December 6, 1879.

"SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report, accompanied by copies of correspondence and other papers, showing the action taken by this Department with reference to the purchase of property in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, as a site for a post-office and court-house, as provided by act of June 18, 1879, by which the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and directed to negotiate and contract for the conditional purchase by private sale or by condemnation of property in the city of Baltimore for this purpose:

"In pursuance of this authority I made a personal examination of the several pieces of property suggested as suitable sites, and after careful consideration provisionally selected the square bounded by Monument Square, Fayette, Lexington, and North Streets, with the conditions that the price of the property should not exceed $500,000, and that no building except the Government building should be erected or remain upon this square, as set forth in my letter of June 25, 1879, for F. P. Stevens, chairman city council committee of Baltimore.

"A circular letter inviting proposals of sale from the several owners of this property was issued under date of June 28, 1879, and attached to this letter was a form of stipulation under which all parties making proposals were to submit them in accordance with the provisions and subject to the conditions of the act above referred to. In response to this letter there were received four proposals from the following parties:

J. Howard McHenry	$152,500
John C. White	25,000
Robert Remert	273,500
August and E. Hoen	50,000

Total 500,000

"The several lots covered by these proposals are shown on the sketch inclosed herewith, and together form the property selected. These proposals were accepted, subject to the conditions of the act, and to the further condition that the city of Baltimore should set apart and dedicate as a permanent public park that portion of the square lying between the United States court-house building and Lexington street, as stated in my letter of June 25, 1879, to F. P. Stevens, hereinbefore referred to. Copies of letters of acceptance of the several parties and of a letter addressed to the chairman of the city council committee of Baltimore are inclosed herewith.

"By letter of July 11, 1879, copies of the several proposals were transmitted to the honorable Attorney-General, with the request that he cause an examination of the title of said property to be made and advise the Treasury Department whether conveyances from the parties signing the proposals would vest a valid title to said property in the United States. A communication was received from the Department of Justice, under date of November 6, 1879, inclosing a letter from the United States attorney at Baltimore, requesting authority to incur an expenditure to procure documentary evidence and copies of papers to accompany the abstract of title. In reply, Department's letter of November 8, 1879, advised the honorable Attorney-General that under the terms of the act no expenditures could be made except for costs and expense of condemnation, in case proceedings in condemnation were necessary, and requested to be advised as to whether the opinion on validity of title could not be rendered upon examination and without incurring the expense of obtaining the documentary evidence referred to, to which letter no reply has been received.

"I have the honor to recommend that the requisite authority be given and an appropriation be made to complete the purchase of this property, provided a valid title thereto can be secured. I have also the honor to submit herewith, for the information of Congress and for such action thereon as may be deemed advisable, a letter addressed to this Department, under date of the 2d instant, by the chairman of the city council committee of Baltimore, with inclosure, from which it appears that the city council desires an increase of the sum named in the act ($500,000) by the amount of $103,000, which amount is to compensate the city for the property lying between the United States court-house and the post-office building and Lexington street, which it was proposed to set apart as a permanent public park.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

"Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,

"Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."

From the above letter it will appear that subsequent to the act of June 18, 1879, the Secretary reconsidered the selection of the site previously selected by the commission appointed under the act of June 20, 1878, and selected an adjacent square, being that whereon stands the present United States court-house. The total value of this square, exclusive of that portion now owned and occupied by the United States as a court-house, is estimated at $603,000.

It will further appear from the letter of the Secretary that he required as a condition to the purchase "that the city of Baltimore should dedicate and set apart as a permanent public park" that portion of the square not included in the contemplated purchase and in the court-house property. As a substitute for this proposition the city of Baltimore, enabled by an act of the Legislature of Maryland, (a copy of which act is hereunto appended,) has by an ordinance (a copy of which is also hereunto appended) provided for the extinguishment of the ground-rent by the city, and the donation to the United States in fee-simple of so much of said square as cannot be purchased by the United States for the sum of $550,000, the latter amount being $50,000 in excess of the cost estimated in the act of June 18, 1879.

This proposition of the city of Baltimore your committee recommend the acceptance of, and to that end present the following bill:

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase at private sale, in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, the site selected by him in the square designated by him in his letter of December 6, 1879, bounded by Monument Square, Fayette, Lexington, and North streets, for a post-office and other Government buildings, and for this purpose there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $550,000: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be used or applied for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the land for the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Maryland shall duly release and relinquish to the United States all jurisdiction over the said land or piece of ground, also all right to tax or in any way assess said land or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

MARYLAND, set:

At a session of the General Assembly of Maryland, begun and held at the city of Annapolis on the 7th day of January, A. D. 1880, His Excellency William T. Hamilton, governor, among others, the following law was enacted, to wit:

"Chapter 2.—An act to give the consent of the State to the purchase of certain lots of ground in the city of Baltimore by the United States of America, for the purpose of erecting a building for a post-office, court-house, and other public offices, and to cede to the United States of America jurisdiction over the same, and authorizing the mayor and city council of Baltimore to grant and convey certain lots of ground belonging to them to the United States of America.

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the consent of the State of Maryland is hereby given to the purchase by the United States of America of any lots or parcels of ground, in the city of Baltimore, for the purpose of erecting a building for a post-office, court-house, and other public offices of the United States of America.

"SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That jurisdiction over the said lots or parcels of ground, after the same shall have been lawfully conveyed to the said United States of America, be, and it is hereby, ceded, released, and relinquished to the United States of America over the said lot or parcels of ground, so far as that all civil and such criminal process as may issue under the authority of this State against any person or persons charged with crimes and misdemeanors committed without said lots or parcels of ground may be executed therein in the same way and manner as though this cession had never been made and granted, and that the land over which the jurisdiction is granted by this act, together with all buildings and personal property which is or may be hereafter within the bounds thereof, belonging to the United States, shall be exempted, exonerated, and discharged from all State or municipal taxes so long as the said lot or parcels of ground shall remain the property of the United States of America for the purposes aforesaid.

"SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That the mayor and city council of Baltimore be, and they are hereby, authorized to grant and convey to the United States of America any lots or parcels of ground owned by it, and forming part of any square of ground, which square, or any part of which, the United States of America may purchase for the erection of a building for a post-office, court-house, or other public offices, and the same shall be subject to all the provisions of the preceding section of this act.

"SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

"ORDINANCE.

"An ordinance authorizing the mayor to purchase and to convey to the United States of America two lots of ground on North street, leased by the city of Baltimore, and adjoining the site selected by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for a new post-office, court-house, and other public offices for the United States Government.

"Whereas the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States has selected as a site for a new post-office, court-house, and other public offices of the United States in the city of Baltimore certain lots of ground situate on Monument Square, Fayette, and Lexington streets; and

"Whereas the sub-committee of the House of Representatives of the United States have determined to report an appropriation of $550,000 for the purchase of said site, together with certain lots of ground adjoining thereto, situate on North street, provided the city of Baltimore would donate the two lots of ground belonging to it situate on the west side of North street, immediately adjacent to the site aforesaid: Therefore,

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted and ordained by the mayor and city council of Baltimore,

That the mayor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase the two ground-rents, one of $150 and the other of $250 per annum, upon the two lots of ground now leased by the city, on the west side of North street, adjoining the lots of ground selected by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for the purposes of a post-office, court-house, and other public offices for the United States, upon which lots are situated the buildings occupied by the water department and No. 4 engine-house, belonging to the city, and reserving the right to the city to remove all the materials upon said two lots of ground, and to convey the same in fee-simple to the United States of America for the use of the United States for the purpose aforesaid.

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted and ordained, That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid, to be taken out of the levy of 1880, the said sum to be paid to the mayor by the city register upon the warrant of the comptroller of the city.

During the reading of the report the following colloquy took place: Mr. COFFROTH. I ask that the reading be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Any member has the right to request the reading of the report.

Mr. KEIFER. Can it not be dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARNER. I insist on the report being read. I want to hear what it is.

Mr. KEIFER. I think we have heard enough of the report, and I therefore move to dispense with its further reading.

Mr. WARNER. Then I shall move the House adjourn; for if we are to vote on a question of this kind without explanation and without discussion I think we ought to adjourn.

Mr. KEIFER. I did not understand the gentleman was paying attention to the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The rules were suspended to bring the bill before the House for consideration, and it is now open to discussion and amendment.

Mr. WARNER. Then I withdraw the demand for the reading of the bill if it is now before the House for consideration.

Mr. KIMMEL. I propose to demand the previous question, but will now answer any question which gentlemen may ask.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to make some inquiries in reference to this bill. Five hundred and fifty thousand dollars seems to me to be a large sum to pay for a place to put a post-office. I think I see in that two or three millions of dollars for this post-office before we get through with it. Perhaps, as has been suggested to me, there may be five millions. I think we are spending too much money on this class of buildings.

Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from Maryland, who has charge of this bill from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, whether by going a little distance from this particular locality a site suitable for a post-office could not be purchased at a considerably less sum?

Mr. KIMMEL. Not within such a distance of the center of the city of Baltimore, where the business is all transacted, could a site be bought for less money than this. I will say, for the information of the gentleman, a site better fitted than this was abandoned because it could not be bought for that money, and that site was only two-thirds the size of this one.

Mr. WARNER. What examination has been made by the committee having this bill in charge?

Mr. KIMMEL. It has been examined again and again by the committee, and the Secretary of the Treasury was directed by the law of 18th of June to make that selection. He made the selection and reported it in his letter to this House, and now appropriation is asked to carry out his recommendation.

Mr. WARNER. I will ask the gentleman further to explain how it comes that $50,000 more is required than was voted at one time for this very site?

Mr. KIMMEL. I will explain that with a great deal of pleasure. When the bill was first passed it was understood the Secretary of the Treasury favored the Baltimore street site. It was found that site could not be bought for less than $600,000. The Secretary of the Treasury then looked for another site. He found one much more beautiful, but not so convenient, and that $500,000 would buy a part of that square; but he considered so valuable a building as the one for a post-office in Baltimore should not have other buildings in near proximity thereto. For the purpose, then, of not having any such building near this post-office, he proposed to the city of Baltimore it should purchase the adjoining piece of ground and make it a public park. That would have brought two jurisdictions over one piece of property, one block, which was not thought advisable. The city of Baltimore then proposed the United States Government should appropriate $50,000 more and the city would deed its property, valued at about $50,000, to the General Government, thus giving it the possession of the whole property, that deeding of this property to the United States costing the city of Baltimore $50,000 more to move to additional buildings.

Mr. WARNER. I do not wish to antagonize this bill, but I should like to see the whole matter in print before I am called upon to vote on it.

Mr. KIMMEL. The gentleman spoke about the cost of the site; I have the papers here to show that similar sites heretofore have cost the Government a very much larger amount of money: In New York, $1,500,000; in Philadelphia, $1,200,000; in Saint Louis, $700,000; Cincinnati, $500,000, and so on.

Mr. WARNER. I am not presuming this is not the best thing that can be done, but it seems to me a very large sum to pay for a site for this building.

Mr. WILSON. It is the best site and the cheapest.

Mr. KIMMEL. It is a large sum of money for a site, but it is a good thing to have this building in the right place. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KIMMEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD SINKING FUND.

Mr. McLANE. I am directed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to move to suspend the rules for the purpose of bringing before this House for consideration a bill (H. R. No. 3790) to alter and amend the sinking-fund act approved May 7, 1878, with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to alter and amend the act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act," approved May 7, 1878, be amended to read as follows:

That there shall be established in the Treasury of the United States a sinking fund, which shall be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in bonds of the United States or in the first-mortgage bonds of said companies respectively, as the Secretary may prefer, and the semi-annual income thereof shall be in like manner from time to time invested, and the same shall accumulate and be disposed of as hereinafter mentioned. All the bonds belonging to said fund shall, as fast as they shall be obtained, be so stamped as to show that they belong to said fund, and that they are not good in the hands of other holders than the Secretary of the Treasury until they shall have been indorsed by him and publicly disposed of pursuant to this act.

SEC. 2. That section 4 of the aforesaid act be altered and amended to read as follows:

That there shall be carried to the credit of the said fund, from time to time as settlements are made by the accounting officers of the Treasury, the one-half of the compensation for services hereinbefore named, rendered for the Government by said Central Pacific Railroad Company, not applied in liquidation of interest; and, in addition thereto, the said company shall, on the 1st day of April and October in each year, pay into the Treasury, to the credit of said sinking fund, the sum of $600,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to make the 5 per cent. of the net earnings of its said road payable to the United States under said act of 1862, and the whole sum earned by it as compensation for services rendered for the United States, together with the sum by this section required to be paid, amount in the aggregate to 35 per cent. of the whole net earnings of said railroad company, ascertained and defined as hereinbefore provided, for the half year ending on the last day of December and June, respectively, next preceding.

That there shall be carried to the credit of the said fund, from time to time as settlements are made by the accounting officers of the Treasury, the one-half of the compensation for services hereinbefore named, rendered for the Government by said Union Pacific Railroad Company, not applied in liquidation of interest; and, in addition thereto, the said company shall, on the 1st day of April and October in each year, pay into the Treasury, to the credit of said sinking fund, the sum of $425,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to make the 5 per cent. of the net earnings of its said road payable to the United States under said act of 1862, and the whole sum earned by it as compensation for services rendered for the United States, together with the sum by this section required to be paid, amount in the aggregate to 35 per cent. of the whole net earnings of said railroad company, ascertained and defined as hereinbefore provided, for the half year ending on the last day of December and June, respectively, next preceding.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer to the sinking fund established by the act of which this act is amendatory, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States due to either of said railroad companies respectively for services, and not lawfully retainable on account of interest on bonds issued to said companies paid by the United States or on account of 5 per cent. of net earnings, such sum as may be required in satisfaction of the requirements of said act; and all laws inconsistent with the provisions of this section so far as relates to said companies are hereby repealed.

To which the following is an amendment:

SEC. 4. That this act, and the act of which this is amendatory, shall be applicable to any and all persons and corporations into whose business either or both of said Union or Central Pacific Railroads may lawfully come by purchase, consolidation, or otherwise, as well as to the original companies.

Mr. McLANE. I ask permission to make an explanation to the House.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What is the motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion here is to suspend the rules and consider this bill.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. COX. I would like by unanimous consent to ask him a question. I would like to know if the purpose of this bill is simply to carry out the provisions of the funding act?

Mr. McLANE. That is all; there is nothing more in it. The object is simply to carry out the details of what is known as the funding bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and consider this bill.

Mr. WARNER. This is a matter of great importance, and I think it ought to be printed.

Mr. HOUSE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question, by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire if the object is to suspend the rules and consider this bill, or to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to consider the bill.

Mr. PAGE. To-day?

The SPEAKER. Yes, to-day.

Mr. McLANE. If the House will permit me, out of deference to the unanimous vote of the committee sending the bill here, to make a short explanation, I should have, I think, the unanimous vote of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Has the motion been adopted to consider the bill?

The SPEAKER. It has not yet.

Mr. HOUSE. I wish the gentleman from Maryland would permit me to ask him a question. What is the object in passing this bill under a suspension of the rules? Why not permit it to go to the Calendar, where an opportunity might be had for its consideration?

Mr. McLANE. I will explain to the gentleman as I proceed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has not the gentleman from Maryland a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to this matter? I would suggest that he have that letter read.

Mr. McLANE. I will do so presently.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to debate until the question is decided as to whether this subject is to be considered now or not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill. The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLANE. Do I understand that there is objection made to my explaining this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. McLANE. The House will remember that by the provisions of the funding act the moneys due to the sinking fund were required by law to be invested in 5 per cent. United States bonds.

Now, as that loan reaches its termination the Secretary of the Treasury has refrained from investing in it. He now asks authority to invest in any United States bonds, and a further authority to invest in the first-mortgage bonds, and he sets forth that the Government of the United States is equally interested with the roads in the sinking fund, and that the first-mortgage bonds being prior to the interest of the United States it is in the interest of the United States as well as of the roads to avail itself of that better investment. The first-mortgage bonds at the current market rates will yield nearly 5 per cent., whereas the 5 and 4 per cent. bonds yield much less, and therefore it is entirely in the interest of the United States as well as of the railways that the Secretary of the Treasury should have the power to invest—

Mr. HUBBELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. McLANE. Let me finish my sentence first.

Mr. HUBBELL. Will the gentleman tell us what the first-mortgage bonds are now worth in the market?

Mr. McLANE. I will as we get along, if you will only wait.

The Secretary of the Treasury therefore recommends he have power conferred by law to invest in the first-mortgage bonds as well as in United States bonds, the existing law confining him to investment in 5 per cent. bonds, which, as the House well knows, expire in 1881-'82. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary that legal authority should be given to the Secretary of the Treasury to invest in some other security. The only point at issue in that bill is as to what the security shall be invested in. The bill provides it shall be in United States bonds or the first-mortgage bonds of the roads, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COX. Has the Secretary of the Treasury written a letter on the subject?

Mr. McLANE. You shall have that too.

Mr. COX. All right.

Mr. McLANE. The second section of the bill provides the money belonging to the sinking fund, instead of lying all the year in the Treasury without interest, shall be invested as it accrues. The law now requires that it shall be invested on the 1st day of April every year, and we lose a year's interest on a portion of it, and we lose some interest on all of it. The second section of this bill provides it shall go at once to the sinking fund as soon as it reaches the Treasury.

The third section of the bill provides accounts shall be made up by the 1st of April instead of the 1st of February, the 1st of February having been found too early a date.

The accounts not coming in, being made up to January, they do not reach the Government in time to have them settled and audited on the 1st of February, therefore we give two additional months, and in lieu of the 1st of February the 1st of April is provided, the 1st of February having been the day fixed in the Thurman act. The third section releases the moneys now locked up in the Treasury by the act of 1873, awaiting the termination of these railroad suits; these suits being now terminated, these moneys are allowed to go to the sinking fund. The fourth section of the act provides that this Thurman act (which now applies to the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific) shall apply to either or both of these roads in case they should ever be consolidated. That is all there is in the bill.

I now ask the Clerk to read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury on the question of investments.

Mr. ATKINS. Is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. McLANE. It is.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1879.

SIR: The third section of the act of Congress approved May 7, 1878, entitled "An act to alter and amend the act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act," provides "that there shall be established in the Treasury of the United States a sinking fund, which shall be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in bonds of the United States; and the semi-annual income thereof shall be in like manner from time to time invested, and the same shall accumulate and be disposed of as hereinafter mentioned. And in making such investments the Secretary shall prefer the 5 per cent. bonds of the United States, unless, for good reasons appearing to him, and which he shall report to Congress, he shall at any time deem it advisable to invest in other bonds of the United States."

The only investment yet made under the provisions of this act has been made in the 5 per cent. bonds of 1881, as follows: On account of sinking fund, Union Pacific Railroad Company, principal, $59,500, and premium, $3,049.37; and on account of sinking fund, Central Pacific Railway Company, principal, $36,700, and premium, $1,880.88.

It is very probable that this loan will be called in and funded into 4 per cent. bonds within one year after it is due. If, therefore, this loan is redeemed by May 1, 1882, this investment would only realize to the fund 3.32 per cent. per annum.

The advantage to the fund of investments in 4 per cent. bonds at par is apparent unless the market price of the 4½ per cent. bonds falls below 105.03, the 5 per cent. bonds below 103.02, and currency sixes below 126.44. I have therefore to inform Congress, in accordance with the requirements of the statute, that investments will hereafter be made in the 4 or 4½ per cent. bonds or the currency sixes, as may be most advantageous to the fund, having regard to the length of time the investment is to continue.

As the interests of the United States and the railroad companies in this fund are reciprocal, I would recommend that the law be so modified as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, at his discretion, to invest such amounts as may be from time to time payable to this fund in the first-mortgage bonds of the respective roads, as authorized by the tenth section of the act of July 2, 1864. (13 Statutes, 358.)

This will give the roads a better rate of interest on the fund without detriment to the United States.

The United States, as a deferred creditor, is interested to the extent of the preferred bonds.

The ninth section of the act of May 7, 1878, provides that all sums required to be paid into the sinking fund under this act or under the acts hereinbefore referred to be made a lien upon all the property and franchises of the roads, "subject to any lawfully prior and paramount mortgage, lien, or claim thereon." As these bonds are a prior lien on this fund, better investment for the fund itself cannot be obtained, so long as they can be purchased below the market rate of the currency sixes.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask if it be agreeable to the gentleman in charge of the bill to strike out the provision that authorizes the investment of this sinking fund in the bonds of the railroad company? It seems to me there is danger in that.

Mr. McLANE. I do not feel authorized to make that change.

The SPEAKER. If the House agrees to consider the bill that will be a matter to submit before the previous question is voted on.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Maryland will allow me and I can have consent I would like to say one word. The indebtedness of these companies is about sixty-five millions of debt to the United States and the bonded indebtedness; and one of the popular views taken of the subject is that those companies when the time comes when they must pay the United States indebtedness could easily afford to let the roads go into liquidation, buy them up and satisfy the whole indebtedness. And if so, the very bonds used for investment by the Government must be sacrificed.

Mr. MARSH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question or two.

Mr. McLANE. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MARSH. What is now the price of the first-mortgage bonds of the road?

Mr. McLANE. That is stated in what has just been read from the desk, I believe.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is about one hundred and twenty.

Mr. MARSH. I desire to ask another question. Does this bill include the Northern Pacific bonds and authorize investment in the first-mortgage bonds of the Northern Pacific?

Mr. McLANE. If the House had paid attention to the explanation I gave, gentlemen would have understood this act is simply an act to regulate the details of the Thurman act. It has no relation to any road except the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific.

Mr. MARSH. I ask one other question. Why is authority sought to be given to the Treasury Department to invest these moneys in securities other than the securities of the Government itself?

Mr. McLANE. The reason given by the Secretary of the Treasury has just been read from the Clerk's desk. That reason is that the first-mortgage bond of the railroad yields a better interest than the bond of the United States at 4 or 4½ or 5 per cent. And it is entirely in the interest of the United States as it is in the interest of the railroad that the best possible security and the best possible interest should be obtained for that sinking fund. Therefore, in the original law it was deemed wise to confine it to the United States bonds and to the United States 5 per cent. bonds! Now the Secretary explains that that 5 per cent. bond will soon be out of existence, and therefore he will be obliged to invest in some lower rate of United States bonds. In that connection he explains that the first-mortgage bond of the railroad is a better investment than the 4 per cent. United States bond. Then he proceeds to answer the question which has been just put to me by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.] He explains that the first-mortgage debt of the railroad is a debt which is a prior lien to that of the United States upon those roads. He makes that explanation and gives that as the reason for this proposed legislation, and the House will observe that it is the holder of the first-mortgage bond who would buy in the road if, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas, it should be sold under a foreclosure. It would be well for the United States if the entire first-mortgage debt was in the sinking fund.

Mr. REAGAN. I think I have been misunderstood by the gentleman from Maryland. The point I made was that it had been insisted all along that taking the $65,000,000 of debt to the United States and the bonded indebtedness when the time came to pay the debt to the United States, the company, in view of the indebtedness to the United States and to the bondholders, could go into liquidation, buy the road, and discharge the whole indebtedness, and, if so, would discharge the debt represented by the very bonds proposed to be taken for the sinking fund.

Mr. McLANE. I understood the gentleman correctly, and if he will give me his attention I have a reply for him.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a question of order. I wish to inquire if debate is in order?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent it was allowed.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that unanimous consent has been exhausted some time ago. I understood it was limited to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLANE.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland would have under the rules of the House one hour, unanimous consent having been given to him for an explanation.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FINLEY. Is not the pending question the motion to suspend the rules and consider the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FINLEY. Then is it in order to debate the bill when that is the pending question?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from Maryland to explain the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I object to anybody else being heard except the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Maryland to agree to let the bill be placed on the public Calendar, that members may have an opportunity of examining it.

Mr. McLANE. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois will ask me to defer action on the bill when I tell him the Secretary of the Treasury has been in correspondence with the committee since the first week in December, representing to the committee that he has now in the Treasury not bearing interest a large accumulation due to the sinking fund, and that it is in the interest of the United States as well as in the interest of the railroad that he seeks authority to make the investment. But in so far as the power to extend the investment is concerned, the railroads have this same interest in it that the Secretary of the Treasury has. And the Committee on Pacific Railroads have been furnished with the same authority from the railroads as they have been from the Treasury to represent that it is their interest, as it is the interest of the Government, to have this fund invested. But representing the Government I did not think it necessary to say whether the railroads approved of the bill or not. But if it is a matter of interest to anybody I wish to state that the railroads recognize their interest as involved in the prompt investment of moneys due to the sinking fund precisely as the Government recognizes its interest in having the moneys due to the sinking fund promptly invested. And there is in truth no question at issue but the one as to how that money shall be invested, whether it shall be confined to United States bonds as it was in the original Thurman act, or whether it shall be extended to the first-mortgage bonds of these railroads.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It may be that the Secretary of the Treasury thinks that this will be to the advantage of the Government; but there are many members here who fear that this bill will result in disadvantage to the Government. If in order, I will move that this bill be placed on the public Calendar.

Mr. SPARKS. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McLANE. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKS. Under the present law the Secretary of the Treasury is now authorized to invest this sinking fund in 5 per cent. bonds, that are to-day selling at perhaps 1.03½. He now asks for authority (and this bill proposes to grant it) to invest in currency sixes in 4 per cents. and in 4½ per cent. bonds. The currency sixes are selling now for say 120, and the 4½ per cents for perhaps 109, and the 4 per cents at say 107. It will therefore be seen that if you extend the authority to invest in other bonds than 5 per cents the Government must pay more money for those bonds on its investment. In addition to that the Secretary asks authority to invest in the first-mortgage railroad bonds which are now selling (as it is stated) at 120. I cannot see any advantage to be gained to the Government in extending this authority to purchase these other securities. You may get a better interest on these other bonds, but, as it will readily be seen, you must pay a great deal more money for the bonds; hence I think it would be well to leave the matter where it is.

Mr. McLANE. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] will give attention now to my reply to his inquiry I think he will be satisfied. The Secretary of the Treasury explains perfectly in his letter—which, though it has been read to the House, nobody seems to have heard—that at the present market prices United States bonds are not as good an investment for the sinking fund as the first-mortgage bonds of the roads will be. As the market price of these latter rise they may cease to be a good investment, and they will not in that event be purchased for the sinking fund. And by tables that are as well understood as the tables of logarithms, we know exactly what each of those bonds is in value to the sinking fund when we have the market price, the rate of interest, and the period of time the bond has to run.

Mr. SPARKS. If the gentleman will allow me a moment. By the passage of this bill would you not increase the market value of the particular bonds that you authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase for the sinking fund?

Mr. McLANE. Doubtless that would be so.

Mr. SPARKS. Would it not have the effect to fluctuate the market value of those bonds?

Mr. McLANE. Doubtless the bond purchased would enhance in value even with the United States bonds.

Mr. SPARKS. As this is so, and it opens the doors to speculation, would it not be better to leave the law as it now stands, and thereby keep the doors closed to any chance for fluctuation or speculation?

Mr. McLANE. Why, sir, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] certainly did not hear the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury read, and did not hear my explanation, because both stated that the 5 per cent. bonds expiring in 1881, the Government would actually suffer a loss when it came to change that investment, and that a new investment was absolutely necessary after 1881, and that any new bond would be enhanced in value by such investment thereof in the sinking fund.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman why it is, if the Committee of Ways and Means has been over two months considering this bill, he is not willing that the House may have a few days to consider it?

Mr. McLANE. We have not been as many hours considering it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. You said that the Secretary of the Treasury sent in this proposition in December last.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman knows the difficulty of making any report from the committees of this House. The Committee on the Pacific Railroad gave but one day's deliberation to this question. The letters of the Secretary of the Treasury were referred, and there was a unanimous agreement to include these first-mortgage bonds of the main roads in the sinking fund. Whether the power should be still more extended was also discussed. There was a question as to whether the bonds of all the branch roads which had prior liens to the claims of the United States should be made part of the investment, but that was not deemed expedient. What is here proposed was thought sufficient and best for the very reason given by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] that the Secretary might, in exercising his discretion, invest in the bonds of this branch road or of that branch road as he would find them more profitable to purchase in the market, and that in this widening unnecessarily his discretion speculation might be unduly excited in these bonds and the interest of the United States and the roads thereby injuriously affected.

It was thought by others, like the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] that it was more desirable to confine him to the United States bonds proper. But upon investigation we were satisfied that an investment in the first-mortgage bonds of the Union Pacific and of the Central Pacific Railroads was in the interest of the United States. Now, I want to make a word more of explanation in reply to the inquiry why it is to the interest of the United States to invest in these railroad first-mortgage bonds.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly. The only embarrassment I feel is in consuming the time of the House.

Mr. HUTCHINS. If the time should come when the road must be sold to pay the bonds becoming due, and it should not be sold for enough to pay the bonds, would not the Government, by making this investment, be paying the first-mortgage bondholder with the money of the Government?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly not; this is not the Government's money more than it is the road's money. The gentleman from New York [Mr.

HUTCHINS] knows very well how this sinking fund is to be created.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Is not the Government obliged to pay the debt which it does not owe? The Government does not owe these first-mortgage bonds.

Mr. McLANE. This sinking-fund's money is the money of the railroad. I am surprised at the gentleman's inquiry. The sinking fund is the money of the railroad.

Mr. HUTCHINS. To be invested at 5 per cent.?

Mr. McLANE. In one way and another.

Mr. HUTCHINS. And it is made 25 per cent.

Mr. McLANE. That is an artifice of the law which brings up their investments to 25 per cent. of receipts.

Mr. FISHER. If I may be allowed to ask a question, the object of this bill is—

Mr. WILLIS. Allow me one question.

Mr. McLANE. There is a gentleman on my right here who has a question.

Mr. FISHER. My question is, whether the object of this bill is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to invest this money in the first-mortgage bonds, where the Government is already holding the second-mortgage bonds?

Mr. McLANE. That is so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The Government does not now invest this money in any railroad bonds.

Mr. FISHER. But I understand that the Government holds the second-mortgage bonds.

Mr. McLANE. That is the explanation which I desired to make to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] that inasmuch as these first-mortgage bonds are prior liens to the liens of the Government, the Government would have to pay these first-mortgage bonds before it could take the road.

I recognize perfectly what the gentleman from Texas refers to; and I am happy to say to him that the Committee on Pacific Railroads propose to empower the Attorney-General of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury, in case of any such foreclosure, to cover the Government interest. But as I have already explained, if the Government owned the entire amount of first-mortgage bonds no such contingency could occur. If we would take this sinking-fund money and invest it from year to year in first-mortgage bonds, then it would not be within the power of the railroad companies to foreclose; it would be for the Government of the United States to foreclose.

Mr. REAGAN. I will ask the gentleman from Maryland whether he will consent—

Mr. WILBER. I would like to make one suggestion.

Mr. McLANE. I have said several times that my only embarrassment arises from my unwillingness to occupy the time of the House. Of course I am ready to answer any inquiry with very great pleasure.

Mr. WILBER. It is very evident that we do not fully understand this matter. I think it would be well to put it over and fix a time for its consideration, (though it be only one or two days hence,) so that we may vote upon the question intelligently.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I think this is a very important matter. No one has had time to examine it thoroughly except the committee. For the purpose of putting it over for one week, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 821) fixing the compensation of enlisted men in the Signal Service, United States Army, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be indefinitely postponed if there be no objection.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill was introduced by me, and if the Senator who makes the report has no objection I should like to have it placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. BURNSIDE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Perry E. Brochus, administrator of the estate of Augustin Maurin, deceased, praying the passage of a law authorizing payment of the amount of a draft for $500, drawn by Colonel John B. Grayson, acting commissary of subsistence United States Army, at Santa Fe, New Mexico, May 4, 1861, for supplies furnished United States troops, and which draft is alleged to have been lost, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1395) for the relief of the estate of Augustin Maurin.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WITHERS. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 742) for the relief of Mary A. Lord, to report it adversely. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] may desire the bill to be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 910) to amend section 3020 of the Revised Statutes, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1314) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur, collector of the port of New York, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BECK, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 710) to refund to Jackson Grubb, or his legal representative, internal tax wrongfully collected, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1015) for the relief of Silas F. Field, one of the sureties on the bond of John G. Halliburton, deceased, late marshal of the United States in and for the eastern district of Arkansas, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask, if the Senator from Kentucky has no objection, that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. I have no objection at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 41) to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and to regulate proceedings before them, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1352) for the relief of George G. Snyder, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas Hastie, of Chicago, Illinois, praying for a reissue of $20,000 of 5-20 United States bonds destroyed by fire in October, 1871, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1036) for the relief of Edmund T. Ryan, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2270) to pay for expert services relating to the metric system rendered the Forty-fifth Congress, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. EATON. The Committee on Foreign Relations have directed me to report a bill authorizing certain persons to accept decorations from certain foreign powers, and to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of sundry bills and joint resolutions relating to the subject-matter of the bill, the bill being a substitute for all the bills and joint resolutions which I send to the Chair.

The bill (S. No. 1396) authorizing certain persons therein named to accept of certain decorations and presents therein named from foreign governments was read twice by its title.

The Committee on Foreign Relations were discharged from the further consideration of the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 284) authorizing William J. Wilson, assistant surgeon United States Army, to receive from the Khedive of Egypt a decoration for gallantry in battle in the action near Gura, Abyssinia, March 7, 1876;

A bill (H. R. No. 1403) authorizing Captain Joseph Irish, of the United States Revenue Marine Service, to accept a grand cross of naval merit of the second class from the Spanish Government;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 7) authorizing Lieutenant Francis V. Greene, United States Army, to accept certain decorations conferred upon him by the Emperor of Russia;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 11) authorizing Commodore J. W. A. Nicholson, United States Navy, to accept the grand cross of naval merit from the King of Spain;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 112) authorizing First Lieutenant Henry Metcalfe, of the Ordnance Department, United States Army, to accept a decoration from the Sultan of Turkey;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 41) authorizing Rear-Admiral John J. Almy, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the King of the Hawaiian Islands;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 74) authorizing Lieutenant Z. L. Tanner, of the United States Navy, late commanding Pacific mail steamer City of Peking, to accept a pair of flower-vases and a lacquered box from the Japanese government;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 208) authorizing General Francis A. Walker, Superintendent of the Census, to accept decorations from the governments of Sweden and Spain; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 110) authorizing Lieutenant Benjamin H. Buckingham, of the United States Navy, to accept a decoration conferred upon him by the President of the French Republic.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2359) for the relief of William D. Oyler, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 239) for the relief of Alderson T. Keene, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 282) for the relief of Alstorpeus Werninger, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 100) for the relief of A. S. Bloom, late a major in the Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 629) for the relief of A. H. von Leutwitz, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HAMPTON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 478) to replace the name of Lawrence A. Williams, late major Sixth Cavalry, United States Army, upon the rolls of the Army, to report it back. I will state that we have learned that the gentleman is dead. I therefore move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3347) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish four pieces of condemned ordnance for the soldiers' monument at Marietta, Ohio, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the annual report of the Librarian of Congress be printed, and that the usual number of five hundred extra copies, with paper covers, be printed for distribution by the Librarian.

PONCA INDIAN INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MORGAN, from the select committee to examine into the circumstances connected with the removal of the Northern Cheyennes from the Sioux reservation to the Indian Territory, submitted the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the select committee to examine into the removal of the Northern Cheyenne Indians is authorized to print for the use of the committee and the Senate the testimony as taken in the progress of the investigation of the removal of the Ponca Indians.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCPHERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1397) to incorporate the Spanish-American Commercial Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COKE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1398) to provide for the better security of life on sea-going steam-vessels; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAILEY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1399) to refund the national debt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1400) for the relief of William Bowen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1401) to amend the statutes relating to letters-patent for inventions, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1402) to amend section 4439 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition, 1878, so that masters of steam-vessels shall be required to pay a fee of $10 for a license once in five years; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GROOME (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1403) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1404) to provide for issuing patents for public lands claimed under the pre-emption and homestead laws in cases where the claimants have become insane; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KELLOGG asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1406) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Jane Veazie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 87) authorizing the printing of the report of the yellow-fever commission; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

SCHOOL OF FORESTRY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I present a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Saint Paul, Minnesota, in favor of a donation of public lands to the State of Minnesota as an endowment of a school of forestry, and I also ask leave to introduce a bill to carry out the suggestion of the memorial.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1405) to aid in the endowment of a school of forestry at Saint Paul, Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying memorial, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Saint Paul, respectfully represent that it appears from the annual reports of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, for several successive years last past, that the valuable timber lands of the United States have been rapidly disposed of without the Government receiving adequate compensation therefor; that these lands, especially on the headwaters of the Mississippi River, have been so lavishly denuded of their timber as to make a scarcity of pine timber imminent, and to injure the capacity of said river for navigation.

Your memorialists are informed and believe that the United States still possess several million acres of timber land in the northern part of Minnesota, including waste lands that are only fit for bearing timber, and they deem it important to the public interest that improved methods be speedily adopted for the administration of these lands with a view to the production, preservation, and prudent consumption of timber thereon.

Your memorialists have ascertained that in several European States, whose governments have for centuries cared for the re-growth and preservation of forests, there have been established and maintained at public expense schools for theoretical and practical instruction in forestry, which have proved eminently useful. There are in Europe thirty-seven schools of forestry, of which twenty-two are separate, and fifteen are connected with agricultural or polytechnic institutions.

Although the United States are by nature more richly endowed with forests than almost any other country, there has never been established in this country, so far as your memorialists are informed, any institution specially designed to promote the science and practice of forestry. It has, however, come to be the opinion of the most enlightened people of this country that some measures should be promptly adopted looking to a more economical management of timber lands, and your memorialists believe that one measure toward this important object might well be the endowment by Congress of a school of forestry. They therefore recommend that provision be made for such an institution, to be located where it can be the most generally useful. On account, however, of the extensive timber-land property of the United States in the limits of the State of Minnesota, and of the great area of land on the sources of the Mississippi which is only adapted to timber growing, it would seem that Minnesota would be the most suitable State in which to locate a school of forestry. Your memorialists are of the opinion that such a school should furnish instruction in the theory and practice of forestry substantially after the plan of the best-administered schools of the kind in Europe, so far as climate and soil will admit; that the theoretical instruction should take place mainly at the principal seat of the school, where also should be grounds for experimental forestry; and that branch stations under charge of the school should be maintained in the pine-timber regions for practical forestry; also, stations on prairie lands for experimental tree culture suited to such lands.

Believing that such an institution, liberally endowed and properly conducted, would at present, as well as in the future, prove of great practical benefit to the important timber resources of the Northwest and the various mechanical and industrial pursuits depending thereon, also that it would help to create and diffuse correct sentiments in respect to the enforcement of law in regard to timber lands of the Government, your memorialists respectfully ask that Congress will donate three hundred sections of public land to the State of Minnesota as an endowment of a school of forestry, and that said school be located at the city of Saint Paul, the capital of said State.

Your memorialists would refer to an accompanying form of a bill as containing some of the conditions they would like to see adopted for the inviolability of the proposed endowment.

HENRY H. SIBLEY,

President Chamber of Commerce, Saint Paul, Minnesota.

SAINT PAUL, February 16, 1880.

RIGHT OF PETITION.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire and report whether any American citizens have been arrested or imprisoned for the exercise of their constitutional right to petition this body concerning a matter of grave public interest, namely, the title to a seat in this body of a Senator from the State of which they are citizens; with power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4903) to provide for the purchase of a site for a post-office and other Government buildings in the city of Baltimore, Maryland; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MAJOR P. P. G. HALL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the Calendar, commencing at the point reached at the last call.

The bill (S. No. 175) for the relief of Major P. P. G. Hall was announced as being first in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. BURNSIDE. By instructions of the Committee on Military Affairs I made the report in this case, but I am satisfied that I did not give sufficient attention to the law touching the matter. Therefore I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN KANSAS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3968) for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished-reserve lands, in the State of Kansas; which was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report?

Mr. PLUMB. There is a report which accompanies a bill of the same general tenor, Senate bill No. 619.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report referred to will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLUMB January 13, 1880:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 619) "for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished-reserve lands, in the State of Kansas," respectfully report:

That the original draught of this bill was sent to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands by the Secretary of the Interior, under date of May 19, 1879, and his letter of transmission, together with a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the same subject and of like date, and the draught in question were referred to this committee. The necessity of the proposed legislation is clearly set forth in said letter and report, to which reference is here made. The simple object is to protect a small proportion of actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished-reserve lands in rights which have been expressly recognized by act of Congress, but which they have been prevented from perfecting by circumstances entirely beyond their control. Many of these settlers have made partial payments upon their lands, as well as valuable improvements, and have only been prevented from perfecting their titles by incongruous legislation. The bill simply allows these settlers to complete their titles under the new appraisement authorized by the act of 1876, and the committee agree with the Secretary and the Commissioner that "ordinary good faith" requires that they should have this right. The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

"Washington, May 19, 1879.

"SIR: I have the honor to submit for the consideration of Congress, with a recommendation for immediate action thereon, a draught of a bill for the relief of certain actual settlers upon the Kansas trust and diminished-reserve Indian lands in Kansas, who, by reason of failure to secure the assent of the Indians to the reappraisement provided for in the act of July 5, 1876, (Stats. 19, page 74,) have been unable to bring themselves within the provisions of section 1 of said act, and have thus been deprived of its manifestly intended benefits.

"The names and improvements of these settlers are all described in the documents referred to in the act, and have been both by that and the previous statute of June 23, 1874, (Stats. 18, page 272,) expressly recognized by Congress. Many of them have actually made large payments under the original act, and ordinary good faith now requires that they be permitted to complete their titles under the new appraisalment secured by the legislation of 1876. Those who have made partial payments under section 2 of the act of 1874 are equally entitled to the same relief.

"The bill submitted has the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as will appear by his report of this date, a copy of which I herewith inclose. Should the matter fail to receive attention at the present session great hardship will result, as the residue of the lands now thrown open to general settlement will at once be subject to disposal, orders to that effect having already been issued by this Department, while these settlers already in possession of large interests and improvements will be compelled to await future and uncertain legislation to secure them in the homes heretofore attempted to be confirmed to them by law, but which, under fortuitous circumstances, they have been unable to acquire.

"Very respectfully,

"C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

"Hon. J. E. McDONALD,
"Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate."

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
"Washington, May 19, 1879.

"Sir: Referring to Department letter of the 14th instant, returning approved the original lists of Kansas trust and diminished-reserve lands in Kansas, as reappraised by Messrs. Thomas S. Huffaker, H. W. Jones, and M. H. Newlin, commissioners, under the act of July 5, 1876, (19 Stats., 74,) and advising this office that the duplicate lists submitted for transmission to the Commissioner of the General Land Office have also been approved, and that he had been directed to offer for sale to actual settlers under section 2 of said act all the lands embraced in said lists, with the exception of those falling under the provisions of section 1 of the act, and those upon which entry has heretofore been allowed under section 2 of the act of June 23, 1874, (18 Stats., 272,) I have the honor to submit herewith, as directed in said letter, a draught of a bill for the relief of such actual settlers as by the changing policy imposed by the acts have been deprived of their intended benefits, and to make the following report thereon:

"All those persons mentioned in the first section of the act of July 5, 1876, are now outside of any relief, as those settlers who entered under the act of 1874 are under a repealed statute, and those who have not yet entered cannot comply with the act of 1876, by paying the first installment before January 1, 1877.

"Those persons who entered under section 2 of the act of 1874 prior to the act of 1876 are also not within the provisions of any existing statute. The penalties of the act of 1874 cannot be enforced, as that act is repealed by the act of 1876. They are not subject to the act of 1876, as they did not make entry under its provisions.

"Section 1 of the proposed bill grants relief to those persons mentioned in section 1 of the act of 1876, by permitting them to complete the payment for the lands to which they are entitled, under the act of 1876, at the newly-appraised value, allowing credit for all sums heretofore paid as principal and interest, which shall constitute one installment, and the balance to be paid in three equal annual installments, the first to be paid January 1, 1880, and the deferred installments to draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

"Section 2 of this bill extends the provisions of section 1 to persons who have made entries under section 2 of the act of June 23, 1874, and section 3 extends the provisions of section 2 of the act of 1876, relating to default and forfeiture, to all entries and requirements of the provisions of this bill.

"I inclose duplicate copies of said bill and of this report, and have the honor to recommend that the matter be laid before Congress with a recommendation for early and favorable action thereon.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"E. J. BROOKS,
"Acting Commissioner.

"The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Kansas whether this House bill as it now stands before us is identical with the draught submitted by the Secretary of the Interior at the last session, as stated in his letter?

Mr. PLUMB. Precisely the same as to every letter and word of it, except as to the fourth section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that?

Mr. PLUMB. The fourth section simply extends to settlers on the Kansas Indian reservation the privilege which has heretofore been extended to all settlers on the public lands, and that is, the right to acquire what is called an adjoining homestead by reason of settlement on the original homestead. For instance, a man who has eighty acres of land on which he is living can improve eighty acres of land adjoining without moving his actual residence upon the new eighty acres, the residents upon the old eighty acres answering for all purposes for residence upon the new. The fourth section extends that provision of the public land laws; and that is the only difference between the bill as reported by the Committee on Public Lands and the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the fourth section is one that the Secretary of the Interior did not recommend?

Mr. PLUMB. He did not recommend it. That was inserted by the House Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The effect of it is to give a man who may have taken up one homestead, for instance, and improved it, or who owns a farm that he has bought, the right to locate as homestead land an addition to his farm.

Mr. PLUMB. Precisely, as the law now is in reference to other public lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator be kind enough to show us the law as to other public lands?

Mr. PLUMB. I can do so very soon. [A pause.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator to let the bill go over without prejudice, and we can take it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. PLUMB. Of course I do not wish to detain the Senate this morning, nor do I desire to make any arrangement which will produce any considerable delay in this matter, because these people are living on this land actually as trespassers although in fact they are there by the action of the Government, their right being recognized by the Government, and it is a matter of considerable importance to them that there should be no delay. I have no objection to the bill going over to take its place for consideration to-morrow morning at the call of the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go over without prejudice until we look into the fourth section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. PLUMB. To be called at the call of the Calendar to-morrow morning?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To be first in order on the call of the Calendar to-morrow morning.

JAMES BURKE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 952) for the relief of James Burke; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $180.40 to enable the Secretary of War to reimburse to James Burke, superintendent of the national cemetery at Salisbury, North Carolina, the amount of a judgment, costs, and disbursements, which judgment was obtained against him in the circuit court of Pulaski County, Kentucky, at the suit of William H. Logan, for an alleged trespass, committed while in discharge of his duty as superintendent, which he defended, but was by the court condemned in damages and costs for $180.40.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY February 3, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was submitted the bill (S. No. 952) for the relief of James Burke, respectfully submit the following report:

This case was before this committee (see Senate bill No. 1771) during the Forty-fifth Congress, third session, and report thereon (No. 724) was submitted by Mr. BUTLER on behalf of the committee, from which the following is adopted:

"The case is stated by the letter from the Secretary of War, with accompanying documents, as follows:

"A.

"WAR DEPARTMENT.

"Washington City, December 18, 1878.

"The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the United States Senate a communication from the Quartermaster-General, dated December 11, 1878, transmitting a request from Superintendent James Burke for reimbursement of costs of suit entered against him by W. H. Logan for alleged trespass, together with copies of papers relating to the subject.

"The letter of the Quartermaster-General states the facts of the case, and concludes as follows:

"I think that a wrong has been done Burke under the color of law, and that his claim is just; but I know of no appropriation under control of the War Department which could properly be drawn upon to indemnify him. I suggest, therefore, that the papers in the case be referred to Congress, with a recommendation for favorable consideration."

"Concurring in the views of the Quartermaster-General, the case is respectfully submitted to Congress, with recommendation that an act be passed to reimburse Superintendent Burke for the costs of the suit and attorney's fees, amounting, as appears from accompanying sworn statement, to $180.40.

"Respectfully submitted.

"GEO. W. MCCRARY,

"Secretary of War.

"The PRESIDENT of the United States Senate."

"B.

"LOGAN'S CROSS-ROADS, KENTUCKY,

"October 12, 1875.

"Sir: Respectfully referring to letter of September 20 (O. N. C. 2363 '75) in regard to the difficulty between Mr. Logan and Mr. Burke, I have the honor to submit the following report:

"The colored laborer was sent by Mr. Burke to whitewash the picket fence on the north side of the cemetery, along by the outside of which was a growth of blackberry and other bushes. In order to do this the laborer cut down alongside of the fence a path about four feet wide, most of which was on Mr. Logan's land. The act was, I believe, done for no other purpose except to make it possible to whitewash the fence on the outside. The value of the blackberry briars is nothing; in fact, it is really an advantage to Mr. Logan's land to have them cleared off, and is so considered by every one in the neighborhood.

"The suit was brought on account of a personal enmity of Mr. Logan against the superintendent. In incidental conversation with the former, he the same as admitted to me such to be the fact. The quarrel has been of long standing, and the law has had to settle two cases already, both of which were decided in the favor of the superintendent, showing that the latter was considered to be the injured party in both cases.

"In this matter advantage was taken at once of the trespass to bring suit.

"Mr. Logan has the general reputation of being continually in litigation and quarrel with neighbors. I have endeavored to find out about the whole trouble during this time, by conversation with both parties concerned, and with others knowing of the facts, and I am satisfied that the fault rests almost entirely on Mr. Logan in the matters and troubles. His effort is to embarrass the superintendent and make his stay in the vicinity unpleasant. The superintendent has a good reputation and good credit both here and at Somerset, and I believe is attentive to his official duties. At his request I made an offer to Mr. Logan to leave the amount of damage done to the arbitration of two disinterested persons, but the offer was refused, the reason being given by Mr. Logan that the question of boundary on the cemetery front is also involved. He claims that he owns a strip of land along the front of the cemetery and between the cemetery boundary and the Columbia and Somerset road, on which there has been continual trespass by the superintendent. The deed to the United States, however, states as explicitly as is possible that each of the front corner-stones and the front boundary-line between them is on the line of the road referred to, so that there then can be no space between the road and the cemetery property.

"The suit was not called up this session, but was set for the next circuit court in April of next year.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"C. M. CLARK,

"O. E. Q. M. Department.

"Captain A. F. ROCKWELL,

"Assistant Quartermaster U. S. A.,

"In charge of National Cemeteries, Washington, D. C.

"(Through Lieutenant George M. Love, acting assistant quartermaster Sixteenth Infantry, U. S. A.)"

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington City, October 26, 1875.

"SIR: I have the honor to transmit certain papers relative to a suit for trespass brought against the superintendent of the national cemetery at Logan's Cross-Roads, Pulaski County, Kentucky, and to request that you will direct suitable counsel to be employed to defend the superintendent in the same, as well as the interests of the United States.

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"To the honorable the ATTORNEY-GENERAL."

"WM. W. BELKNAP,
"Secretary of War."

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
"Washington, October 29, 1875.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, together with a copy of a report from Captain A. F. Rockwell, assistant quartermaster United States Army, in charge of national cemeteries, and a letter of Major-General Rufus Ingalls, acting quartermaster-general, referring that report to you, and requesting that the subject of the report be submitted to me, and asking that the necessary measures be taken to defend the suit brought against the superintendent of the national cemetery at Logan's Cross-Roads, Pulaski County, Kentucky; which request is referred to me by you. The suit is one of trespass against the defendant for entering upon lands of the plaintiff, and the damages are laid at $60.

"From the statement of the case, I do not see how the title of the United States to the cemetery grounds can be brought in question, and the cost to the United States of defending the action would be much greater than the damage claimed. I do not think, therefore, that it is expedient to instruct the United States attorney to appear for the defense.

"The inclosures are herewith returned.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"Hon. W. W. BELKNAP,
"Secretary of War."

"EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
"Attorney-General."

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington City, D. C., December 2, 1875.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of October 29, 1875, transmitting certain papers relative to a request of this Department for counsel to defend the superintendent of the national cemetery in the suit for trespass instituted against him in the discharge of his official duties.

"The amount of damages claimed, it seems to me, is immaterial. This Department assumes the action of the superintendent and desires to protect him in the impending suit, and I have therefore again to request that you direct suitable counsel to be employed to defend him in the case.

"The title to the cemetery grounds is not involved in the suit, although it seems from the report of the civil engineer (herewith) that the question of boundary may arise.

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"The honorable the ATTORNEY-GENERAL."

"WM. W. BELKNAP,
"Secretary of War."

"WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., April 26, 1877.

"SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a communication of Superintendent James Burke, of Logan's Cross-Roads National Cemetery, requesting information as to the action taken in the matter of a certain suit against him for trespass, now pending.

"This case was first submitted to the Department of Justice October 26, 1875.

"The Attorney-General, in a letter dated October 29, 1875, expressed the opinion that it would not be expedient for the United States to defend the suit, as the cost of defense would exceed the damages claimed.

"The War Department objected to this view of the case, and renewed its request for the Department of Justice to defend the suit. (See letter of Secretary Belknap of December 2, 1875.) On August 10, 1876, the attention of the Department of Justice was invited to the matter, and information was requested as to what action had been taken in the premises.

"In reply, the Attorney-General stated that no action had been taken, and requested a copy of the plaintiff's declaration.

"This was furnished September 22, 1876, and nothing further has been heard from the Department of Justice on the subject.

"It would seem to be due to the superintendent, no less than to the War Department, that some action should be taken in the premises, and that forthwith.

"I inclose an extract from a report of Colonel N. H. Davis, inspector-general, on the Logan's Cross-Roads National Cemetery. I concur with Colonel Davis in regard to the propriety of the United States defending the suit.

"The alleged trespass occurred while the superintendent was attending to his official duties. The cost of defense may, perhaps, be more than the damages claimed; but the superintendent, out of his small compensation, can afford to pay neither, nor does it seem right that he should be compelled to.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"M. C. MEIGS,
"Quartermaster-General, Brevet Major-General, United States Army."
"The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR."

"NEW YORK CITY, October 23, 1876.

"SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith my report of an inspection of the Logan's Cross-Roads National Cemetery, Kentucky, second class, inspected October 7, 1876.

"An unfriendly feeling exists between Mr. W. H. Logan and Burke, the superintendent. The former owns the land adjoining the cemetery, and seems disposed to dictate and annoy from an overbearing spirit, and in mean and petty ways. Burke seems very independent and ill-disposed to conciliate.

"For having the briars and brush cut away so as to allow the Government fence to be painted and whitewashed, Logan has sued him for $60 trespass and $60 damages. The act produced no damage but rather a benefit to Logan's land. The trespass is such only in law, or technically, but not really. The case was postponed at the term of the circuit court of Pulaski County last spring to the fall term, at which term, recently, it was not reached. Burke asks that counsel be employed by the United States to defend him in the suit, and has made application through or to Captain A. F. Rockwell, assistant quartermaster, at Washington, on duty connected with the national cemeteries, for counsel. No reply received.

"I think he justly deserves protection in this matter, and the aid of counsel to be furnished by the United States.

"Very respectfully,

"N. H. DAVIS,
"Inspector-General, United States Army."

"The INSPECTOR-GENERAL,
"Headquarters Army of the United States, Washington, D. C."

"(Through headquarters Division of the Atlantic.)"

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
"Washington, May 5, 1877.

"SIR: I have received your letter of the 3d instant, referring to former letters from the War Department to the Department of Justice, relative to a suit brought by W. H. Logan against James Burke, superintendent of Logan's Cross-Roads National Cemetery, for trespass and damages, and transmitting a letter of the 26th ultimo, from the Quartermaster-General, with two inclosures, touching the matter. You request that the Department of Justice will take measures for the defense of Superintendent Burke. Upon examining the report of the Inspector-General, N. H. Davis, I am of opinion that the United States should not assume the responsibility of the act of Superintendent Burke, and should not defend the case for him. According to that report Burke was on bad terms with Logan, and was very 'independent and ill-disposed to conciliate.' Under the influence of this feeling, he entered upon Logan's ground and cut the briars and brush away so that the Government fence might be painted. For this act he is now sued in trespass by Logan. Whether the act did or did not produce any damage to Logan's land, it was a clear violation of his right of property, for which Logan is entitled to recover at least nominal damages. There was no justification for this trespass on the part of Burke. No question is involved having any reference to the title of the United States to its lands. While it is stated that 'alleged trespass occurred while the superintendent was attending to his official duties,' in the letter of the Quartermaster-General, the facts show that he had no official duty which entitled him to enter upon the land of a private citizen and to disturb the shrubbery there growing, whether wild or otherwise. It is not for a person thus intruding to say that he has benefited the land of the owner. The owner is entitled to the possession and enjoyment of his property without such disturbance.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"CHAS. DEVENS,
"Attorney-General."

"Hon. GEORGE W. MCCRARY,
"Secretary of War."

The case was tried in the circuit court of Pulaski County, Kentucky, at its September term, 1877, and the transcript shows the following to have been the verdict of the jury: "We of the jury find for the plaintiff one cent in damages," which verdict, it appears, according to the laws of Kentucky, carried the costs:

The transcript shows plaintiff's costs.....	$114 85
And the defendant's costs.....	40 55
Total costs.....	155 40

Much the larger portion of this cost bill is made up of witness fees, the witness fees of plaintiff amounting to $85, and of defendant to $33. The said Burke makes affidavit that he paid $25 as attorney's fees. This the committee consider reasonable.

As the case was tried in plaintiff's own county, and as the verdict is for purely nominal damages, the committee have no doubt that the trespass was purely technical. The removal of briars, a bush of which Pulaski County has doubtless enough and to spare, is estimated by a jury of the vicinage acquainted with briars at one cent, and the one-cent estimate was clearly because, upon proof of trespass, the law demanded some damages.

The suit was manifestly a "spite suit."

The officer was doing his duty faithfully, protecting the home of the dead, and hence should be relieved from the payment of costs for doing his duty.

Whereupon the committee report back Senate bill 952 without amendment and recommend its passage. In making this recommendation, the committee have considered the character of the business in which Mr. Burke was engaged, the necessity for the removal of the briars in the protection of the fence, the absurdity of the claim for damages, the verdict of the jury, and all the surrounding circumstances, and do not design this as a precedent, unless a special and exceptional case like it were presented.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF CHARLES B. SMITH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 287) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, in the settlement of the accounts of Charles B. Smith, deceased, late first lieutenant of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, to receive and allow, where the proper vouchers cannot be procured, a statement verified, or such other satisfactory evidence, of all expenditures or issues made by him for the Government, as will be sufficient to close his subsistence and quartermaster accounts upon the books of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY February 3, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 287) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased, respectfully submit the following report:

House bill No. 1163, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, having the same object in view, and in all respects similar to the bill now reported, passed the House May 31, 1878, and on reaching the Senate was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, June 3, 1878, and was reported back favorably from that committee, without amendment, with recommendation that the bill pass. Said report was made by Mr. BURXSIDE on behalf of the committee, and the committee adopt said report as applicable to this bill, changing the word "act," first line, into the word "bill," as follows:

"This bill authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury to receive and allow, where the proper vouchers cannot be procured, verified statements or other satisfactory evidence which will serve to account for disbursements made by Charles B. Smith, deceased, late first lieutenant Fifth Iowa Cavalry, while acting as commissary and quartermaster.

"The following is the report of the House Committee on Military Affairs:

"[House Report No. 262, Forty-fifth Congress, second session.]

"Mr. Strait, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. No. 1163:

"The Military Committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1163) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased, have had the same under consideration, and report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

"It appears from the affidavits and other documents filed in this case that the deceased, Charles B. Smith, was a first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster of the Fifth Regiment Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, and that at the close of the war he was honorably mustered out of the service of the United States; that subsequently, namely, in 1871, the deceased came to Washington, District of Columbia, from his home in Iowa, for the purpose of making answers to the statement of differences arising on the settlement of his accounts, both in property and money, while acting as regimental and brigade quartermaster in the field. It further appears from evidence on file in this case that shortly after his arrival in this city he was taken ill and died; that upon the arrival in Washington of his widow, she was unable to find any of his retained papers connected with his duties in the field; that they were either lost or stolen previous to her arrival; and the evidence shows that she has made due and diligent search for the same since the decease of her husband, without effect.

"The evidence of W. W. Lowe, late colonel Fifth Iowa Cavalry, with whom the deceased served as regimental and brigade quartermaster, and others, shows that the deceased enjoyed an enviable name for integrity, and that the said colonel is satisfied the deceased turned over all moneys and property for which he was accountable.

"Under these circumstances, with evidence that the officer had faithfully served his country in time of need, that his character for integrity is unimpeached, and the great hardships that would follow by compelling and distressing his widow and heirs to sacrifice their property to meet an unsettled account of an officer, who, if living, could make answer to these statements of differences, your committee believe that justice would be promoted by the passage of this bill.

"And your committee call attention to the wording of this bill, which provides that the accounting officers of the Treasury are to allow a statement verified, or such other satisfactory evidence, where the proper vouchers cannot be procured, in the settlement of the accounts of the deceased, thus protecting the Government to the full extent that is possible under the circumstances."

"From the evidence accompanying the record, your committee concur in the conclusions of the House committee, especially since the terms of the act are in accordance with precedents heretofore established by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. The sudden death of Lieutenant Smith, while in Washington for the purpose of settling his accounts, would seem to entitle his heirs to the relief contemplated by the act."

A careful examination by the committee of the papers accompanying the bill satisfies the committee that its former report was correct.

Wherefore, the committee report back Senate bill 287 without amendments, and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas what is the amount of the difference between the sum accounted for by the vouchers of this officer and the sum with which he is charged; in other words, how much does the bill involve?

Mr. MAXEY. The exact amount—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care about the exact amount; but about how much is it in round numbers?

Mr. MAXEY. It is shown in the papers, which I examined very carefully, to be somewhere between $400 and $500. The amount which was handled by this officer, Lieutenant Smith, was several thousand dollars; and the amount, as I recollect it—if the Senator desires, I will have the case go over until to-morrow in order that I can give the exact figures—

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, that is near enough.

Mr. MAXEY. Perhaps the Senator from Iowa knows better.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand it is a very small sum.

Mr. MAXEY. The whole case is simply this: Lieutenant Smith, who was acting as commissary and quartermaster, was sent for to settle up his accounts. He came on here. There seemed to be no trouble; no charge of fraud or anything of that kind, but he came here and was taken sick, bringing his papers with him, and he died suddenly while here. His wife was telegraphed for, came on, and was unable to find these vouchers. For that reason she cannot furnish the vouchers. That is all of the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would seem to imply that it is proved that he had vouchers when he came here; and ordinarily his vouchers would be submitted, I suppose, with his accounts, which the Treasury did not allow. However, as it is a very small sum apparently, it is not of so much consequence, but I should like to understand from the Senator the meaning of the word "such" in the eighth line of the bill, and whether it would not be wise in his opinion to strike out the word "such" so as to read "or other satisfactory evidence." "Such other" would seem to imply that a mere statement—

Mr. MAXEY. I see the point of the Senator, and I have no objection to striking out the word "such," as far as I am concerned personally.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion, and the amendment will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I think the words "or other satisfactory evidence" carry the implication that this "verified statement" is to be satisfactory to the accounting officers. Is that the view of the committee?

Mr. MAXEY. The committee was laboring under the impression that the loss of the original or best evidence being satisfactorily accounted for, under the law, there being no degrees in secondary evidence, whatever would be satisfactory secondary evidence would be such as the widow would have a right to present; and we do not propose to cover too wide a field as to what shall be secondary evidence satisfactory to supply the place of original evidence, the absence of which is satisfactorily accounted for in the opinion of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then if I correctly understand the Senator, his construction of the bill as it now stands is that this "verified statement" is to be one that satisfies the accounting officers.

Mr. MAXEY. It would be the best evidence of which the case is susceptible, first establishing the fact that the vouchers existed. That would be the condition-precedent before you could submit any secondary evidence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no doubt about that, and my only wish was to understand from the committee whether this "verified statement" must be one that should satisfy the accounting officers.

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being so I have no objection.

Mr. MAXEY. If I were a chancellor and the absence of primary evidence was accounted for by its destruction, whatever was the best secondary evidence possible that could be produced would be to me satisfactory.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT RIPLEY RESERVATION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1153) to restore to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that might as well go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator objects—

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Minnesota wishes to explain the bill I will withdraw the objection for the time being.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being withdrawn, the bill will be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL February 3, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1153) entitled "An act to restore to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes," have carefully considered the same, and submit the following report:

This bill passed the House of Representatives December 16, 1879, and was sent to the Senate and referred to your committee. Your committee addressed a letter to the Secretary of War, inclosing a copy of said bill, and asking for full information touching said military reservation, the necessity of retaining any portion of it for military purposes, and the views of the Department upon the propriety of passing the said bill, and received from the Secretary of War the following letter and inclosures, marked, respectively, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, to wit:

"No. 1.

"WAR DEPARTMENT,

"Washington City, January 6, 1880.

"SIR: Referring to your letter of the 22d ultimo, inclosing House bill No. 1153, 'to restore to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes;' and requesting full information in regard to said reservation, and my views as to the propriety of the passage of the bill, I have the honor to inclose a report of the Adjutant-General, dated the 3d instant, and accompanying papers, which, it is believed, will furnish the information desired by you.

"I concur with my predecessor in the opinion that the bill should become a law with an amendment, striking out the words underscored from line 6 to 14 of the first section of said bill, commencing with the words 'the following-described tracts,' and ending with the words 'of range 29 and.' If this amendment is made the bill will then authorize the transfer of the entire reservation, which is now no longer needed for military purposes, to the Department of the Interior, except the strip of land heretofore granted by Congress for right of way to a railroad company.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ALEX. RAMSEY,

"Secretary of War.

"Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,

"Of Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate."

"No. 2.

"HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

"Washington, January 3, 1880.

"SIR: I have the honor to return herewith communication dated December 22, 1879, from Hon. F. M. COCKRELL, of the Senate Military Committee, covering H. R. 1153, 'An act to restore to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes,' and requesting full history and information concerning the same, &c., referred to this office for report, and to state as follows:

"On the 13th of April, 1849, a military post was established on the west bank of the Mississippi River, in Minnesota, and designated as 'Fort Galnes.' The name was changed to Fort Ripley November 4, 1850.

"Under date of September 15, 1849, two reservations were declared by the President (General Taylor), one on the east and the other on the west shore of the Mississippi. The latter, which included the site of the post, contained about one square mile, the main body of the reservation lying east of the river, and containing nearly ninety square miles.

"No plat of the original reservation is on file in this office, but one may be filed in the office of the Quartermaster-General.

"An act of Congress (copy inclosed) approved February 22, 1873, authorized and directed the Secretary of War to sell at public auction the whole or so much of the reservation at Fort Ripley as might no longer be required for military purposes.

"It was first designed to retain the reservation on the west bank of the river, on which the post was built, and, in view of certain discrepancies in the boundaries thereof, it was relocated by the President's order of August 2, 1875, with boundaries as announced in General Orders No. 55, of 1875, from headquarters Department of Dakota, copy herewith. The Secretary of War decided that the land included in the old reserve and excluded from the new, as well as the entire reserve on the east bank of the Mississippi, would be held by the War Department until disposed of in accordance with the act of February 22, 1873.

"Pursuant to the provisions of said act (section 2) a board of officers was directed to convene by orders of December 19, 1876, from this office, on the 4th of January, 1877, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and by orders of January 5, 1877, the meeting of the board was postponed to April 1, 1877, or at such time as the president of the board might find it practicable.

"In 1857 the Secretary of War (John B. Floyd) appointed two agents to dispose of the lands embraced within the reservation, namely: Major Seth Eastman, United States Army, and Mr. A. C. Jones.

"Part of the land was parceled out and sold to settlers, who paid for the same and were given certificates to that effect by these agents.

"Secretary Floyd annulled the sale and declined to receive the money from Jones, who retained it subject to his order. Suit was brought against Jones in 1874 for the recovery of $1,799.22, the amount received by him for the sale of the reserve, and judgment obtained October 18, 1876, in favor of the Government for the amount sued for, with interest from December 19, 1873. (Vide copy of letter October 21, 1876, from the Solicitor of the Treasury, herewith.)

"All papers on file in this office relating to the reservation and the sale in 1877 were transmitted to Lieutenant J. A. Manley, Twentieth Infantry, recorder of the board, in letter of December 20, 1876.

"A fire occurred at the post January 14, 1877, by which officers' quarters, laundresses' quarters, and storehouse, with stores and property, were destroyed, and the War Department then decided to have the post discontinued, the garrison withdrawn, and the entire reservation, including the site of the post, appraised for sale by the board of officers appointed under the act of February 28, 1873, and instructions were issued from this office accordingly February 3, 1877, by letter of that date to General Terry, president of the board and department commander.

"The garrison was withdrawn in July, 1877, and the post has not since been occupied by troops—the remaining buildings being in charge of a watchman employed by the Quartermaster's Department.

"The action of the Department relating to right of way, &c., to the Western Railroad Company of Minnesota, is embraced in War Department letter of October 18, 1877, to George L. Becker, esq., president of the company, which cites the opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General and various acts of Congress upon the subject. (Copy of letter inclosed.)

"October 22, 1879, General Terry called attention to the present condition of affairs at Fort Ripley reservation, and reported the reasons why no definite action had been taken by the board—the members being scattered and on other duty, &c. He also reported that a large number of families had squatted on the eastern portion of the reserve in defiance of law, and he, therefore, requested instructions in the premises, the matter having become one of great magnitude.

"The Secretary of War decided, as Congress would meet in so short a time, to defer the question of removal of the squatters and further action under act of February 28, 1873, until action could be had by that body in regard to restoring the reservation to the public domain, as contemplated in the act now under consideration, and the commanding general Military Division of the Missouri has been advised accordingly.

"On the 18th ultimo, the General of the Army called the Secretary's attention to the fact that the act (H. R. 1153) as it passed the House did not include the portion of the reservation on the west side of the river on which the fort was located, while the entire reservation is useless for military purposes and is no longer required.

"The detailed information requested by Hon. Mr. COCKRELL, if deemed essential, in view of the foregoing, could only be obtained by reference to the department commander, and it is presumed that it would, at this season of the year, take considerable time to collect the same.

"I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"E. D. TOWNSEND,
"Adjutant-General.

"To the Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR."

"No. 3.

"An act to provide for the disposition of that portion of the military reservation at Fort Ripley, Minnesota, which lies east of the Mississippi River.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell at public auction the whole or so much of the military reservation at Fort Ripley, in the State of Minnesota, as may no longer be required for military purposes.

"SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to appoint a board of three Army officers, which board shall appraise each piece or parcel of land, with the buildings thereon, before the same is offered for sale, and no sale shall be made at a price less than two-thirds of the appraised value.

"SEC. 3. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to cause notice of said sale to be published in one of the principal newspapers in the city of Washington, in two of the principal newspapers in the State of Minnesota, and in one paper, if any there be, in the county where said lands to be sold are situated, or any county adjoining thereto, for the space of sixty days prior to sale.

"Approved February 28, 1873."

"HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF DAKOTA,
"Saint Paul, Minnesota, September 6, 1875.

"[General Orders No. 55.]

"I. It is announced for the information of all concerned that the United States military reservation of Fort Ripley, Minnesota, has been relocated by executive order, dated August 2, 1875, to embrace the following tract of land on the west bank of the Mississippi River, namely:

"The south half of the southwest quarter and the south half of the southeast quarter of section 6, township 131 north, range 29 west, and section 7 of the same township and range, excepting the south half of the southwest quarter and the south half of the southeast quarter thereof; the lines to extend to and follow the middle of the river.

"II. The land included in the old reservation and excluded in the new, and the entire reserve on the east bank of the Mississippi River, will be held by the War Department until disposed of in accordance with the act of Congress approved February 28, 1873.

"OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY,
"Washington, D. C., October 21, 1876.

"SIR: I have the honor to inform you that in the case of the United States vs. Alexander C. Jones, brought September 11, 1874, for the recovery of $1,799.22, received by him as agent of the War Department, for the sale of the Fort Ripley military reservation, judgment has been obtained on the 18th instant in favor of the Government for the amount sued for, with interest from December 19, 1873.

"All the papers in the case are herewith returned, with the exception of the original affidavit of Jones and his original letter to the War Department acknowledging his indebtedness, which papers are filed in said cause in the office of the clerk of the court.

"GEO. F. TALBOT,
"Solicitor of the Treasury."

"No. 6.

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington City, October 18, 1877.

"SIR: I have respectfully to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated August 22d last, inclosing the certificate of the governor of Minnesota, that the Western Railroad Company of Minnesota has become the lawful successor to the rights, franchises, and privileges of the Saint Paul and Pacific Railroad Company, and asking, on behalf of the Western Railroad Company, that the right of way over the Fort Ripley military reservation may be granted, and beg to inform you that the matter having been referred to the Judge-Advocate-General for report as to whether the Secretary of War is empowered to grant the right of way through this reservation, that officer reports upon the subject as follows:

"The legislation to aid in the construction of certain railroads in Minnesota is found in the acts of March 3, 1857, chapter 99; joint resolution of July 25, 1862, No. 56; act of May 5, 1864, chapter 79; March 3, 1865, chapter 105; March 3, 1871, chapter 144; March 3, 1873, chapter 331; and June 22, 1874, chapter 424. The first act contained a grant of land, from which was reserved land that had previously been set aside by law or competent authority for public purposes, and it was provided that the grant should not operate upon such land, except to authorize the President to grant right of way over the same. The unsold land granted was to revert to the United States unless the road was completed in ten years. This time was enlarged in several of the subsequent acts, and certain lands were given in lieu of others withdrawn, in view of a change of route authorized.

"The time for a completion of the road within designated, as finally extended, has, however, now expired, and the grant of land apparently ceased to have effect. The incidental authority of the President to grant a right of way would, therefore, seem to have also ceased to be operative.

"Moreover, on February 28, 1873, was passed an act authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to sell at public auction so much of the military reservation of Fort Ripley, within the State of Minnesota, as might be required for public purposes.

"The time for the completion of the within-named railroad having expired, it would seem that this act, which, perhaps, may be deemed to have been suspended by the above-mentioned act of March, 1873, and June, 1874, was now fully operative, and that its execution was called for.

"Further, the within papers do not indicate the portion of the reservation over which a right of way is sought, so there is presented no material for an opinion as to whether it would be for the public interests to authorize the same.

"Upon the whole, I should be of opinion in the present aspect of the case that the Executive could not safely proceed to grant the right of way asked for, without the authority of additional legislation.

"The views of the Judge-Advocate-General are concurred in.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"GEO. W. MCCRARY,
"Secretary of War."

"GEORGE L. BECKER, Esq.,
"President of the Western Railroad Company of Minnesota,
"Saint Paul, Minnesota."

Your committee having given due consideration to the foregoing documents and recommendations of the Secretary of War, and desiring still further information, addressed another letter to the Secretary of War, and received from him the following letter, exhibits, and plat, to wit:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington City, January 19, 1880.

"SIR: In reply to your letter of the 10th instant, requesting further information in connection with House bill No. 1153, restoring a portion of the Fort Ripley military reservation to the public domain, I have the honor to inclose herewith a report from the Adjutant-General, to whom the same was referred, which contains so much of the information desired by you as the Department is able to furnish.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"ALEX. RAMSEY,
"Secretary of War."

"Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
"Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate."

"ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, January 16, 1880.

"SIR: I have the honor to return herewith communication of the 10th instant from Hon. F. M. COCKRELL, of the Senate Military Committee, requesting further information relative to the Fort Ripley military reservation, in Minnesota, in connection with H. R. No. 1153, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, referred to this office for report, and to state as follows:

"Relative to the reservation on the west bank of the river, for site of the post, the buildings thereon, &c., the inclosed sketch shows the boundaries of the tract as reserved by the President's order of September 15, 1849, and also as relocated by the President's order of August 2, 1875, and announced in General Orders No. 55, headquarters Department of Dakota, September 6, 1875, copy heretofore furnished the committee. The accompanying plan of Fort Ripley, from Outline Descriptions of Military Posts in the Division of the Missouri, published in 1876, shows the number and location of the buildings at that time, while the inclosed extract from same work contains information as to their character and condition. To these is added a sketch showing the buildings burned in January, 1877, which led to the withdrawal of the garrison in July of the same year.

"As to the best manner of disposing of this tract and the improvements thereon, it is remarked that it has generally been considered that the interests of the Government are best subserved by allowing the buildings to be disposed of with the land, subject to such regulations as Congress may provide for ascertaining the value of the improvements and the subdivisions on which they stand.

"With regard to the inquiries of Senator COCKRELL, relating to the post and reservation generally, this office has not the data at hand to enable it to report specifically.

"A map of the entire reservation, copied from the 'Outline Descriptions' before referred to, and an extract from said work, showing the location of Fort Ripley, the character of the surrounding country, &c., are inclosed, as containing some of the desired information; and in this connection attention is also invited to accompanying extract from 'Statistics of Minnesota for 1878,' embodying the statistics of Crow Wing and Morrison Counties, the post of Fort Ripley being located in the latter, while the reservation east of the Mississippi River embraces portions of both counties.

"I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"E. D. TOWNSEND,
"Adjutant-General."

"Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR."

"FORT RIPLEY, MINNESOTA.

"Established in 1848 as Fort Gaines; name changed to Fort Ripley November 4, 1850. Latitude 46° 9' 43"; longitude 94° 21' 39". On the right bank of the Mississippi River, one hundred and twenty-five miles above Saint Paul. Post-office and telegraph station at the post. Sauk Rapids, on the Saint Paul and Pacific Railroad, forty-six miles distant. Crow Wing, the nearest town, seven miles distant. The Mississippi River here is navigable only for small steamers from Little Falls, seventeen miles below, to Pokegama Falls, one hundred and seventy-five miles above. Brainerd, on the Northern Pacific Railroad and Mississippi River, is seventeen miles distant. On completion of Brainerd Branch of Saint Paul and Pacific Railroad, which runs through the reservation on opposite side of the river, a station with telegraph office will be placed within half a mile of the post.

"Buildings.—Quarters for two companies; officers' quarters, eight sets; hospital, guard-house, store-house, stables, &c. All the buildings are constructed of white pine, and are in fair condition.

"Description of country, &c.—The surrounding country is generally undulating, and capable of yielding fine crops of wheat, corn, oats, and most of the staple vegetables; the soil is a sandy alluvium. There is a garden at the post in which potatoes are raised. The grass is very nutritious, and is harvested for use at the post. Timber in abundance, oak, bass-wood, maple, &c. Streams rise in spring, but not to any damaging extent; they are crossed by good bridges; climate dry and generally very cool; the winters are severe, and for about five months, commencing with November, the ground is constantly covered with snow. Locality healthy.

From a careful consideration your committee find there is no longer any necessity of retaining any portion of said reservation for military purposes, and therefore approve the recommendation of the Secretary of War for the disposal of the whole of said reservation. Your committee find that the Government buildings and improvements are not of any great value, a large portion of them having been burned in 1877, yet your committee do not believe it would be fair or just to the Government, or to the particular persons who might be the fortunate ones in securing the particular tracts of land whereon are such buildings and improvements to sell such lands at the same price of the other lands. Your committee therefore recommend the striking out of said bill the word "of," in line 5, and all the words after the word "except," in line 6, beginning with the words "the following described tracts," to and including the word "and" at the end of line 14, and the words "that part of" in line 1, section 2, and inserting in line 6, section 2, after the word "act," the words "except as hereinafter provided," and inserting at the end of line 17, section 2, the words following to wit: "And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall, prior to offering any quarter section, half quarter section, or quarter quarter section whereon are situated any public buildings or improvements erected or made by the Government, cause the said tracts, with the improvements thereon, to be appraised by three disinterested persons, and upon his approval of such appraisement shall dispose of said tracts at not less than the appraised value;" and amend the title of the act by striking out the words "a part of." By these amendments the whole of said reservation, except the right of way to the railroad, will be transferred to the Department of the Interior for disposition, and those particular tracts whereon are situated any public buildings and improvements will be appraised, together with the buildings and improvements thereon, and, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior of such appraisement, will be disposed of at not less than the appraised value.

With these amendments, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendments proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill involves, I beg Senators to see, quite an important principle of extensive application. Here was a Government reservation, and, as the War Department states, sundry squatters, in defiance of law, forced themselves upon it and took possession of such parts of it as they thought would be convenient for their private uses, and occupy them still.

In 1873 Congress passed an act to sell the reservation at public auction, in lots I believe, to the highest bidder, there having been a railroad built through it, so that the lands thus having been reserved would be quite different from the ordinary public lands subject to pre-emption and homestead entry.

Now the effect of this bill is to give good titles to these squatters on the payment of the ordinary minimum price of a dollar and a quarter an acre for the land, and those of them that get the public buildings are to pay the appraised price or a part of the appraised price of the public buildings. But I will leave that part of it aside; I am now speaking merely of the general effect of the bill.

It appears to me that this is putting a kind of congressional premium on illegal intruders on Government reservations and I do not see at first impression—I am merely making these remarks to get at the views of the committee—why on this principle all the squatters on the Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas, for instance, who turned out to have no title, squatters too who settled thinking that they had title as in this case the squatters did not, should not be entitled to enter their lands at a dollar and a quarter an acre and take them, instead of being obliged as Congress and the courts acting under the authority of Congress and the commission have required, to take them at a valuation of what they are really worth.

Therefore, Mr. President, it appears to me that this bill, involving so much of principle and of the proper policy of legislation, ought not to stand in the calendar of short causes, but it ought to go over. If we say in this instance that we ratify the act of any squatter who knowing that here was a public reservation for military purposes chose to illegally and in defiance of law, as the War Department says, intrude upon it, and not only ratify his act of illegal violence but allow him to take the land by paying the minimum price, it is really holding out a very injurious temptation in all other such cases for sharp and active people to get advantage of their neighbors and to injure public interests by squatting upon lands that have become much more valuable than the ordinary dollar-and-a-quarter acre lands, and then trust to Congress on this bill as a precedent to confirm it all and let them have the land at a dollar and a quarter an acre. I think it involves so much as a matter of the principle as to the proper policy of the Government that I hope it will go over.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is objected to, and goes over.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator from Vermont will allow me—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; I withdraw the objection for the Senator.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think if the Senator was familiar with the facts in this case he would not perhaps feel called upon to insist upon this objection.

I merely wish now to state that the settlers upon this land went upon it long before there was any particular value given to it by the railroad that is now upon it. The land itself is of a very poor quality. It is on the Upper Mississippi, one hundred and fifty miles, perhaps, above Saint Paul; I think about that; I will not state the distance positively. The settlers found the country there unoccupied. This reservation has not had any attention paid to it by the Government for a long time; it has been virtually abandoned; and the settlers in going upon this land had really no advantage whatever of any value attached to the premises by reason of the military reservation. The land itself is of a poor quality, and would not sell for a sum perhaps more than the ordinary minimum price of public land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like him then to state why the act of 1873, which already exists and provides for the sale of this property at auction, is not carried into effect and let the settlers bid.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator has heard from the report the reason why that provision has never been carried out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator would state it.

Mr. McMILLAN. The commission appointed have all been engaged in other duties, and have not been able to give any attention to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why does not the War Department appoint another commission so that the United States can get, be it more or less, what these lands are really worth?

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. RANDOLPH.

Mr. LOGAN addressed the Senate in opposition to the bill. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.] Having spoken for some time,

Mr. McPHERSON. I would ask the Senator from Illinois if he is anxious to go on with his speech to-day, or will he yield for an executive session?

Mr. LOGAN. I am very glad to yield to the pleasure of the Senate in reference to what I shall do about this matter. I am willing to go on now, though of course I should be glad to have a rest, for I will say this—I do not say it for the purpose of alarming Senators here; I do not know that I can interest them; but if they will listen to me before I get through with the authorities of the different courts I will put this case beyond all question. It may take me two hours more or longer, I do not know, but I do not intend to stop until I get through. I will give way now.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then, with the consent of the Senator from Illinois, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

BALTIMORE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. WHYTE. Before the doors are actually closed I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives which is on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 4903) to provide for the purchase of a site for a post-office and other Government buildings in the city of Baltimore, Maryland; and it was read twice.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill now without a reference. Unless the bill be passed at once, the limitation of time within which the owners of the ground will sell it will expire, and it may be impossible to obtain the desired site. I have the unanimous consent of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to say that they approve of the bill and hope it will be passed. It is merely carrying out an act of the last session of Congress and adding an appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe that is right and hope the bill will be allowed to pass.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and forty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 2, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETER CLAESGENS.

On motion of Mr. PRESCOTT, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1197) granting a pension to Peter Claesgens was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. BOYD. I desire to make a correction of the Journal. Upon the vote yesterday on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to refer the bill for the refunding of the cotton tax to the Committee of Ways and Means, I am recorded as not voting. I was present, and voted "ay."

The SPEAKER. The necessary correction will be made.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee of Accounts, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the select committee on the subject of the interoceanic canal and other proposed communications between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans be, and are hereby, authorized to employ a clerk, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the same rate per diem allowed to the clerks of other committees of the House and during the sessions of Congress only.

Mr. KING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT GORTHY AND CALVIN GREEN.

On motion of Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 38) for the relief of Robert Gorthy and Calvin Green, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

PUBLICATION OF COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, without amendment, the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby requested to inform this House what measures, if any, may in his opinion be advantageously taken for the more frequent publication and wider circulation of commercial reports received by the Department of State from the diplomatic and consular officers of the United States, and also to communicate to the House any information which may be in his possession as to the methods of publishing such reports in other countries.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. MORSE. I have another report from the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the morning hour for to-day be dispensed with, the object being to proceed with the consideration of the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the subject of the revision of the rules.

Mr. MORSE. I hope the gentleman will withhold that motion for a moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If I yield to one gentleman I must yield to twenty others.

The motion of Mr. BLACKBURN was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now move that the report made by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the subject of the proposed revision of the rules be taken up for consideration.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend so as to provide that each rule and each paragraph be read and acted upon separately.

The SPEAKER. It is the gentleman's right to have a vote on every amendment.

Mr. CONGER. But I desire that each rule shall be acted on separately.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] agree to that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not. On the contrary, unless it be desired that the report of the Committee of the Whole upon the revision be read, I shall ask to dispense with the reading of the report, except the amendments which have been agreed on in Committee of the Whole and such amendments as the Committee on Rules propose now to offer.

Mr. CONGER. Does not the gentleman propose to have these rules open to amendment by others than the Committee on Rules?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Most certainly not. I am going to ask the previous question at once as soon as we have submitted our amendments.

Mr. CONGER. I give notice now that unless there is an opportunity to offer one or two amendments which we on this side propose to submit, I shall endeavor (and I hope to succeed) to prevent the ordering of the previous question by any parliamentary means in our power.

Mr. WEAVER. And we will assist you.

Mr. CONGER. I demand, therefore, an opportunity to offer amendments to such of the rules as we desire to amend, outside of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is the gentleman's right, provided he has strength enough to vote down the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. We have strength enough to prevent action of the House at all, and I give that notice so the gentleman may understand we shall insist upon our right to offer amendments outside of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I knew the gentleman would do that. I did not need any notice from him.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot see, in the interest of progress and good order, why the gentleman should not permit the amendments which we desire to be offered. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I desire to offer a suggestion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I desire to have a yea-and-nay vote on an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's right on any amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. But I desire to have a vote on an amendment which was not adopted in the committee.

The SPEAKER. If not adopted and reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union it is not before the House at all.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of these rules a question.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky to except from the operation of the previous question Rule XXI.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the House will allow me, I will tell them exactly what has been agreed upon. The demand I propose to submit for the previous question upon the report from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was the result of the unanimous action of the Committee on Rules this morning. As to Rule XXI it was amended by way of substitute in the Committee of the Whole House and it is the right of every member of this House to demand a yea-and-nay vote on that amendment to-day in this House. That is the right of the gentleman from Michigan on my right, or of any other gentleman in the House.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman need not waste words in telling me my rights on that; I understand what they are.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know the gentleman from Michigan scarcely ever fails to exercise all his, and occasionally grabs for somebody else's, rights. [Laughter.] But in this case Rule XXI is subject to the call of the yeas and nays, that is, on the amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The unanimous action of the Committee on Rules is the warrant I hold for the motion I indicate to the House I am going to submit, which is to apply the previous question to this report. Two months' debate have already been had on it. Every opportunity has been offered to every member of this House during those two months in the Committee of the Whole House to amend every rule and every clause and every paragraph of every rule. Now we have reached the conclusion of the labors of the Committee of the Whole House, and in accordance with instructions given me unanimously by the Committee on Rules I intend to ask this House to apply the previous question to all the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSE. Now, I know, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky will yield to me for one moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSE. The amendment of Rule XXI, or any other amendment which has been put on the rules, can have a yeas-and-nays vote in the House. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he will allow me to offer an amendment which was not adopted in committee, so we may have the yeas and nays upon it. I think there is a general disposition to call the previous question—there is on my part I know; I do not wish to go over all this ground again, but I do consider this as of vital importance, and I want gentlemen to go on the record upon it. I ask to have the amendment I suggest read for information.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSE. I will send it to the Clerk's desk. I do not wish to debate it, but simply to have a yeas-and-nays vote upon it—to have the privilege of offering it as an amendment during the consideration of the rules and a vote upon it by yeas and nays.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a bill, resolution, or proposition relating to the raising of revenue or the reduction of taxes shall be referred to a standing or select committee of the House and the committee shall fail for fifty days to make any report to the House thereon, it shall be in order on any Monday, immediately after the expiration of the morning hour, to move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the same; which motion shall then be considered without debate, and, if decided in the affirmative, the bill or resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar, unless a majority of the House shall then determine to consider the same.

Mr. HOUSE. Now, I ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether he will allow me to offer that, so we may have the yeas and nays upon it. I understand, sir, that the Committee of Ways and Means determined this morning to touch no legislation of that sort. I want to see whether the representatives of the people are ready and willing to surrender their interests in their hands. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish, Mr. Speaker, to answer the question submitted to me by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is upon the floor.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will now answer the question propounded to me by the gentleman from Michigan.

I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that he remembers very well in Committee of the Whole by voice and by vote I supported the very identical amendment for which he now asks to reserve the right to offer, even without debate, in the House. I am as cordial in its favor as any man here, but I have no right to agree to any understanding of that kind. The Committee on Rules unanimously instructed me to apply the previous question if the House would so consent, and I must insist on that. Were it a matter personal to me I would gladly yield for that amendment and for that of the gentleman from Michigan or that of any other gentleman on the floor, provided it was coupled with the proposition which the gentleman from Tennessee makes, to vote on the amendment without debate. But I have no authority, no power, to do so. I simply stand here as the spokesman of the Committee on Rules, and ask the previous question by the unanimous order of that committee.

Mr. CONGER. I do not ask to debate the proposed amendment, but we upon this side of the House desire to have an opportunity to vote upon the question of riders upon appropriation bills by striking out in Rule XXI, in the third paragraph, all after the word "order." I say that without debate we want our record on that subject; and it is no more than fair to this side of the House and to the country that we should have an opportunity to do that. And, Mr. Chairman, we intend to have that right and that opportunity if we stand silent here for weeks. We have spent three months in extra session discussing that question of riders upon appropriation bills, and that much time has been wasted unless we now have an opportunity to make our record on the principle proposed to be embodied in that rule. I have already said that we do not wish debate; we only ask a vote on the proposition to strike out all after the word "order" from that Rule XXI, all of that portion of it which relates to riders upon appropriation bills. And if I understand the temper of this side of the House we intend to have a vote if by any parliamentary process we can obtain it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. All I can say is, the only way for the gentleman to reach that—

Mr. CONGER. In order that I may be understood let me read to the House that portion of paragraph 3 upon which I wish the opportunity of making a record. It is to strike out after the word "order," in the third paragraph of this Rule XXI, the following words:

Except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The remainder of that is an amendment which can be voted upon. I want a vote upon striking out that proposition, and if the Committee on Rules do not desire unanimously to grant the right to vote upon that proposition, I have misunderstood the sentiment of some of its members.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then the gentleman from Michigan has misunderstood one of his colleagues.

Mr. CONGER. I would like some gentleman of the Committee on Rules on this side of the House to state if they have agreed that there shall be no yeas-and-nays vote on this proposition to strike out.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Nobody has so said. On the contrary, I repeat the statement I made, which is this: that no member of the Committee on Rules objected to a yeas-and-nays vote on anything; but that the Committee on Rules unanimously agreed in its session this morning to instruct me to ask the previous question and apply it to this report and to the amendments to be submitted by the Committee on Rules as well as to those reported from the Committee of the Whole House, and that action of the committee leaves me no margin for discretion. The gentleman has already had the opportunity over and over again to exercise his right to vote in the Committee of the Whole upon this very identical subject.

Mr. CONGER. But without a record.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Without a record, I grant, and there also stands the gentleman from Tennessee, who desires a record upon another very important amendment.

A MEMBER. Then let him have an opportunity of making a record.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now there is but one way for the gentleman from Tennessee to reach his purpose, with which I sympathize, and for the gentleman from Michigan to reach his purpose, with which I do not sympathize, namely, to vote down the previous question and open up the discussion without limit in the House, and let us take two months more, probably as we have had already the last two taken up in the discussion of this report.

Mr. CONGER. I have already stated to the gentleman from Kentucky that I do not desire debate upon this proposed amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know very well the gentleman does not ask debate, but if this is done who will undertake to say that no man in this House will not ask to be heard? Who will undertake to assert on this floor every man will not have his pocket full of amendments to every rule in this series on every one of which some one will not ask to be heard.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask some member of the Committee on Rules on this side of the House if they did assent that there should be no yeas-and-nays vote on the proposition to strike out of that Rule XXI the clause providing for political riders on appropriation bills? I should like to know that.

Mr. FRYE rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. It is that this debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX.) The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Kentucky has moved the previous question, as I understand.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have not asked it as yet. I yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.]

Mr. FRYE. An inquiry has been made of me as a member of the Committee on Rules; and I say for myself that I did consent to the demand for the previous question, and so did every member of that committee. I say further that I am in favor of sustaining the demand for the previous question. I do not know for whom the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] speaks when he speaks for this side. I only speak for myself. And I say to the gentlemen on this side that we have had our opportunity. To be sure we are not on record by a yeas-and-nays vote; but the whole country knows that the democratic side of the House sustains the proposition for riders and that the republican side of the House sustains the proposition against riders. You cannot make it any plainer or any clearer if you spend two months more. I except on the democratic side some three or four gentlemen every one of whom is on record by a speech or an amendment.

Now, sir, as a republican, as a friend to the tariff if you please, as an opponent to the cutting down of the internal-revenue taxes on tobacco and on whisky any further, I am in favor of the previous question being ordered, and am not in favor of opening up before this House all these great questions under this matter of the mere rules. And I say to the republican side of this House before you vote down the demand for the previous question, look carefully to see what doors you will open, what debates you will spring upon this House, what votes you will be compelled to take part in.

Mr. HOUSE. I understand the gentleman from Maine then to be in favor of a committee of this House smothering the voice of a majority of its members.

Mr. WEAVER. And also afraid to trust the members of this House.

Mr. FRYE. Smothering the voice of a majority of this House! Why, sir, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] by himself and others offered that amendment six different times and in different forms in Committee of the Whole and had a vote upon it every single time by tellers; and the amendments were voted down by a large majority notwithstanding that a member of the Committee on Rules was in favor of the proposition and speaking for it.

Mr. HOUSE. I want a record on it.

Mr. FRYE. Well, now, I simply point the gentlemen on my own side of the House to this exhibition of what may be likely to come before the House provided you vote down the previous question or filibuster against it. You have the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] leading his forces in certain directions and for certain purposes; you have the gentleman desiring to take off the duty on tobacco and whisky leading his forces. I ask you if it is safe to open the discussion anew, to open the rules anew to amendment and have two more solid months consumed of the time of this House and of this country in that way.

Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CONGER rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. How much time?

Mr. CONGER. Five minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. CONGER. Although the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] agrees with the committee in the demand for the previous question, and although he attempts to administer a rebuke to me and other members on this side of the House who desire a record on the political-rider question, which has agitated this country more than all other questions within the last year, I still thank him for his argument in so far as it may influence, if it be possible to make an argument which shall influence that side of the House, to vote down the previous question. The gentleman has made it stronger than I could do.

But, sir, I do say for myself—and I do not pretend to represent anybody else—I do say for myself that I will resist the passage of these rules without an opportunity of casting a yea-and-nay vote, and making a record upon all that transpired in the extra session, and now in this session, and in this committee, as far as I may be able if I stand alone in it. What is the argument of the gentleman? Does he surrender all that we worked for during these long months? Does he ignore all that shook the republican party throughout the Northern States to its very heart, and which influenced the republicans of the North more than any other series of questions or subjects in the last fall elections? Does he ignore all that? I do not; and I will strongly express the hope that there are other gentlemen whose constituents will not permit them to oppose the opportunity of having a yea-and-nay vote on the rule which permits vicious, dangerous, revolutionary, unpatriotic riders to be fastened upon appropriation bills.

Mr. WARNER. Was it not that side of the House which, when the test came, voted down the amendment? [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"] That side of the House voted it down. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. CONGER. This is not the first time that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has endeavored to draw into his all-consuming mint the time of other gentlemen here, or to drown with his mellifluous voice the hoarse utterances of an humble member from Michigan.

Mr. WARNER. I am sorry indeed if I have drowned the voice of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] which is so seldom heard here. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. If the craze of the last session is returning, if it is coming again upon the gentleman from Ohio, in God's name I will stop. There are no worse things in this House than that, except political riders. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think we have had enough—

Mr. HOUSE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. HOUSE. I wish the gentleman to understand that what I desire is a vote on my proposition without one word of debate. There shall be no debate upon it, so far as I am concerned and so far as I can control it, and I think I can pledge that there will be no debate on it. It is a proposition that is understood by all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know that.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think it is a valuable trait in any man's judgment of affairs to be able to know when he is beaten, to know when to fight, and when to see and acknowledge that with all the forces in his hands he is defeated.

On this side of the House we have made a very persistent and very earnest, and, I think, an exceedingly fair exhibition of our desire to prevent by positive enactment in the rules the presence of political riders on appropriation bills. We had re-enforcements from some of the noblest and best elements on the other side of the House, [laughter,] and for a time it appeared probable that we were going to succeed. But what happened? All the power of party discipline was brought to bear upon our allies, and they were told that the point of party honor would not permit the rule in question to be changed, even if they should resolve privately that in fact and in practice there should be no political riders upon appropriation bills during this session. And as I understand it, though I have no authority for making the assertion, but I express it as my belief that this was the true which brought about our formal defeat; that it was probably agreed that there should be no attempt this session to put political riders on appropriation bills if they would only let the rule remain unchanged, so that they might have the appearance of victory to cover the reality of defeat.

Now, that is my understanding of the situation. We have won a moral victory against political riders, and I am not afraid that political riders will again disfigure the appropriation bills during this session.

Mr. PAGE. They will next session.

Mr. GARFIELD. Even if the attempt were made this session, it would be voted down by a part of their own forces. Now, the question in my mind is this: shall we fight any longer for a mere point of honor, on which the other side has the power to beat us with a record or without a record? The device of my friend from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] was a contrivance which could be revolved around like the little fifteen-block puzzle, only to be brought again to the same insoluble position. That was simply a part of the general tactics. The gentleman succeeded in expressing his opinions in a qualified way against political riders, and then his block was revolved around until at last he voted against the whole modification of the rule. Now, my friend from the Marietta district can never take any glory to himself for his share of the final outcome.

Viewing these things, therefore, as I do, we are brought face to face with this problem; shall we now reopen the whole fight on the rules, only to come out of the end of another indefinitely long struggle at possibly the same place? While we are doing that, trying to adjust our blocks in the puzzle, the other party will be adjusting their blocks, the tariff blocks, the center party blocks, all their wooden blocks, or iron blocks, or brass blocks, or paper blocks, all revolving around in the puzzle to come out at the end in a general tangle upon the whole board. Shall we do that?

I am unwilling to start off now in filibustering to bring about our object some way or other, to get some one on the record, when, in my judgment, the record is as well made up in the history of the country as it could be with five hundred yea-and-nay votes. Every member of the democratic party in this House, except those who spoke and are therefore on the record with us, has voted at every turn and at every place against any amelioration of the rule in reference to riders. Their record is as well made up as though they had painted it on the sky every morning in black letters.

Now, therefore, never believing in shooting that which is dead already, never believing in continuing a fight merely for the sake of fight, believing that we have won the moral victory already and the reality of victory also, and that both parties have been sufficiently put on the record before the country, and desiring to get what good there is in these rules, I concur in the recommendation of the Committee on Rules, and believe that we ought not to open this question any further, but should come to an immediate vote on the pending amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the exhibition we have had here this morning demonstrates as clearly as anything could do the absolute necessity of applying the previous question, if we ever expect to put an end to debate otherwise interminable and come to final action on these rules. I do not feel it incumbent upon me to follow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] into that portion of the field into which he has gone, prefacing what he had to say by a declaration of irresponsibility. It would hardly be proper or fair for me to strike at the gentleman from Ohio or his statements, when he has already advised the House and the country that he is not responsible for those statements, does not know them to be true, and has no authority for making them. Still going on with his qualifications, he adds that in his opinion some sort of a secret bargain in the nature of a truce was struck by which no political legislation was during this session to be put upon appropriation bills. I am not responsible for the gentleman's conclusions or opinions or suspicions. I simply desire to say that I have no information, and I never heard even a suspicion thrown out, that any such truce has ever been effected or any such agreement ever made, proposed, or dreamed of. Nor do I believe that there was ever such a proposition made by one member of this House to any other member; nor do we stand committed in any wise upon that question.

The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Rules, and, by way of justice to all the members of that committee, I may state, what the gentleman already knows, that this morning the substitute known as the Morrison substitute, adopted in Committee of the Whole House for the third clause of the twenty-first rule, was brought up in the Committee on Rules. I violate none of the secrets of the committee (because the right was there reserved to state the facts on the floor to-day) in saying now that when that substitute was brought up in the Committee on Rules this morning a majority of the committee declared against it, and a minority, consisting of the Speaker of the House and myself, voted for it. There is the record. The right was reserved to make it a public record, and I make it public now. The gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] all voted this morning in the Committee on Rules against the substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole on motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON.] Those gentlemen declared their preference for the original rule as it now stands.

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me a remark right here?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. The three members of the committee indicated by the gentleman preferred the rule as it stands because they believed that the Morrison amendment only extended it and offered an invitation and a temptation to every committee in this House to conceive of and propose riders for appropriation bills.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Of course, Mr. Speaker, those gentlemen had reasons satisfactory to themselves; and the gentleman from Maine doubtless states their reasons correctly. I simply stated the fact.

It is not possible for us to reopen this question without throwing the door wide open to a multitude of amendments and to illimitable debate. I can therefore only do as I have been instructed by the Committee on Rules to do—ask that the reading of the report from the Committee of the Whole House (which means the whole proposed revision of the rules) be dispensed with, unless there be objection; and if there be objection I ask now that the Clerk begin to read that report.

Mr. WARNER. I ask the gentleman to allow me two minutes to reply to the personal allusions of my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD.] [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I protest that I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] and he knows it; but there are a dozen gentlemen sitting around me who would make similar requests.

Mr. WARNER. They have not been made the object of attack by any gentleman on the other side of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, with the distinct understanding that I do not yield the floor for any further debate.

Mr. WARNER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in reply to my colleague that the "moral victory" he boasts of is nothing more than a tactical blunder into which he himself led or helped to lead his party. Respecting the amendment which I offered, my colleague, as the RECORD will show, said in Committee of the Whole that if I would change two words in it he would accept it and that the other side would accept it. Those words were changed in accordance with that suggestion, and my colleague did then vote for it, and I believe in good faith, but the next day he came upon the floor and voted against it.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir; I did not vote against it; I voted for it.

Mr. WARNER. Well, if he did not vote against it he did not vote for it, although he was in the House when the vote was called. Finally, when the amendment was offered in a different form, expressing exactly what I believed to be the position of the democratic party on that question, preventing "riders" upon appropriation bills that would cut off appropriations for legitimate objects, but at the same time allowing amendments that should reduce expenditures or withhold appropriations altogether from specific objects—in which position I understood many gentlemen on the other side of the House concurred—when that amendment came up, that side of the House having by its vote once adopted it, defeated it. They dug their own pit and fell into it, and my colleague has not succeeded this morning in extricating them from it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course if it embodied the opinion of the democratic party we would vote against it.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 2804) for the relief of the administrator of John D. McGill; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3288) for the relief of colored emigrants.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. If the demand for the previous question be voted down will the amendment offered by my friend from Michigan be in order to the third clause of the twenty-first rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CARLISLE. And I ask whether in that case all other amendments which gentlemen may seek to propose will not also be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All will be in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I wish to ask another question, and it is this: Will not all other amendments which any member may see proper to offer be in order, and will not debate be unlimited on every one of them?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Every member will be entitled to an hour if he gets the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. Will it not be competent for the gentleman having charge of these rules to reserve the right on a single amendment, that amendment being merely one expressive of the opinion of this side of the House on the question of political riders—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me ask the gentleman from New Jersey—

Mr. ROBESON. Would it not be competent for him to reserve that amendment?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBESON. And to say that he will insist on it, that is, on the demand for the previous question, reserving only that one amendment?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That amendment was rejected by the committee, and is not before the House.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask the Chair whether it is not competent for the gentleman from Kentucky to reserve the right to put in that one amendment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman seems fonder of asking questions than having them answered. I say to the gentleman from New Jersey that it is not competent, for it requires unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask the Chair—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the rules of the House limit the operation of the previous question. The Chair does not propose to answer any more inquiries on that subject.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask whether the gentleman refuses to do that?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) He cannot do it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not in the power of any man to do it.

I now ask that the Clerk shall report by their numbers, seriatim, the amendments proposed by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the amendments submitted by the Committee on Rules, upon all of which I will demand the previous question.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not competent for the gentleman to demand the previous question on all the rules except Rule XXI?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer the same question in the same words again, and hope the gentleman from New Jersey will understand it, that it is not within my power, nor is it within his, nor is it in the power of every man on this floor save one, if that one objects.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, it requires unanimous consent. Now, we understand what the operation of the previous question would be.

Mr. ROBESON. Do I understand the gentleman to say—[Cries of "Order!"] Pardon me, one word. Do I understand the gentleman to say he can demand the previous question on all the rules except Rule XXI?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Of course the gentleman does not understand me to say so, but he does understand me to say that as long as there is a single objection made on this floor the purpose he seeks to reach and the vote he wants to get cannot be had.

Mr. CONGER. That cannot be so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I leave that point unsettled and will not have further debate. I now ask the previous question on every amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and every amendment offered by the Committee on Rules, a list of which the Clerk holds in his hands, and we are to understand that if this demand for the previous question be voted down, then the Committee on Rules have lost control of the revision of the rules, and it passes to the hands of the other side.

Mr. CONGER. As it ought to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the previous question on the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and the amendments moved by the Committee on Rules, and then calls for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. The amendments proposed by the committee must be read before the previous question can be asked. I demand that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is right.

Mr. CONGER. I understand some new rules have been offered, and we ought to hear them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments will be reported.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Chair rule the amendments must be read before the previous question is seconded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments offered by the Committee on Rules cannot be pending unless they are read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have demanded the previous question on all the amendments.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I do not ask for the reading of all the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but only for the reading of those proposed to be offered in the House by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Speaker has already decided that the amendments must all be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has made no such decision, but only that the amendments offered by the Committee on Rules to the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union are not before the House until read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; let us have all the amendments read, as that seems to be the object of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. No; if they are read it is at the gentleman's request.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments in extenso. When the Clerk reached the amendments from the Committee on Rules,

Mr. CONGER rose and said: I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Rules have not the right to move amendments. They have no business to propose to this House any amendment to the rules whatever. They have not the bill, and have no right to make any change in it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I propose to ask the Chair, in ruling on the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan, whether it is not competent for me to propose, under the instructions of the Committee on Rules, while in charge of this measure, in the nature of a bill, before applying the previous question, to offer any amendment the committee may want to make to these rules?

Mr. CONGER. The point I make is this: The Committee on Rules have not the bill before them. The House has the bill in its own possession, and has not referred it back to the Committee on Rules for any purpose whatever. The House has the amendments presented by the Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman has no right now to propose amendments in the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, the amendments which the Clerk is about to read come from the Committee on Rules. As long as that committee has in charge this measure, and until it sees fit to ask and the House sees fit to apply the previous question, I take it to be a plain proposition it is competent for them to offer any amendments they please.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Chair whether the Committee of the Whole House, the largest committee, having acted upon this bill and having reported it to the House, and the bill not having been sent to any other committee whatever, by what right this Committee on the Rules more than any other now has the right to offer amendments?

Mr. BLACKBURN. By the right of the custody of the bill and by the custody of the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole House would not have the right to take the charge of the bill or any pending amendment. The Chair recognizes the right of the majority of the Committee on Rules to report this bill and offer amendments before the previous question is called.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is the motion for the previous question pending?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; but it has not been seconded.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading till he reached the third clause of Rule XXI.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk has read the first clause of paragraph 3 of this rule as if it was proposed to be stricken out. I do not understand that to be the action of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman will find that first part of this paragraph printed in italics below.

Mr. CONGER. Is it proposed to strike out the first part?

Mr. CARLISLE. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] to the third clause of Rule XXI as a substitute for that clause contains the entire clause, although the first part of the amendment was identical with the rule as reported by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CONGER. The mistake is that there are two copies of the rules printed, one of which repeats this first clause in italics and one omits it. I happen to have one of the copies which has omitted it altogether. Now, I desire to have read the amendments to this rule reported by the committee exactly as they are.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Committee on Rules make no amendments to the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state to the gentleman from Michigan that the Committee on Rules offer no amendment whatever to the third clause of the twenty-first rule as agreed upon in the Committee of the Whole. I have already stated this morning that the committee divided, two of its members being in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, while three of them opposed it, and it is reported here precisely as it came from the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CONGER. Why did not the majority of the Committee on Rules report to the House an amendment if they were opposed to this amendment of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) They did not want to amend it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from Michigan is now inquiring of a thing which it would be more appropriate for a member of the majority of the committee to answer. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself constituted the minority in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois which has been read here.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Michigan. As a member of the Committee on Rules I understood the report was to be that the majority of the Committee on Rules was against concurring in the amendment made by the Committee of the Whole. We were opposed to that, preferring to let the rule stand just as it was originally reported by the Committee on Rules. As one I agree with the gentleman from Michigan. I am opposed to all political riders and would vote with him to strike out the latter part of the clause of Rule XXI as reported by the Committee on Rules. But can we who thus think be benefited by rejecting the report of the committee? Suppose we vote them down, will not the House be in the same condition in which it is now? Shall we lose all the good of this revision, which I think is a great deal, simply because we cannot get all we want on the twenty-first rule? I say no.

Suppose we vote down the previous question, and vote down all the work of the committee; are we any better off? Shall we gain anything? No. Hence, while I am opposed to riders, yet as I see no opportunity or probability whatever of getting any change in that respect, I am for taking the rules just as the Committee on Rules left them in order to secure all the other good there may be in the revision.

Mr. CONGER. I have not yet got an answer to the question I asked, or the parliamentary inquiry, why, if a majority of the Committee on Rules were opposed to riders, they did not propose an amendment here.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is that a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can only take notice of the amendments proposed here by the committee. The question of the gentleman from Michigan is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONGER. When we are acting upon amendments proposed by that committee, I think it is a parliamentary inquiry why the committee do not propose an amendment against riders on appropriation bills if the majority of the committee be opposed to such riders.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not think that is a parliamentary inquiry and I reckon it is a question which the Chair is not able to answer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot answer the question. The Clerk read amendment No. 39 reported by the Committee of the Whole, as follows:

39. Upon all bills or resolutions appropriating money or creating a charge or debt upon the people, the yeas and nays shall be taken on the final passage of such bills, in the House, and entered on the Journal.

And an amendment thereto proposed by the Committee on Rules:

Strike out after the word "all" the words "bills" or resolutions appropriating money or creating a charge or debt upon the people, and insert "general appropriation and revenue bills and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors."

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that by unanimous consent the word "final" be stricken out. There is no other passage of the bill than its final passage. The use of the word is mere surplusage. The passage of the bill is its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that correction being made. The word "final" will be stricken out.

The Clerk read the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole, numbered 40 to 55.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is a misprint in Rule XXVII which I ask unanimous consent to have corrected. The words "which remained undetermined" should be inserted after the word "and," in the middle of the third line. They have been transposed by the printer. I ask the Clerk to make the correction, so that it will read:

After six days from the commencement of a second or subsequent session of any Congress, all bills, resolutions, and reports, which originated in the House and which remained undetermined at the close of the next preceding session, shall be in order for action, &c.

There being no objection, the correction was made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Would it not be as well at the same time to strike out the word "next" and insert the word "last?"

Mr. GARFIELD. I think so.

There being no objection, the amendment was made.

The Clerk read the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole, numbered 59 to 63. No. 63 was read, as follows:

Strike out clause 1 of Rule XXXII and insert as a substitute therefor the following:

"63. At the commencement of each Congress the Clerk shall place in a box prepared for that purpose a number of small balls of marble or other material equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be separately numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on the numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected."

To which the Committee on Rules proposed the following amendment:

After the word "Congress," in the first line of the amendment, insert the words "immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in." And after the word "on," in the latter part of the amendment, strike out the word "the" and insert the word "a."

Mr. BLACKBURN. The latter amendment to the amendment is necessary, because there has been no provision made for the alphabetical list up to this time.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest as a further amendment to strike out the word "separately" and insert the word "consecutively."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that amendment will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole numbered 64 to 69.

The sixty-ninth amendment was to add to Rule XXXIV, relating to admissions to the floor, the following:

Or to present from the chair the request of any member for unanimous consent.

So that it would read:

And it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule, or to present from the chair the request of any member for unanimous consent.

Which the Committee on Rules proposed to amend by striking out the words "or to" and inserting the word "nor."

Amendment numbered 70 was read, as follows:

In Rule XXXVII strike out "three" and insert "two," so that it will read:

"For each day a witness shall attend, the sum of $2, &c."

Mr. WHITE. Would the committee accept an amendment to provide that witnesses shall be paid for each day they are in actual attendance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House can do that by unanimous consent. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of Rule XXXVII all after the words "as follows" and insert:
For each day a witness shall be in actual attendance in obedience to a regular subpoena the sum of $2, and five cents for each mile he shall travel in coming to or going from the place of examination; but nothing shall be paid for traveling when the witness has been summoned at the place of trial, and per diem compensation only for the time such witness shall be in actual attendance at the place of hearing.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That can be done only by unanimous consent. I have no objection to it myself.

Mr. WHITE. Then I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE]?

Mr. KEIFER. Does it prevent witnesses from receiving per diem compensation while coming to and going from the place of examination?

Mr. WHITE. It does not alter the rule in that respect; it only prevents the payment of witnesses who never appear.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] will modify his amendment in one or two particulars, I would be very glad to see it adopted. The word "summoned" should not be in the amendment; a witness is always subpoenaed. And it should appear in the amendment that the witness shall receive a per diem compensation for the time he occupies in going to and returning from the place of examination.

Mr. WHITE. That is all right. This amendment does not interfere with the rule as it is at present. "For each day the witness shall attend;" that has received a construction which allows the witness to be paid from the time he starts to go to the place of examination.

Mr. KEIFER. This proposed rule goes further and indicates a limit.

Mr. BROWNE. To save all trouble I object to the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. All right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment being objected to it is not before the House.

The seventy-first amendment was to add to Rule XXXVIII the following:

2. The Clerk of the House shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, take into his keeping all bills, joint resolutions, and other papers referred to committees, together with all evidence or testimony taken by committees under the order of the House.

The Committee on Rules recommended the following as a substitute for the entire rule:

The clerks of the several committees of the House shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, deliver to the Clerk of the House all bills, joint resolutions, petitions, and other papers referred to the committee, together with all evidence or testimony taken by such committee, under the order of the House, during the said Congress and not reported to the House; and in the event of the failure or neglect of any clerk of a committee to comply with this rule, the Clerk of the House shall, within three days thereafter, take into his keeping all such papers and testimony.

The Committee on Rules also recommended an amendment to Rule XXXIX; in the clause "and if so withdrawn therefrom" strike out the word "so."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole or recommended by the Committee on Rules have been read by the Clerk.

Mr. WARNER. I suggest that there are two or three places where there needs to be a change in the number of the noun or the verb, and a few places where the punctuation should be changed. I ask unanimous consent that before these rules shall be printed the Committee on Rules may make such corrections as they may deem necessary, not to change in the least the meaning or the sense of any rule.

It is said that the Emperor Sigismund, when corrected in the use of a Latin pronoun, replied that he was emperor and above grammar; nevertheless his declaration did not make his use of the word correct or change the Latin grammar. If the majority of this House should vote that we were above grammar it would hardly change the use of the language. I think the rules are cast in excellent English, clear and terse, but I would like to have these little corrections made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio proposes that the Committee on Rules shall be empowered to make verbal corrections.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That is a dangerous power, which I think should not be given.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DEUSTER] be permitted to make a personal statement. I understand that he considers that I have done him injustice in a remark which I made this morning. For my sake, that I may be set right if I have wronged him, I ask that he be allowed to make a statement.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection.

Mr. DEUSTER. I was out of my seat for a moment this morning, and I understand that while I was absent the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] stated that all the members on the democratic side of the House who were opposed to riders on appropriation bills either spoke or offered an amendment during the discussion of the rules. I desire to say that I was opposed to riders and voted for all amendments to strike out that clause of the rule; but I neither offered any amendment nor spoke on the subject. And I will further say that I am proud of that vote.

Mr. DUNNELL. How was the matter left just now in giving power to the Committee on Rules to make verbal amendments?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That was objected to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am very glad of it.

Mr. WARNER. Then I ask unanimous consent to have some verbal changes made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state them.

Mr. WARNER. In Rule VIII, the fourteenth amendment reads "provided pairs shall be announced but once during the same legislative day." The word "that" should be inserted after the word "provided." In the third clause of Rule X is this language: "unless the committee, by a majority of their number, elect a chairman." The word "their" should be changed to "its." The word "its" is properly used in other places when standing for the noun committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all right.

Mr. WARNER. In clause 45 of Rule XI it reads: "all proposed legislation or order touching printing," &c. That should be "orders." It is evidently a misprint.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is evidently a misprint.

Mr. WARNER. In the second clause of Rule XV is this language: "including the Speaker, if there is any." It should read, "if there be any," because the subjunctive is used. And there are two or three other places where the word "be" should be substituted for the word "is." I think the Committee on Rules should be allowed to make such changes as those I have indicated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the corrections suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to admit an amendment in paragraph 7 of Rule XI, to insert after the word "commerce," where it first occurs, the words "life-saving service and light-houses;" so as to read "commerce, life-saving service, and light-houses." These subjects now go to that committee as an adjunct of commerce; but I think the language should be made specific.

Mr. FRYE. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no. I must object unless the gentleman adds "other than appropriations."

Mr. CONGER. I assent to that modification.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I have no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I modify my amendment so as to insert after the word "commerce" these words: "life-saving service and light-houses other than appropriations for life-saving service and light-houses."

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to inquire whether near the close of Rule XXXIV, on page 17, the word "or" has been struck out and "nor" substituted?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The words "or to" were struck out and the word "nor" substituted, so that the clause now reads:

It shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule, nor present from the chair the request of any member for unanimous consent.

Mr. FRYE. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The striking out of the two words makes it, I think, unobjectionable.

Mr. DUNNELL. I question the propriety of the change. I do not think the sentence is made any clearer by it.

Mr. RANDALL. There are two propositions. The first is that the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules for this purpose; the second is that he shall not even allow a request to be made for unanimous consent.

Mr. FRYE. I rather guess that we were wrong in dropping out the word "to;" I think it would be best to retain it. It is my fault that "to" was taken out; and on looking at the matter again, I think that word should be retained.

Mr. DUNNELL. The word "or" is proper, instead of "nor."

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it makes no difference whether "to" is inserted or not, because if omitted it will certainly be understood. But it seems to me right to insert "or" instead of "nor," because the sentence begins with a negative. You say it shall not be in order to do a certain thing, namely, to entertain a motion. Then by inserting "nor" in the latter part of the sentence you have a double negative, which is equivalent to an affirmative.

Mr. FRYE. I guess the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] is right. I back clear down. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. I think "or" is clearly right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; let the language stand as printed in the report.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to call his attention to another verbal correction?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Clause 5 of Rule XXIV, on page 14, reads now in this form:

Unfinished business having been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to dispose of the business on the Speaker's table, which, prevailing, the Speaker shall dispose of in the following order:

The words "the motion" should be inserted before "prevailing."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think that is right.

Mr. HAWLEY. It will then read:

Which, the motion prevailing, the Speaker shall dispose of in the following order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to this verbal amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now demand the previous question on all the amendments.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) And on the report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On all the amendments and on the report of the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the previous question on all the amendments and on the report.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is understood that a separate vote, whenever called for, may be had on any amendment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. RANDALL (the Speaker) moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. In order to save time I suggest that any gentleman who desires a separate vote on any amendment indicate that amendment now, and that all the rest of the amendments be adopted in bulk.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit, I suggest what will be a still further saving of time. I have prepared a list of amendments on which I am sure no gentleman wants a vote—immaterial amendments, embracing about half or more than half of all the amendments. Upon those we may vote without delay or separate vote or division. When that is done we will have left all of the amendments upon which any gentleman may want a separate vote and I think we can take a separate vote even to the extent of yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky proposes certain amendments by number on which he thinks no separate vote will be demanded. The Chair would like to understand whether it is the wish of the gentleman from Kentucky to take the vote on these amendments which he has named in gross.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; I propose to take the vote on the amendments, the numbers of which will be read by the Clerk, in gross, and then the remaining amendments can be taken up and voted on separately.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read the amendments by number upon which it is proposed to take a vote in gross.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44—

Mr. ROBESON rose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let any be stricken off from this list to which any gentleman shall object.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to have a vote on amendment numbered 3.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; let that be stricken off the list.

Mr. ROBESON. It is the amendment which gives the Clerk the power of proceeding by force of these rules in another Congress—

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That is the law now.

Mr. ROBESON. I know of no such law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be stricken off the list and a separate vote will be had on Rule III. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the numbers of the amendments which are to be voted on in gross.

The Clerk concluded the reading, as follows:

45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, and 70.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman whether amendment 39 was embraced in that list?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It was not embraced, and there is an amendment pending to it. It is one of those which were amended by the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And of course it is not included in this list.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Of course not, as a separate vote must be had upon it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The amendments named I ask now shall be considered in gross.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objections.

The amendments were adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now proceed to read the amendments, in their order, on which separate votes have been asked. He will read, in the first place, the amendment to Rule III.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out these words:

(3) [1. The Clerk shall, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, preserve order and decorum, and decide all questions of order, subject to appeal by any member.]

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

1. The Clerk shall, at the commencement of the first session of each Congress, call the members to order, proceed to call the roll of members by States in alphabetical order, and, pending the election of a Speaker, or of a Speaker pro tempore, preserve order and decorum, and decide all questions of order, subject to appeal by any member.

Mr. ROBESON. My objection to that amendment—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. ROBESON. I should like to see what law regulates that.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It is nothing but the enforcement of the law.

Mr. ROBESON. I beg pardon, there is no law—

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ROBESON. There is no law authorizing the Clerk of this House to preside over the next House of Representatives.

Mr. BURROWS. If there is any such law, we do not need this rule.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If we are going to debate it, let us have the hour rule.

Mr. CONGER. The amendment in what is proposed to be stricken out should be first voted on. There is an amendment in italics.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What amendment is there in italics in the words proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. CONGER. Why, the words pro tempore.

Mr. WARNER. That is not an amendment. It is a Latin term which is usually put in italics.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is on striking out the words which have been read by the Clerk, and in lieu thereof inserting the words which have also been read by the Clerk.

Mr. CONGER. Let us have a division on that.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 129, noes 106.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBESON. Is a parliamentary question in order pending that vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to ask what effect this rule, if carried, would have when the next Congress comes together, if any gentleman chose—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to ask what would be the effect if any gentleman chose to rise and propose a member of the next House should preside over it, whether it would be out of order under these rules?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let us answer that.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask the Speaker—

Mr. CARLISLE. This is the law now.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Have the law read.

Mr. ROBESON. Very well; let the law be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is in the nature of argument and debate.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask whether the effect sought to be produced by the rule would be to bind the next House by these rules?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order this debate is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We have nothing to do with the effect of the law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from New Jersey has no right to rise to submit any question but a parliamentary question, and this is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. ROBESON. It is not a parliamentary question to ask what the effect of a rule will be?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided that he cannot undertake to state the effect of this rule on a future Congress.

Mr. CONGER. Can anybody else?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No one can tell.

Mr. ROBESON. If there is a law covering this case— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Yes, there is a law; and it was made by your own side.

Mr. ROBESON. I do not care by what side; there is no such law.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 144, nays 101, not voting 47; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BLOUNT. On this question I am paired with Mr. REED, of Maine.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am paired with Mr. BRIGHAM, of New Jersey.

Mr. SINGLETON. Of Illinois. I am paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague, Mr. SIMONTON, is paired with Mr. McCoid, of Iowa. If Mr. SIMONTON were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. BEALE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. JORGENSEN.

Mr. KING. My colleague, Mr. ELAM, who is absent, sick, is paired with Mr. DICK, of Pennsylvania; and Mr. GIBSON, who is also absent from the House on account of illness, is paired with Mr. WAIT, of Connecticut.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I am paired with Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I am paired with Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. STONE. Mr. MONEY is absent by reason of illness. He is paired with Mr. STARIN.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. HARMER. Mr. FORT, of Illinois, is paired with Mr. O'BRIEN, of New York.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. BELFORD is paired with Mr. SPRINGER.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Commerce," where it first occurs in clause 7, of Rule XI, it is proposed to insert "And the Committee on Commerce shall have the same privileges in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills;" so that, if amended, the clause will read as follows:

"7. To Commerce: Life-Saving Service and light-houses other than appropriations for Life-Saving Service and light-houses to the Committee on Commerce. And the Committee on Commerce shall have the same privileges in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "agriculture," in clause 8, it is proposed to insert "and forestry," and also to add to the clause the words "who shall receive the estimates and report the appropriation for the Agricultural Department;" so that, if amended, it will read as follows:

"8. To agriculture and forestry: to the Committee on Agriculture, who shall receive the estimates and report the appropriations for the Agricultural Department."

Mr. BLACKBURN. In the Committee of the Whole House there were two amendments to that clause of this rule. The first amendment consisted of the insertion of the words "and forestry," and the second amendment consisted of the additional clause, which reads, "and shall receive the estimates and report appropriations for the Agricultural Department." Upon that second amendment the Committee on Rules have instructed me to report to the House, which they have done, in their amendment, a disagreement, and upon that second amendment we want to vote. There is no objection to the first amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first amendment has already been adopted. The only question now before the House is on the second amendment read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 257) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased; and

A bill (S. No. 952) for the relief of James Burke.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole, numbered 20, which the Clerk will again read.

The amendment was again read.

The question being put, there were—ayes 63, noes 99.

Mr. AIKEN and Mr. HATCH called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 44 members voting therefor—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. AIKEN. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AIKEN. I desire to know if the remark made by the Speaker of the House in Committee of the Whole when upon the floor of the House can be taken as coming ex cathedra.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize that as a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. AIKEN. Has the Speaker of the House, in Committee of the Whole, while he is upon the floor, the right to make assertions which cannot be substantiated by the record?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Perhaps the Chair will permit the Speaker to answer that question. He affirms all that he said in Committee of the Whole, and proposes to establish it by the record.

Mr. AIKEN. Then I ask unanimous consent of the House to reply to two or three remarks the Speaker made while he was upon the floor in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAZELTON. Consent is given. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. AIKEN. Why? Are you afraid of the grangers? [Laughter.]

I simply desire a minute. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina is out of order.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask unanimous consent to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina propounded a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair. It was answered. He now asks unanimous consent of the House to answer something that was said in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. As a question of privilege, I understand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the House. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to answer something said in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. CARLISLE. I want to know if the gentleman from South Carolina proposes to discuss the amendment now before the House. If he does, I shall object unless the same privilege is allowed to other gentlemen.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object absolutely.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not propose to discuss the amendment, but wish to be put right on the record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. AIKEN. I see no one rising to object.

Mr. BLOUNT, (rising.) I object.

Mr. AIKEN. Why cannot you give me an opportunity? [Cries of "Regular order!"] I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the pending amendment, and the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to withdraw his objection. I am quite ready to hear what the gentleman from South Carolina has to say, and to answer him if I can.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If this means to open up a debate—
Mr. HAZELTON. It does.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If this means to open up a debate, as the question is not debatable, I must object myself.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not withdrawn my objection, and do not intend to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 102, not voting 57; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:
Mr. HUNTON. On this and all other questions coming up to-day I am paired with Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am paired with Mr. BRIGHAM, of New Jersey.

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague, Mr. SIMONTON, is paired with Mr. McCoid, of Iowa.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to announce that Mr. BELFORD, of Colorado, is paired with Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois. I do not know how either would vote if present.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Being advised by his friends that if present he would vote in the affirmative, I vote in the affirmative.

Mr. PRICE. My colleague, Mr. SAPP, is paired with Mr. BERRY, of California.

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. AIKEN and Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I ask leave to have my vote recorded upon the question just voted on.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. I vote in the affirmative.

The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole upon which a separate vote had been demanded was amendment No. 21, in clause 19 of Rule XI: to strike out the words "other than" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "including;" so that the clause would read as follows:

19. To the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States, including appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In order to save time I will call now for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 101, nays 136, not voting 55; as follows:

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made: Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa.

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio.

Mr. WAIT. I am paired with Mr. GIBSON, of Louisiana.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I am paired with Mr. CHALMERS, of Mississippi.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. SAPP. I am paired with Mr. BERRY, of California. If he were here I should vote "ay."

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to announce that Mr. BELFORD, of Colorado, is paired with Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois. I do not know how either would vote if present.

Mr. STEPHENS. I was not present during the call of the roll. I ask permission to vote.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS voted in the negative.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask leave to vote.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAYNE voted in the affirmative.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment upon which a separate vote had been demanded was read, as follows:

Strike out clause 1 of Rule XXI, as follows:

Bills and joint resolutions introduced for reference and those reported by committees without such introduction, shall be read a first time by their titles and printed, the second time in full, the third time by their titles, unless the reading in full shall be demanded by a member.

And insert the following:

Every bill and joint resolution shall receive three readings before its passage, which shall be as follows, namely: the first reading by its title on its introduction for reference, or, being an original bill, on its report from a committee for commitment, or by unanimous consent for present action; the second reading in full, and the third reading by its title, unless the reading in full shall be demanded by a member.

Mr. CONGER. I observe that the clause which this amendment proposes to strike out provided that bills should be "read a first time by their titles and printed." In the proposed substitute there is no requirement that bills shall be printed. I ask whether this omission is intentional or accidental?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Committee on Rules had no purpose to dispense with the printing of bills at all, but if the gentleman will look at a subsequent portion of the revision, under the heading "order of business," he will find a requirement that all bills shall be printed.

Mr. CONGER. What rule does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Rule XXIV.

Mr. HAWLEY. The second paragraph of the rule.

Mr. CONGER. That paragraph refers only to printing reports of committees.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman is right.

Mr. FRYE. I think the provision for printing has been left out by mistake.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Committee on Rules had no intention to dispense with the printing of bills. The only question is whether an amendment to cover this omission will best come in here or in the italicized clause of Rule XXIV on page 14.

Mr. CONGER. If the provision for printing has been omitted by mistake let it be inserted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There will be no objection, I think.

Mr. CONGER. I think the words "and printed" should be inserted in the pending amendment after the words "by unanimous consent for present action," which close up the clause in reference to the introduction of bills.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) When bills are introduced by unanimous consent for action they are generally in manuscript; the insertion would not be appropriate at that point.

Mr. CONGER. Then let the words "and printing" be inserted after these words: "the first reading by title on its introduction for reference."

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker) and Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would call attention to the fact that the Committee on Rules has reported a substitute for the amendment just read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; I had failed to remember that. I ask the Clerk to read the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out clause 1 of Rule XXI, and the substitute therefor adopted in Committee of the Whole, and insert the following:

Every bill and joint resolution shall receive three readings before its passage, which shall be as follows: the first and second readings by title on introduction for reference, or being original bills on report from committees for commitment, except when the second reading in full shall be demanded by a member: Provided, That original bills on being reported by unanimous consent for present consideration shall be read the first time in full; the second and third time by title, unless the third reading in full shall be demanded by a member.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now let me suggest to the gentleman from Michigan to turn to the italicized clause of Rule XXIV, on page 14. If when we reach that clause the gentleman will move to insert before the word "reference," in the fourth line, the words "printing and," so as to make it read "bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference," I think that will answer the purpose better than to amend the pending substitute which treats only of the reading of bills. The clause of Rule XXIV refers to their regular disposition.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to the gentleman's suggestion. Mr. WARNER. It occurs to me that the phrase "or being original bills" does not agree grammatically with the beginning of the sentence where the language is "every bill and joint resolution."

The substitute proposed by the Committee on Rules for the amendment of the Committee of the Whole was adopted.

The amendment of the Committee of the Whole, as amended by the adoption of the substitute, was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote had been demanded was read, as follows:

In Rule XXI strike out clause 3, as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures."

And insert the following:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us have the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 119, nays 113, not voting 60; as follows:

So the amendment was concurred in.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BLOUNT. I am paired with Mr. REED, of Maine.

Mr. HUNTON. I am paired with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. HOOKER. On this question I am paired with Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I am paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut, on this amendment and on all political questions.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. TAYLOR. I am paired with Mr. BRIGHAM, of New Jersey, on all questions.

Mr. KING. My colleague, Mr. GIBSON, who is absent by reason of illness, is paired with Mr. WAIT, of Connecticut. If present, Mr. GIBSON would vote in the affirmative and Mr. WAIT in the negative.

Mr. DIBRELL. Mr. SIMONTON is paired with Mr. MCCOID, of Iowa.

Mr. STONE. Mr. MONEY is paired with Mr. STARIN.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. BELFORD is paired with Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois.

Mr. SAPP. I am paired with Mr. BERRY, of California. If he were present, I should vote in the negative.

Mr. HARMER. I am paired with Mr. GOODE, of Virginia.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, is paired with Mr. MANNING, of Mississippi.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I am paired with Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

And then, on motion of Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was read, as follows:

Thirty-ninth amendment. Insert as an additional clause to Rule XXI the following:

6. Upon all bills or resolutions appropriating money or creating a charge or debt upon the people the yeas and nays shall be taken on the final passage of such bills in the House, and entered on the Journal.

The substitute proposed by the Committee on Rules was then read, as follows:

Upon all general appropriation and revenue bills and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors the yeas and nays shall be taken on the passage of such bills in the House and entered upon the Journal.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to move a substitute for that amendment, as follows:

That upon all bills or resolutions appropriating over $10,000 the yeas and nays shall be taken on the final passage.

Will it be in order to offer that as an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. The point I make is this: as an amendment has been submitted by the Committee on Rules, would it not be in order for us to amend that or to adopt a substitute for it?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The previous question is pending.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer it.

Mr. PAGE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the following substitute proposed by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that the amendment of the Committee on Rules was not read to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules that point of order.

Mr. CONGER. That is a question of fact.

The House divided; and the substitute proposed by the Committee on Rules was agreed to.

The question recurred on the adoption of the amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union as it was amended.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What became of the request of my colleague from Kentucky?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was objection to the introduction of his substitute.

Mr. WHITE. But how did this amendment come in?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was reported by the Committee on Rules and it has been adopted by this House.

The amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as amended, was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was read, as follows:

Fifty-fourth amendment. Strike out the words "to consider, first, bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills and then other business on the Calendar;" so the rule will read:

"First. That the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union."

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Committee on Rules have recommended that the words stricken out in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall be retained. The way to reach that recommendation will be by a negative vote; that is to vote down the amendment agreed to in committee.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not understand the amendment of the Committee of the Whole House as it was read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. FRYE. The clause of this rule as amended in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union would make no sense at all, and the recommendation of the Committee on Rules is simply in favor of the retention of the words proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is the recommendation of the Committee on Rules, and a negative vote on concurrence in the amendment of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will comply with the recommendation of the Committee on Rules.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was read, as follows:

Sixtieth amendment. Rule XXVIII, insert the following:

4. No motion to suspend the rules and pass a public bill shall be entertained unless the bill shall have been referred to a committee, printed, and distributed to the members at least one legislative day before the motion for suspension is made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Committee on Rules recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Before we proceed further I desire to call the attention of the Speaker of the House to the last part of Rule XXVI—"unless otherwise determined by a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting." I ask whether the construction would be that that would do away with any question of a quorum not being present?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Any member can raise the question of a quorum just as at present.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is not in the amendment of the Committee on Rules, but is an amendment moved by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

Mr. CONGER. As it stands this would seem to indicate that a less number than a quorum, two-thirds voting in favor of the proposition, could accomplish the result.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is in the power of any member to raise the question whether a quorum has voted or not.

Mr. CONGER. It seems to me it depends entirely on the construction which may be given to this rule by the Speaker.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Of course the question being raised there is no House if there is no quorum. The question of a quorum is settled by the Constitution of the United States, and the gentleman need be under no misapprehension in regard to the construction of this rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no question before the House. The Clerk will read the next amendment on which a separate vote has been asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sixty-third amendment. In Rule XXXII insert the following:

At the commencement of each Congress, the Clerk shall place in a box, prepared for that purpose, a number of small balls of marble or other material equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be separately numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on the numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball, shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Committee on Rules have offered an amendment to that.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Congress," in line 1, insert the following: "immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in."

Also strike out "separately" and insert in lieu thereof "consecutively;" also strike out the word "the," before "numbered," and insert "a."

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to, and the amendment of the Committee of the Whole House as amended was concurred in.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read amendment No. 71, to add to Rule XXXVIII as a second clause the following:

2. The Clerk of the House shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, take into his keeping all bills, joint resolutions, and other papers referred to committees, together with all evidence or testimony taken by committees under the order of the House.

For which the Committee on Rules proposed the following substitute:

2. The clerks of the several committees of the House shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, deliver to the Clerk of the House all bills, joint resolutions, petitions, and other papers referred to the committee, together with all evidence taken by such committee under the order of the House during the said Congress, and not reported to the House; and in the event of the failure or neglect of any clerk of a committee to comply with this rule, the Clerk of the House shall, within three days thereafter, take into his keeping all such papers and testimony.

The amendment of the Committee on Rules was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the amendment proposed by the Committee on Rules to Rule IV, clause 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "in person" after the word "attend;" so that it will read: "1. It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House during its sittings, to maintain order under the direction of the Speaker, and, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, under the direction of the Clerk; execute the commands of the House and all processes issued by authority thereof, directed to him by the Speaker; keep the accounts for the pay and mileage of Members and Delegates and pay them as provided by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by the Committee on Rules to clause 7, Rule XIV, as follows:

Strike out the word "is," before the word "charged," and insert "and Doorkeeper are;" so that the clause will read: "And the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause."

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That relates to smoking on the floor.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And the amendment charges the Doorkeeper as well as the Sergeant-at-Arms with the enforcement of the rule.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) We want everybody we can called into the service to prevent smoking in the seats.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following amendment proposed by the Committee on Rules to clause 9 of Rule XI:

After the word "nations" insert the words "other than appropriations;" so that it will read:

"9. To the relations of the United States with foreign nations, other than appropriations: to the Committee on Foreign Affairs."

Mr. BLACKBURN. The leaving out of those words was simply a mistake. They are incorporated in all the other provisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following amendment proposed by the Committee on Rules to clause 14 of Rule XI:

After the word "tribes" insert "other than appropriations;" so that it will read:

"To the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, other than appropriations: to the Committee on Indian Affairs."

Mr. BLACKBURN. The same explanation applies to this as to the former amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSE. I now ask, as I understand we are through with all the amendments, unanimous consent to offer the amendment which I had read at the Clerk's desk for information this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FRYE and others objected.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make a suggestion as to the time when the new rules shall come into operation.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let that be done after the final vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think it should be made before the final vote. We cannot have these rules adopted so as to take effect to-morrow morning. The old regime and the new cannot jump together at the instant; and I have written a resolution on which I think it would be better to take action now than later. I will read it for the information of the House:

Resolved, That the foregoing rules shall be a substitute for all existing rules, and take effect at noon on Monday next, at which time the Speaker shall present to the House the calendars herein provided for, which shall contain all the measures now pending before the House or the Committee of the Whole in their proper order according to these rules: Provided, That in carrying these rules into effect the Speaker shall not be required to increase or diminish the numbers of any standing committees during the present Congress.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Or to vacate any of the committees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are still some amendments pending on which action has not been taken.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have called attention to this resolution which I desire to offer, as there is danger we will break up as soon as the final vote is taken.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I would suggest also that it be provided as to existing special orders that they shall be continued.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not think that is necessary. The Speaker will submit a calendar, subject to the correction of the House, and the existing special orders would be on that calendar.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Chair would, no doubt, hold they would be continued. At the same time, the House might as well relieve the Chair of making that decision.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Chair has already stated what he would do, and it is evidently right. But when he presents the Calendar on Monday next, it would be open to anybody to object if he found occasion to do so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should like the gentleman from Ohio to accept the suggestion, not only to provide against disturbing the existing committees under the present rules, but also to give protection for all special orders as they now stand.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. What is the pending question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments are not yet completed on which the previous question is operating.

The Clerk read an amendment proposed to clause 5 of Rule XXIV, as follows:

After the word "which" insert the words "the motion;" so that it will read: "Unfinished business having been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, which, the motion prevailing, the Speaker shall dispose of in the following order," &c.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read an amendment proposed to Rule XXVII, which was to transpose certain words so that the rule would read as follows:

After six days from the commencement of a second or subsequent session of any Congress, all bills, resolutions, and reports which originated in the House, and remained undetermined at the close of the last preceding session, shall be in order for action, and all business before committees of the House at the end of one session shall be resumed at the commencement of the next session of the same Congress in the same manner as if no adjournment had taken place.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read an amendment proposed to Rule XXXVII, to strike out the word "summoned" and to insert the word "subpoenaed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read an amendment proposed to Rule XXXIX, to strike out the word "so" before the words "withdrawn therefrom;" so that the rule would read as follows:

No memorial or other paper presented to the House shall be withdrawn from its files without its leave, and if withdrawn therefrom, certified copies thereof shall be left in the office of the Clerk, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to reconsider the various votes just taken upon amendments, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent for leave to print in the RECORD as a portion of the debates some remarks upon these rules.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.]

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to make a suggestion in regard to clause 8 of Rule XI, in relation to the Committee on Agriculture. The House having authorized the Committee on Agriculture to report the appropriations necessary for that Department, it seems to me that we should go further and give that committee leave to report at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBINSON. I mean to report at any time upon the subject of appropriations. I care nothing about the matter myself. I voted against the amendment giving the committee that authority. But as we have gone so far as to give that committee the right to report an appropriation bill, I think we should also give the committee the right to report such appropriation bill at any time.

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. I only make the suggestion.

Mr. BURROWS. I have a suggestion to make in relation to the order in which these rules are stated. The first rule relates to the "duties of the Speaker;" the second rule relates to the "election of officers." Then the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh rules relate to the duties of particular officers of the House. Would it not be better to reverse the order of the first and second rules, and let the second rule in relation to the "election of officers" be the first rule, and then let the rules in relation to the duties of officers follow that?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The committee considered that question.

Mr. BURROWS. I will not press it.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to make an inquiry. The Committee on Rules, as I understood, determined to demand a yea-and-nay vote on clause 7 of Rule XI, in relation to the right of the Committee on Commerce to report appropriation bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. CARLISLE. That was adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. And without a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have prepared the resolution which I indicated, and I think if the House will hear it read there will be no objection to it.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let it come in after the rules have been adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now upon adopting the rules as amended.

Mr. CONGER. I move that clause 3 of Rule XXI be stricken out.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is not in order; the previous question is still operating.

Mr. CONGER. The previous question is not operating upon the adoption of the report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The previous question is not yet exhausted; it was called upon the report and all amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. Let the record of the action of the House in that regard be read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I take it that the previous question is not exhausted until the question is taken on the adoption of the report.

Mr. CLARKE, of Missouri. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) There is.

Mr. CONGER. I do not ask consent to offer that amendment. I ask that the record be read in order to show whether the previous question applies to the adoption of the whole report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. Let that portion of the Journal be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal is not yet made up.

Mr. CONGER. Then let the minutes of the journal clerk be read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Speaker has decided the point of order. Does the gentleman appeal?

Mr. CONGER. I would like to hear the record read.

Mr. CLYMER. Let the Journal be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will read the minutes of his Journal.

The journal clerk [Mr. Smith] read as follows:

Mr. BLACKBURN moved that the morning hour be dispensed with; which motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. BLACKBURN further moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules, submitting revised rules, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with amendments, on Friday last, and pending when the House then adjourned; which said motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN demanded the previous question on the adoption of the report of the Committee on Rules as amended by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, together with amendments submitted by the Committee on Rules thereto.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That settles it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would seem to end the matter.

Mr. CONGER. It was not so stated at the time as to be understood. I say that most positively and distinctly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What was not understood?

Mr. CONGER. The motion of the gentleman was not stated so as to be understood by me and others on this side.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was not my fault, for it was stated by me in as distinct tones as I could employ.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman stated that he demanded the previous question on the amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I stated three times over that I demanded the previous question on the report as well as on the amendments.

Mr. CLYMER. And I heard the gentleman when he did it.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Record will show that I made the suggestion to the gentleman from Kentucky to include the report in his demand of the previous question; and he did it.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays on the adoption of these rules. I do this because it gives us the only opportunity we can have to vote against this principle of political riders.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 88, not voting 82; as follows:

Mr. GODSHALK. My colleague, Mr. HARMER, is paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. GOODE.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. HOOKER. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LORING.

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. STONE. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. THOMPSON. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague, Mr. SIMONTON, is paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. MCCOID, and my colleague, Mr. TAYLOR, with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. BRIGHAM.

Mr. KING. My colleague, Mr. ELAM, who is absent by reason of illness, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DICK. My colleague, Mr. GIBSON, who is absent on account of indisposition, and who is paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. WATT, would, if present, vote "ay." The gentleman from Connecticut would vote "no."

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman from Virginia, Mr. JOHNSTON, is paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. ORTH.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, who is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. VAN VOORHIS, would, if present, vote "ay."

Mr. HASKELL. My colleague, Mr. RYAN, who is paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MANNING, would, if present, vote "no."

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. McKINLEY. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. WHITE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BELTZHOVER. If he were present, I should vote "no;" I presume he would vote "ay."

Mr. SAPP. I am paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. BERRY. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "no."

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman from Colorado, Mr. BELFORD, is paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague, Mr. EINSTEIN, is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. CLARK.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That 5,000 copies of the rules of the House, properly indexed, be printed under the direction of the journal clerk, for the use of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the foregoing rules, just adopted as a substitute for all existing rules of the House, shall take effect and be in force from and after the hour of noon on Monday next, on which day, after the reading of the Journal, the Speaker shall present to the House the calendars provided for in these rules, on which shall be entered in proper order all the measures now pending before the House or the Committee of the Whole: Provided, That in carrying these rules into effect no standing committee shall be abolished, nor the number of the same decreased, during the present Congress; nor shall any existing special order be set aside.

Mr. DUNNELL. This resolution will not prevent the Speaker from making additional appointments during this session upon committees whose numbers are increased?

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir; where the new rules provide for an increase that can be carried out. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BRAGG, for two weeks, on account of important business; and

To Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, for eight days.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. AIKEN: The petition of the publisher of the Lexington (South Carolina) Dispatch, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILLIAM ALDRICH: The petition of the Illinois Staats Zeitung Company; of H. J. Bohn & Co., publishers of the Hotel World, Chicago, and of G. P. Engerhard, editor of the Chicago Grocer and Mercantile Review, and the Druggist, Chicago, Illinois, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. NELSON W. ALDRICH: The petition of Owen Brothers and others, of Providence, Rhode Island, for the removal of the duty from chrome iron-ore and bichromate of potash—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of John Yeager and others, of Wood County, Ohio, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of William Martin and others, of Wood County, Ohio, that Congress enact such laws as will alleviate the oppressions imposed upon the people by the transportation monopolies that now control the interstate commerce of the country—to the same committee.

Also, the petitions of the Toledo Blade Printing Company and others, of Toledo, and of Evers & Rudolph and others, of Bowling Green, Ohio, that materials used in making paper be placed on the free list, and for a reduction of the duty on printing-paper—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of William Martin and others, of Wood County, and of R. E. Betts and others, of Sandusky County, Ohio, that the patent laws be so amended as to make the manufacturer or vendor of patented articles alone responsible for infringement—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. JAMES: The petition of H. G. Reynolds, publisher of the Herald, Gouverneur, New York, that materials used in making paper be placed on the free list, and for a reduction of the duty on printing-paper—to the same committee.

Also, the petitions of H. G. Reynolds, publisher of the Herald, Gouverneur, New York, and of B. H. Parker, publisher of the News, Norwood, New York, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the same committee.

By Mr. JOHNSTON: The petition of Daniel Ruggles, asking that his petition for an appropriation to be expended in developing his system of producing rain-fall be referred to the Committee on Agriculture for some immediate action—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. KLOTZ: The petition of Crosby S. Noyes, Evening Star; A. M. Clapp, National Republican; Ringwalt, Hock & Miller, Critic; T. B. Kalbfus, Sunday Herald; S. A. Safford, Sunday Capital, and W. C. Scribner, Sunday Gazette, Washington, District of Columbia, that materials used in making paper be placed on the free list, and for a reduction of the duty on printing-paper—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. MAGINNIS: The petition of citizens of Montana Territory, in relation to certain amendments of the public land laws—to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, memorial of the Helena (Montana Territory) Board of Trade, relating to the improvement of the Missouri River above the falls—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. EDWARD L. MARTIN: The petition of Scott & Townsend, publishers of the Milford (Delaware) Chronicle, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. MCGOWAN: The petition of John A. Robertson, John Russell, and 110 others, citizens of Barry County, Michigan, that the patent laws be so amended as to make the manufacturer or vendor of patented articles alone responsible for infringement—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of the same parties, that Congress enact such laws as will alleviate the oppressions imposed upon the people by the transportation monopolies that now control the interstate commerce of the country—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McLANE: The petition of Alexander Montgomery, for arrears of pay as an officer in the United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MCMAHON: The petition of numerous inmates of the Soldiers' Home, Dayton, Ohio, for the reappointment of General B. F. Butler as manager thereof—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of citizens of Dayton, Ohio, that materials used in making paper be placed on the free list, and for a reduction of the duty on printing-paper—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of citizens of Greene County, Ohio, that the patent laws be so amended as to make the manufacturer or vendor of patented articles alone responsible for infringement—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of citizens of Greene County, Ohio, that Congress enact such laws as will alleviate the oppressions imposed upon the people by the transportation monopolies that now control the interstate commerce of the country—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MONROE: The petition of D. D. Benedict and others, retail druggists of Norwalk, Ohio, for the repeal of the tax on medicinal preparations, &c.—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 3, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 16th ultimo, a list of the names of all officers of the Army retired since the passage of the act of June 18, 1878, with their ages, date of retirement, &c.; which, on motion of Mr. ROLLINS, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GROONE presented a memorial of the Kent County Agricultural Association, of Maryland, in favor of certain proposed legislation by Congress concerning agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. WITHERS presented a copy of the petition of George D. Harwood, of Richmond, Virginia, praying for the passage of a law directing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay him $1,295 for rent and occupation of a house and lot belonging to him during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented the memorial of the Cherokee delegation, remonstrating against the passage by Congress of any act allowing certain citizens of the State of North Carolina, of Cherokee descent, commonly called North Carolina Cherokees, any interest in the lands and funds of the Cherokee Nation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ROLLINS presented the petition of E. E. Parker and others, members of the bar at Nashua, New Hampshire, praying that the terms of the United States circuit and district courts, now held at Exeter, be removed to the city of Concord, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented the petition of William Miller and 22 ex-soldiers, of Winthrop, Iowa, and the petition of the Dubuque Veteran Corps, of Dubuque, Iowa, praying for the passage of the equalization bounty bill; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM presented the petition of J. Walker and others, citizens of Winona, Minnesota, praying that such an amendment of the patent laws be made as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of H. H. Haydon and others, citizens of Winona, Minnesota, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Byron F. Titcomb and others, of Plainview, Minnesota, ex-soldiers, praying for the passage of a bill which shall place the pay of soldiers upon the same basis as the pay of bondholders; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of the mayor, aldermen, and other citizens of Houston, Texas, praying Congress to make an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of Buffalo Bayou; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALLACE presented the memorial of John Scott, president of the Allegheny Valley Railroad Company, representing two hundred and fifty-nine miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of James Oliver Fries and others, of Cedarville, Pennsylvania, soldiers in the late war, praying to be paid the difference between the value of gold and greenbacks at the time they were paid for their services as soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Cameron County, Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a department of agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Cameron County, Pennsylvania, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAYARD. I present the petition of William P. Bancroft, of Wilmington, Delaware, and a large number of other individuals and associations, merchants, manufacturers, and consumers in the States of Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, New Jersey, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire, praying that the prohibitory duties now levied upon chrome iron ore and bichromate of potash may be removed therefrom, in order that the large industrial pursuits of our country may be encouraged, and enabled to better compete with England and Germany for the trade offered by Brazil, South and Central America, Cuba, &c., and to cheapen to our own people, as well, the cost of nearly all wearing apparel, and many articles of household necessity. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of Beverly Kennon, a citizen of the United States, praying for an appropriation by Congress to construct a counterpoise battery for the protection of cannon for coast defense and the field, also on board iron-plated vessels for river and harbor defense; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CARPENTER presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, in favor of the passage of a bill to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McMILLAN presented additional papers in relation to the claim of George F. Brott, assignee of Brott, Davis and Sohns, for certain cotton taken from the schooner Sea Lion by the United States authorities during the late war; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 967) to extend the jurisdiction of the northern district of Texas, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 2799) to remove the political disabilities of Abner Smead, of Oregon;

A bill (H. R. No. 2801) to remove the political disabilities of Walter R. Butt, of California;

A bill (H. R. No. 2800) to remove the political disabilities of John M. Brooke, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2569) to remove the political disabilities of William Sharp, of Virginia.

Mr. THURMAN. A paper was referred by the Senate to the Judiciary Committee which upon examination we find to be a petition of the Woman's Anti-Polygamy Society of Utah Territory, praying that GEORGE Q. CANNON, a Delegate in the House of Representatives from that Territory, be expelled from that body. On looking at the petition we find that it is a petition to the House of Representatives, and that it had no business here, and that it was undoubtedly through an oversight presented in the Senate. I am instructed by the Judiciary Committee to ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. CARPENTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon, and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (H. R. No. 358) to provide for the appointment of an additional clerk in the western judicial district of North Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 1121) in relation to jury trials in certain cases; and

A bill (S. No. 945) to transfer certain claims from the Executive Departments to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 953) for the relief of Kimberly Brothers, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1379) for the relief of David Heustis, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Patents; which was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Anson Dart, praying payment of a balance claimed to be due him for services rendered the United States Government as Indian superintendent on the Pacific coast, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 89) for the relief of John Adams, William B. Clift, David Dunseath, William Killinger, J. F. Scott, administrator of the estate of Obediah Scott, deceased, Davis C. Peak, Charles Linderman, James Linnane, Patrick Carey, John McMahon, and James Gorman, administrator of the estate of Patrick Gorman, deceased, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1260) to facilitate the transaction of business in the Supreme Court of the United States, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FARLEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1130) for the relief of David Wingate, of Rochester, New Hampshire, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1359) to authorize and enable the Eastern band of the Cherokee Indians to institute and prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims against the Cherokee Nation, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1263) to regulate appointments and promotions in the Marine Corps, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WALLACE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, reported it with amendments.

JOHN R. McLEAN.

Mr. McDONALD. I move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of John R. McLean, relating to the taking of illegal fees in the United States clerk's office in the circuit court for the southern district of Ohio, and praying for the appointment of a committee. I make the motion with the consent of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. McDONALD, it was Ordered, That leave be given to withdraw from the files of the Senate the memorial of John R. McLean.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1407) for the relief of Lacon R. Tillman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. THURMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1408) to further amend the act entitled "An act to reorganize the courts of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, and to repeal section 861 of chapter 24 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia, and re-enact the same as amended; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McDONALD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1409) for the relief of James H. Woodard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALLACE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1410) to aid in increasing commercial relations with the Argentine Republic; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1411) granting a pension to James Morgan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1412) regulating the compensation of paymasters' clerks in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1413) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Hannibal, in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. FARLEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1414) authorizing claimants to the Rancho de Napa, in Napa County, California, to prove up their title; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VANCE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1415) for the relief of Rollin J. Reeves and Henry R. Lemly; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1416) relating to writs of execution in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONAS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1417) for the relief of Mrs. Bettie Taylor Dandridge and Miss Sarah Knox Wood, daughter and granddaughter of Zachary Taylor, late President of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. CARPENTER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire as to whether or not under existing treaties Congress has a right to make the Indian Territory a separate judicial district and to organize a court or courts therein; and, if so, what jurisdiction ought to be conferred upon said courts, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to state to the Senator from Wisconsin that that subject, in all its branches, is already before the Committee on Territories of this body, and it is not worth while, I think, to refer the subject to another committee.

Mr. CARPENTER. This resolution refers to a mere question of law, and I think the Judiciary Committee should consider it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GARLAND. I shall object, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas objects, and the resolution goes over under the rule.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT MEMPHIS.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it now proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2353) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee.

I desire to say, if the Senate will indulge me, that owing to the want of suitable hospital accommodation there very great suffering was occasioned during the epidemics of 1878 and 1879, and perhaps deaths resulted from want of sufficient hospital accommodations there.

The construction of a pavilion marine hospital at Memphis is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, by the Supervising Surgeon of the Marine Hospital Service, by the National Board of Health, by the president of the board of health of the city of Memphis, and by the Committee on Commerce. I hope the Senate will give consent to take up the bill, for I do not think it will require five minutes to dispose of it. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] reported the bill from the Committee on Commerce and can state the facts in the case.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say that there is a little history in relation to these hospitals. We established them at various points over this country, in many places where it was found there was really no occasion for them. I do not myself believe that there are seamen enough to require the establishment of a marine hospital at Memphis, and I believe it would increase the expenses of the Government tenfold to maintain a hospital there above and beyond what it would cost to have the sick cared for in private quarters. I do not know about the particular facts of this case; I should like to listen to them; but I do know that we have traveled over this road once or twice, and have found that we had made very grave mistakes in relation to these hospitals. It is a very good thing to have them. We have sold them in several States. This is a matter that has not been brought to my attention recently, and I do not recall the points to mind, but I am right in the fact. Will my friend from Tennessee tell me how many seamen are registered at Memphis?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] has papers in his hands which will enable him to answer accurately the question of the Senator from Maine. But I desire to say in answer to the Senator from Maine that the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, after a careful examination of the question, recommends the construction of a pavilion hospital at Memphis for the accommodation of the seamen there; the Secretary of the Treasury recommends it; the National Board of Health recommends it; the board of health of the city of Memphis recommends it; and the experience of the last two years of the epidemics there has satisfied all persons cognizant of the facts that it is a matter of the highest importance to the class to be accommodated by the proposed building that we should have a pavilion marine hospital at Memphis.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let us call things by their right names. If it is a proper thing, in view of the locality and the health of our people, to establish a hospital at Memphis for general purposes owing to the calamity which has rested upon that place on several occasions, let it be so presented; but let it not be done under the guise—

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. The marines at Memphis have been accommodated up to this time by the city hospital, adequate for ordinary purposes, but inadequate for the ordinary purposes of the city and to accommodate the seamen and marines who are there. It is for the accommodation of that particular class, and that class alone, that the proposed hospital is desired.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would be very much obliged to the Senator from Tennessee, or to the Senator from West Virginia, if either of them will inform this body what is the number of marines at that port.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine assent to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the bill had better go over; I want to look into it. I have had too much experience in this very branch to consent to the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

TITLES AT HOT SPRINGS.

Mr. WALKER. I gave notice on Friday last that at the expiration of the morning hour to-day I should call up the bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be reported and objections asked.

Mr. WALKER. I ask that the report of the Committee on Public Lands be read.

Mr. VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will first be reported.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will this matter lead to discussion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first have the bill read, and then inquire whether there is objection to its present consideration.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and was interrupted by Mr. McMILLAN. From the appearance of the bill which is now being read it seems to me that it will consume almost the entire time appropriated for the Calendar to read the bill. It is very certain that it will lead to discussion, I think, because this subject has always led to discussion when brought before the Senate. I ask the Senator from Arkansas whether he will not consent to proceed to the Calendar under the regular order and leave this bill to come up when there shall be more time to devote to it in the Senate. I dislike to object to its present consideration.

Mr. WALKER. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will withdraw his objection to the present consideration of the bill. Last Friday I gave notice that to-day, at the expiration of the morning hour, I should call up the bill for consideration; but as the Senator from Illinois has the floor to proceed with the discussion of the unfinished business, at that time I had hoped the Senate would consider the bill now. It is important that it should be promptly considered, inasmuch as the time for legislation upon this subject expires on the 14th day of March. There is, therefore, little time to consider the matter, and I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am satisfied that the bill cannot be disposed of this morning. The Senator from Illinois has the floor to discuss the bill pending now as unfinished business, and there are but three-quarters of an hour remaining between this moment and the time that the Senator from Illinois will take the floor. I do not apprehend there is any probability that this matter can be disposed of this morning. If the Senator from Arkansas desires to take the floor himself upon the bill, if there is any desire of that kind, I, of course, shall interpose no objection to that; but if the bill is called up merely for its disposition, I feel sure it cannot be disposed of in that time, and I suggest to the Senator whether its consideration would not interfere with the disposition of all the bills on the Calendar in their regular order. That is the only suggestion I make.

Mr. WALKER. As the objection of the Senator carries the bill over, I shall ask that it be considered to-morrow at the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not interpose an objection. If the Senator desires to have the bill read, and if it leads to no discussion on being read, I shall not object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Did not the Senator from Minnesota object to the bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. I withdrew my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota withdrew his objection.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to say about the bill, that as it came from the House it covered some seven or eight pages. I observe by looking at the printed bill that the committee report to strike out pretty much the whole of it and substitute practically a new bill. I will assist with my vote the Senator from Arkansas to take up this bill, not in the morning hour but as he proposed, after the morning hour, on any day when he may make the motion, that we may have an understanding of it. I did not hear any notice given that the bill was to be taken up to-day. The notice, it seems, was that it was to be taken up after the morning hour. It is proposed now in the morning hour to take up this voluminous and important bill and to consider it. I beg the Senator not to drive me or anybody else to make an objection, but to let it stand until after the morning hour, as he proposed, to-morrow morning or on some day when it can be considered.

That the Senators from Arkansas need not suppose that delay is unnecessary on this subject, I will say to them that I have received from residents of Arkansas, one or two of whom were formerly residents of New York, who are property holders and largely interested in this matter, letters and statements, intelligent and instructive, as I think, which I should like to have here to be considered in connection with the bill, which was reported only last Friday, and without the slightest apprehension on my part that it was to come up to-day, and particularly during the somewhat hasty and formal proceedings of the morning hour. Therefore if the Senators will allow the bill to stand until to-morrow, or any day, after the morning hour, I shall be very glad to assist them, with the little assistance that I can give, to get up the bill; but I hope they will not press a bill of this sort during the morning hour and under such circumstances.

Mr. GARLAND. I am very glad the Senator from New York is interested in this matter, and I wish all other Senators would become equally so. It has been a matter of very great labor, of exacting labor, upon the Senators from Arkansas, as well as upon the Representatives in the lower House.

By a resolution of suspension of all further proceedings in this matter, which was passed early in January, after the holiday recess, the time for legislation will be closed on the 14th of this month. That leaves only twelve days, counting to-day, for legislation to be had. Whatever action the Senate takes upon the matter has got to go back to the House.

Mr. CONKLING. I could not hear the Senator. What is it that establishes a twelve-days limit?

Mr. GARLAND. I will repeat. By a resolution passed very early after the recess, in January, all further proceedings in the Interior Department and the Land Office to perfect the title to this land were suspended for a period of sixty days. That period of sixty days expires on the 14th of this month, which leaves, counting to-day, twelve days only in which legislation is to be had; and whatever measure passes the Senate will have to go to the House for the action of that body, it may be.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator hear a suggestion at that point?

Mr. GARLAND. I will, with great pleasure.

Mr. CONKLING. It is this—and I appeal to many examples, some of them I think within the memory of the Senator—neither the Secretary of the Interior nor any other executive officer would, upon being informed, by a committee even, that the two Houses were considering a purpose to change legislation giving direction to him, proceed so promptly as to trip that legislation. Therefore, I do not think the Senator will have the slightest difficulty, upon addressing a note to the Secretary of the Interior, in seeing that nothing is done so very hastily as it would be if immediately upon the expiration of the sixty days he should proceed to act. But, again, if the Senator will allow me, it would be a very easy thing to pass a resolution, if he deems that necessary, extending for a small number of days in addition, this interval of time.

Mr. GARLAND. That may all be very true, but I was simply stating matters of fact that exist in reference to this transaction; and as the sixty days were considered ample time in which to perfect this legislation, it was the desire of the Senators from Arkansas that it should be accomplished, if possible, within the time. My colleague made the report last Friday, and gave notice that he would call it up to-day for action.

This is not legislation concerning alone the Senators from Arkansas. It is a matter in which the public are interested, and we are not selfish at all; we are glad to have other Senators take an interest in it. We wish now, while the subject is before the Senate, to make this impression on Senators: that we want such legislation passed as will make a finality as far as there can be one on this subject, so that there will be no further legislation needed after this is done. Of course we yield to the suggestion of the Senator from New York that this matter go over, with the notice of my colleague that he will insist upon its consideration to-morrow. The report is printed, and we shall be glad to have Senators examine the question, in order that we may have all the light possible. We will ask the Senate to consider it to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that to-morrow, after the morning hour, the Senator from Arkansas will ask the Senate to consider the bill.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the bill (S. No. 1314) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur, collector of the port of New York, be taken up for present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill directs the proper accounting officers to allow Chester A. Arthur, collector of the port of New York, in settlement of his accounts, a credit for $3,436.88, being for $5,000 in gold coin, a sum now charged to the collector, which was stolen or disappeared from the office of the then cashier of the custom-house at New York, January 21, 1876, without the default or negligence of the collector or of the late William D. Robinson, cashier, and for $3,436.88, the amount of an apparent discrepancy in account of proceeds of sales of unclaimed goods, which is unexplained by reason of the death of Samuel G. Ogden, late auditor of the custom-house, who had charge of such account, and personally received and disbursed all moneys thereon during his whole term of service of thirty-six years.

Mr. MORRILL. I will merely say that this bill embraces for the main part a bill of the same character reported to and passed by the Senate last year, and which was favorably considered by the House committee and reported, but not in season to be acted upon by the House. It is a bill that has received the unanimous assent of the Committee on Finance, and is favored by the Secretary of the Treasury. The two officers named in the bill were long in the employment of the Government in the custom-house in New York, thirty or forty years, and there is a very considerable balance that has been paid into the Treasury by them of money saved over and above what they would be compelled legally, perhaps, to account for. I have no doubt myself of the propriety of the passage of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DRAWBACK ON EXPORTED GOODS.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate now to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 910.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 910) to amend section 3020 of the Revised Statutes.

The Committee on Finance reported the bill with an amendment, which was, in line 17, after the word "shall," to strike out "equal" and insert "be not less than."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire now to offer the House bill on the same subject as a substitute for the bill before the Senate. It is identical with the bill before us.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That section 3020 of the Revised Statutes be so amended as to read as follows: "Sec. 3020. Where fire-arms, scales, balances, shovels, spades, axes, hatchets, hammers, plows, cultivators, mowing-machines, and reapers, manufactured with stock or handles made of wood grown in the United States, are exported for benefit of drawback under the preceding section, such articles shall be entitled to such drawback in all cases where the imported material exceeds one-half of the value of the material used. And where cans, manufactured in whole or in part of imported material, filled with products grown or produced in the United States, are exported for benefit of such drawback, the same shall, in all cases, be entitled to the drawback provided for in the preceding section where the imported material used in the manufacture of such cans shall equal 70 per cent. of the value of all the material used in the manufacture thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. The House having acted upon this question I desire that we should pass the House bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to as a substitute.

Mr. MORRILL. Not as a substitute; that is not the proper course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was offered as a substitute and agreed to as a substitute.

Mr. MORRILL. I would merely observe that it should not in form be presented as a substitute. The object of the exchange of the bills is to pass the House bill, and therefore I take it the chairman of the Committee on Finance only desires to have the House bill passed instead of the Senate bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware, if he will allow me, that the motion to accomplish his purpose is to lay aside the Senate bill and take up the House bill. If he substitutes it it still remains a Senate bill which must go to the House, but if he lays aside the Senate bill and takes up the House bill, that will accomplish his object.

Mr. BAYARD. My object was to facilitate the passage of the measure into a law, and it having had the assent of the House, I ask the Senate to act on the House measure, laying aside the Senate bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The suggestion of the Senator from New York is the correct one and that will be the order.

Mr. BAYARD. Let the House bill be before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The House bill will be considered as before the Senate, the Committee on Finance being discharged from its consideration.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3462) to amend section 3020 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate bill No. 910 will be regarded as indefinitely postponed.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the Calendar, commencing at the point reached yesterday.

PUBLIC LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. PLUMB. The first bill to be called is the bill (H. R. No. 3968) for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished-reserve lands, in the State of Kansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That bill was passed without prejudice yesterday, and will now be taken up.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will not the case that was unfinished at the end of the call yesterday now come up?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill was passed over yesterday by unanimous consent without prejudice and so did not lose its place on the Calendar. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SLATER. I should like to hear the bill read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the first section by inserting after the word "assigns," in line 27, the words "being in possession thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now desire to add at the conclusion of that section these words:

Where such persons, their heirs, legal representatives, or assigns are not in possession of said lands, then the same may be entered as other of the said Kansas Indian lands by actual settlers only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FORT RIPLEY RESERVATION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1153) to restore to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill was read yesterday and the report also was read. The bill has passed the House of Representatives. It is recommended by the Secretary of War. Here is a large military reservation which was abandoned a number of years ago and the buildings upon it were nearly all burned down. This bill provides that the few remaining buildings and any improvements there be appraised and sold at not less than their appraised value, and the lands which are of the same character as contiguous lands shall be subject to entry the same as other public lands.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "except" to strike out "the following described tracts of land designated in executive order dated August 2, A. D. 1875, to wit, the south half of the southwest quarter and the south half of the southeast quarter of section 6, lot 1, in section 5, the north half of section 7, and the north half of the southwest quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 7, and lot 1 in section 8, in township 131, of range 29, and;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to turn over to the Department of the Interior all the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, except a strip or tract of land, fifty feet in width, from the center of the railroad track on each side of said track of the Western Railroad Company of Minnesota, as the said track is located and constructed, being a distance of about fifteen miles across said reservation on the east side of the Mississippi River, together with a tract of land fifteen hundred feet in length and three hundred feet in width, for depot and station purposes at the present location of the Fort Ripley side-track; the same being for right of way for said railroad as heretofore granted by acts of Congress in the years 1857 and 1865, and which is hereby granted for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "in," to strike out "that part of;" so as to read:

All the lands embraced in said Fort Ripley reservation hereby required to be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior shall be subject to entry by actual settlers under the pre-emption and homestead laws as minimum lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, after the word "payment," in line 18, to insert:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall, prior to offering any quarter section, half quarter section, or quarter quarter section whereon are situate any public buildings or improvements, erected or made by the Government, cause the said tracts with the improvements thereon to be appraised by three disinterested persons, and upon his approval of such appraisement shall dispose of said tracts at not less than the appraised value.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "An act to restore to the public domain the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes."

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I would ask the Senator from Missouri if there is a general law on this subject?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir. This reservation, with a large number of others, was made a number of years ago and reported by the Secretary of War to Congress for legislation; but it is impossible to draw a bill that will reach all the reservations, and therefore they come in by piecemeal.

REMOVAL OF DESERTION CHARGES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 876) for the relief of Edward Corseilus and seven other persons, late members of the First Michigan Cavalry Veteran Volunteers, which had been reported adversely by Mr. COCKRELL from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are a number of cases reported adversely on the Calendar, and they ought to be disposed of. It is throwing away the labors of the committees when such cases are placed on the Calendar and no action had on them. They come back to us at the next session, are reported adversely again, placed on the Calendar again, and so they go on to infinity. There ought to be some action on these adverse reports.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senators from Michigan desire to be heard on this bill.

Mr. FERRY. I understand my colleague desires to be heard. The Senator from Missouri does not object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The parliamentary question, as the Chair understands, on all these bills adversely reported, the action of the committee being advisory merely, is, Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. FERRY. So I understand.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, differing as I do from the adverse report made upon this bill by the Committee on Military Affairs, I propose to submit a brief history of the case of these men, and of the peculiar circumstances under which they came to be classed as deserters, with the reasons why, in my judgment, the relief asked should be granted.

In 1861, when the Government was imperiled by a rebellion which had become widespread over a large portion of the country, these men enlisted in the First Michigan Cavalry Regiment and served continuously with the armies of the Shenandoah, Virginia, and Potomac until December, 1863, which will be remembered as one of the dark periods of the war which threatened the disruption of the Union.

In response to the urgent appeals for additional volunteers, and for the re-enlistment of the soldiers already in the field, these men then re-enlisted as veterans for three years or during the war, and participated in the subsequent campaigns of Sheridan and Grant until the surrender of Lee, in April, 1865. At the time of their re-enlistment the regiment to which they belonged was paraded by the colonel, who explained to his men the inducements offered for the re-enlistment of old soldiers, and expressly stated to them that as many as should re-enlist and serve to the end of the war should be mustered out of service at the close and receive all the benefits promised.

In May, 1865, the First, Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Michigan Cavalry Regiments were encamped near Washington, and were under orders to move West. The men were greatly disappointed; they had entered the Army not as professional soldiers, but in response to the urgent call of their country. In its hour of peril they had left their farms, their workshops, their various avocations, and their families, and had volunteered as citizen soldiers for the specific and sole purpose of sustaining the Government, of aiding in its efforts to put down a rebellion which threatened the destruction of their country. They had cheerfully endured the hardships, the privations, and the dangers of the camp and the battle-field during all the long years of the war, and now, after its close, when they expected to be mustered out of service, as was promised, they were ordered West.

The day before they started for Saint Louis the governor of Michigan visited them in camp, listened to their complaints, and advised them to go quietly to Saint Louis, but promising them a speedy discharge. This promise was based upon information he had received from the War Department, as will be seen from the report of the adjutant-general of the State, in which he details to the governor the history of this matter. The adjutant-general says:

In the latter part of last May, the time at which the armies were encamped around Washington, your excellency, with several of your staff, accompanied by myself, was in that city, being on a tour of visitation to the Michigan regiments then serving in those armies. The Michigan cavalry brigade, composed of the First, Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Regiments, was then encamped near the city, and learning that it was under orders to move West, you visited the camps of those regiments on the morning before they left. Understanding that some dissatisfaction and disappointment prevailed among them in consequence of their being ordered West and not being mustered out, as they had expected to have been, you then advised them to have patience, and to accede cheerfully to the requirements of the Government, and that in a short time they undoubtedly would be discharged from the service. This was the conclusion to which you had come from the information you had obtained in your intercourse with the authorities at the War Department.

The advice of the governor was acted upon and the regiment went to Saint Louis. Owing to a misunderstanding of orders from the Department, the regiment was not mustered out, but was ordered to Utah. After reaching Fort Leavenworth they were ordered on a six-hundred-mile march across the plains. The governor of Michigan in a letter to the Secretary of War wrote as follows:

They are undoubtedly legally held for the whole term of their enlistment, yet, notwithstanding this, the phrase used in their enlistment papers, "or during the war," has led them with some justice to suppose that when the war ended they would be discharged, and especially as some of the regiments have been placed on service which they consider as not connected with the war, for instance on the plains or on the Mexican border.

Taking his view of the case—which was strengthened by the promise of their colonel on their re-enlistment—these men felt that they were unjustly held, they felt that they had discharged their full duty—that their term of service had expired.

It is not, Mr. President, for the purpose of exciting discussion or controversy that I advocate the relief asked by them, but as a matter of simple justice.

One point which I conceive should have weight in this case is the fact that these men were citizen soldiers; that they were enlisted as such for a specific purpose, and that sole purpose was to fight for the preservation of the Union during the war. When in the spring of 1865 the war was closed they plead for discharge—not because they were unfaithful, not because they were unpatriotic, not because they were cowards; they had proved their faithfulness, their patriotism, and their bravery on a score of battle-fields from 1861 to 1865, but they demurred because they honestly believed that they had fully lived up to their contract. They had enlisted for the one purpose of aiding in subduing a rebellion, and that purpose had been successfully accomplished; months had come and passed away since the war had been closed. Under these circumstances the men desired to return to their families and the avocations from which they had been so long separated.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that there is a wide difference between what is known as a regular, and a citizen soldier. The regular enlists in the Army for a fixed period of years, as a profession or trade for a livelihood, to go to any post or place, in peace or in war, to discharge any and every duty for which a standing army may be called upon.

The citizen soldier, on the contrary, volunteers his services in an emergency for a specific purpose as in the case of these men, to be mustered out of service when the emergency or peril has passed away. That this view of the case was held by the governor of Michigan there can be no doubt.

But there is another and it seems to me, an unanswerable standpoint from which these men may claim to be relieved from the undeserved stigma which rests upon their former good names. From the close of the war until the present time general amnesty has been the prevailing sentiment and policy of the country. The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution authorizes Congress to remove the disabilities even of those who, after having taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, have engaged in insurrection or rebellion. And the record shows that in no single instance has a respectful request for the removal of such disabilities been denied. Magnanimity has marked this policy from the close of the war until the present time.

There were at the commencement of the war large numbers of persons pensioned on account of service in the war of 1812, or for service in some of the Indian wars, whose names were stricken from the rolls in pursuance of the act of February 4, 1862, because of having participated in the rebellion, or for aiding and abetting those who were thus engaged in efforts to destroy the Union. All of these have been restored to the pension-roll by the act of March 9, 1878.

But, Mr. President, perhaps the most marked example of this spirit is to be found within these walls. Many seats in each House of Congress are occupied to-day by those who but for this spirit of amnesty could not have been here.

Acting under this predominant sentiment, Congress having with unexampled magnanimity relieved from their disabilities those who for years participated in the late rebellion against the Government, shall we now refuse to do an act of simple justice to men who faithfully served their country through all the long years of the war, some of whom will carry to their graves honorable wounds received on the battle-field? Shall we by our votes refuse to correct the unjust record which classifies these men as deserters, a charge due to the mistakes of officers rather than to misconduct on the part of the men? I hope not. I hope that the bill for their relief will receive—as I believe justice demands—favorable action, and be passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, we scarcely have time to consider this morning the questions which are necessarily involved in this bill and which the Senate ought to decide. This is not a bill for amnesty—very far from it. Congress has been very generous in granting amnesty, and has by the act of 1865 granted full amnesty to these applicants for relief, and they are relieved from all disability incident to desertion, and the committee so report the fact. It is simply, more than anything else, a question of dollars and cents, a claim for certain back pay and bounty withheld by the War Department.

Mr. FERRY. Will the Senator allow me at this point to say to him that he labors under a misapprehension in that respect? I have personally applied to the War Department for the purpose of removing this stigma on the names of the men who seek relief in the bill that is pending, and the response of the Department is that it cannot be done; that upon the statement of facts as now submitted by my colleague the Department do not feel justified in removing that stigma. The application that I presented was not one for the payment of wages, but for the removal of the charge of desertion simply; so that the Senator must be mistaken in the declaration that there is sufficient amnesty now to wipe out that charge.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from Michigan had had as much to do with these cases as I have had, he would not have undertaken to correct a true and mathematically correct statement. I said that these parties were not under disabilities, and he will find by the act of March 3, 1865, that all persons who deserted the service after that date are relieved from the disabilities of desertion, the disabilities of forfeiture of citizenship and the right to hold office. Those are the legal disabilities imposed upon deserters, and that act removed them from these men. Now, as to the charge of desertion upon the records of the office, that is entirely a different matter, and about that I shall not speak, but that is the matter upon which the Senator was speaking—an entirely different matter from the one I mentioned.

Mr. FERRY. In reply to what the Senator from Missouri has now said, I supposed, when he raised the point as an objection to meet what was stated by my colleague, that it related to what the parties had applied for, namely, the removal of the disgrace. Now the Senator modifies his objection into the view that it is simply giving them their rights of citizenship. That is not their application; they already have that and have not forfeited it. That is not their claim for relief. They are claiming to be relieved from the stigma or disgrace of desertion which now rests upon them in the records of the Government. The object of this bill is to remove that; and certainly the Senator from Missouri, who participated in this same war, cannot be so indifferent or ungallant as to refuse this application. It is founded on justice. While cheerfully indorsing all that my colleague has so well said on the subject, I differ in one respect simply from him. It is not a claim for generosity; it is not a claim upon the clemency of the Government; it is a demand for simple justice—nothing less, nothing more.

Mr. BALDWIN. I think my colleague must have misunderstood me when he said he differed with me. I said twice, I believe, during the few remarks I made, that this was asked as a matter of justice—not as a matter of charity, but as a matter of simple justice.

Mr. President, the morning hour is within a minute of expiring. But for that I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri some questions as regards what he conceives disability to mean. But the morning hour is expiring, and as it might lead to some discussion I will not take the time now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I take great pleasure in answering any question which may be propounded. I think the report of the committee in this case, the report of the Adjutant-General, which is very elaborate, and the report of the Secretary of War explain fully the situation.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will allow me at this point, I wish to say in that connection that in my personal interview with the Adjutant-General, upon his statement that upon the state of facts as represented he could not remove the charge of desertion, I made this point to him in writing: If upon the evidence it is shown that these gallant men were ordered to a different service from that for which they enlisted, will the Department consider the question and remove the charge of desertion? And the responsive implication was that the Department would entertain and consider that. Therefore I am very glad that the expiration of the morning hour has occurred at this time, so that perhaps by the time the bill comes up again I shall have that official reply to submit to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 68) to authorize the printing of 13,000 copies of the Report on Sheep Husbandry; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 2804) for the relief of the administrator of John D. McGill; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3288) for the relief of colored emigrants.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BRUCE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of G. E. W. Sharrett on the files of the Senate be referred to the Committee on Claims.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. RANDOLPH.

Mr. LOGAN resumed the floor and continued his speech of yesterday. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.] Having spoken, with interruptions, for some time,

Mr. ANTHONY. If it will be agreeable to the Senator from Illinois, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LOGAN. I will yield with the understanding that I shall be allowed to proceed to-morrow. In my argument hereafter I will take up the evidence in the case, having closed so far as the law question is concerned.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 3, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. MANNING. I am recorded in the Journal as having voted in the negative on the amendment to Rule XXI. I did not vote at all, because I was paired with Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I would have voted in the affirmative if I had not been paired.

The SPEAKER. What is the exact vote to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. MANNING. It was in reference to Rule XXI. It is stated I voted in the negative. I did not vote at all, as I was paired with the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected accordingly.

The Journal, as corrected, was then approved.

CHANGE OF EVENING SESSION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House, on the request of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, [Mr. COFFROTH,] that this evening has been set apart for the consideration of pension bills. To-day, immediately after the morning hour, has also been set apart for resolutions of respect to the memory of the late Senator from Alabama, GEORGE S. HOUSTON. It is usual to adjourn immediately after such memorial proceedings, the effect of which would be to cut off the session for this evening for invalid pensions. The Chair therefore suggests that in lieu of the session this evening there be a session to-morrow evening for the consideration of invalid pensions.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

PERMISSION TO VOTE.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask, by unanimous consent, to have my vote recorded on the twenty-first rule in the negative.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to ask the House this morning to dispense with the morning hour for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the funding bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at the proper time.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE TERRENCE J. QUINN, ETC.

Mr. BAILEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be requested to communicate to this House the reason why the volume of memorial addresses on the late Hon. Terrence J. Quinn, a member of the Forty-fifth Congress from the State of New York, has not been printed as heretofore ordered by Congress.

Mr. BREWER. I suggest to the gentleman to include also an inquiry as to why the memorial addresses on the late General Alpheus S. Williams have not also been printed. They were ordered more than a year ago.

Mr. BAILEY. I accept the modification.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

GEORGE HULSE.

Mr. NEW, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4904) granting a pension to George Hulse; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF TITLE.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that an amendment be made in title to joint resolution (H. R. No. 68) to authorize the printing of 10,000 copies of the Report on Sheep Husbandry. The body of the resolution provides for the printing of 13,000 copies, while the title says only 10,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the title be changed to agree with the body of the joint resolution by striking out ten and inserting thirteen, which is the true statement.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PRINTING.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, the following resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table, severally read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.
December 16, 1879.

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That 3,000 copies of the report of the board to test iron, steel, and other metals be printed for the use of Congress; 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 for the use of the House.

JNO. C. BURCH, Secretary.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.
February 5, 1880.

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That 3,000 sets of the five volumes of the Reports of the United States Fish Commission be printed from the stereotype plates, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,500 for the House of Representatives, and 500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

JNO. C. BURCH, Secretary.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.
February 13, 1880.

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of Bulletin No. 3 of the United States entomological commission on the cotton-worm; 6,000 copies for the use of the House, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of the Interior.

JNO. C. BURCH, Secretary.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.
February 11, 1880.

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office for the use of the Department of the Interior 1,500 copies each of volumes 4 and 12, and 1,200 copies each of volumes 3, 8, and 13 of the final reports of the Geological and Geographical Survey of the Territories, in quarto form, with the necessary illustrations, uniform with the edition ordered by Congress.

JNO. C. BURCH, Secretary.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.
January 29, 1880.

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Naval Observatory on the eclipse of 1879, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Naval Observatory.

JNO. C. BURCH, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT HEADQUARTERS, SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting recommendation of an appropriation of $125,000 for buildings of department headquarters at San Antonio, Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXPERIMENTS IN MOVABLE TORPEDOES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting communication from the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, relative to an appropriation for experiments in movable torpedoes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DANIEL MURPHY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copies of papers in the claim of Daniel Murphy; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

PAY OF MAIL CONTRACTORS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, relative to the appropriation for the payment of certain mail contractors in States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NEW YORK CLEARING-HOUSE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the connection of the United States Treasury with the New York clearing-house; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

BOARD OF ENGINEERS, WISCONSIN RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copy of report of board of engineers on the improvement of the Wisconsin River.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask that that be printed, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EMOLUMENTS AND FEES OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the official emoluments and fees received by customs officers during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK H. E. EBSTEIN.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending relief of Frederick H. E. Ebstein, first lieutenant Twenty-first Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the second number of the statistical abstract of the United States; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HUBBELL, by unanimous consent, moved to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Dr. E. H. Wood; which motion was referred to the Committee on the Origin, Introduction, and Prevention of Epidemic Diseases in the United States.

Mr. AIKEN, by unanimous consent, moved to withdraw from the files of the House the petition of C. S. McDaniel, an invalid soldier of the Mexican war, there being no adverse or other report thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, for ten days, on account of the death of a relative.

EAST FLORIDA CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I deem it proper to invite the attention of Congress to the subject of the unsettled claims of Spanish inhabitants of East Florida during the years of 1812 and 1813, generally known as the "East Florida claims." The settlement of which is provided for by a stipulation found in article 9 of the treaty of February, 1819, between the United States and Spain. The provision of the treaty in question which relates to the subject is the following: "The United States will cause satisfaction to be made for the injuries, if any, which by process of law shall be established to have been suffered by the Spanish officers and individual Spanish inhabitants by the late operations of the American Army in Florida."

The act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1823, (Statutes at Large, volume 3, page 768,) to carry into effect the ninth article of the treaty in question, provided for the examination and judicial ascertainment of the claims by the judges of the superior courts established at Saint Augustine and Pensacola, and also made provision for the payment by the Secretary of the Treasury of such claims as might be reported to him by the said judges upon his being satisfied that such claims were just and equitable, and a subsequent act approved the 26th of June, 1834, (Statutes at Large, volume 6, page 569,) gave further directions for the payment, and also provided for the hearing and determination by the judge of the superior court of Saint Augustine of such claims as had not then been already heard and determined. Under these acts of Congress I understand that all claims presented to the judges in Florida were passed upon, and the result of the proceedings thus had reported to the Secretary of the Treasury. It also appears that in the computation of damages the judges adopted a rule of 5 per cent. per annum on the ascertained actual loss from the date of that loss to the time of the rendition of their finding, and that the Secretary of the Treasury in 1836, when the first reports were presented to him, not deeming this portion of the claims covered by the 5 per cent. rule just and equitable within the meaning of the treaty and the acts of Congress, refused to pay it, but did continue to pay the ascertained amounts of actual loss. The demand for payment of this rejected item has been pressed at various times and in various ways up to the present time, but Mr. Woodbury's successors in the Treasury Department have not felt at liberty to review that ruling.

Under these circumstances I have thought it proper to lay the subject before Congress for its consideration and such action as may be deemed necessary. The history of the proceedings already had in regard to the matter is of record in the Treasury Department, and will be furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury should Congress desire it.

R. B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, March 1, 1880.

The SPEAKER. This message will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and printed.

Mr. CULBERSON. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if it is not proper that the message which has just been read should go to the Committee of Claims.

The SPEAKER. This is a matter between a foreign government and the Government of the United States; and the Chair has been requested by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to have it referred to that committee; and that is the reason which induced the Chair to make the reference which has just been ordered. The message will be sent to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

GENERAL MARTIN T. M'MAHON.

Mr. MULLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 229) appointing General Martin T. MacMahon, of New York City, a manager of the national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

On motion of Mr. BUTTERWORTH, by unanimous consent, the privileges of the floor were extended during this day to Hon. Charles Jacob, mayor of Cincinnati, Ohio.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement in response to the motion made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] and it is this: that we have a bill now pending in the morning hour, but if we can get an hour I think we can dispose of it to-day. I hope, then, that the House will not dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. HAYES. Is there not a special order fixed for one o'clock to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that immediately after the expiration of the morning hour the Senate resolutions in relation to the death of the late Senator from the State of Alabama [Mr. HOUTON] will be called up for consideration.

CORRECTION OF REVISED RULES.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to an inaccuracy in the rules as reported from the Committee of the Whole. This report of the Committee on Rules adopted yesterday cannot be printed unless this matter is corrected, and I hope the gentleman from Texas will yield for that purpose.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to call the attention of the House to an error made by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the revision of the rules, which seems to have been overlooked entirely yesterday. While this matter was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole, on motion of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] the following words were struck out from clause 6, of Rule I, in relation to casting the vote of the Speaker of the House:

In case of a tie or where his vote if given to the minority would make a tie, or would make or prevent a two-thirds vote where such vote is required.

And these words were inserted in lieu of them:

When his vote would be decisive.

The SPEAKER. That was put in by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARLISLE. Yes, sir; but by oversight was not reported to the House. I suggest, therefore, the House by unanimous consent allow that amendment to be treated as if adopted and printed along with the rules.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is another correction that needs to be made before we have the new rules printed. If gentlemen will look for a moment to page 14 of the report acted upon yesterday they will find that the rule as we fixed it yesterday, by an amendment rather hastily made, reads thus:

On all days other than the first and third Mondays, as soon as the Journal is read and approved, there shall be a morning hour.

Now, the intention of the committee and of the House was there should be a call of States on each Monday morning on the first and third Mondays, when we can move to suspend the rules as well as on the other Mondays. But as the rule now stands it would cut off on two of the Mondays the usual call of the States, which nobody wanted. The matter can be perfectly corrected by retaining the word "Monday" in the first line of the second clause, of Rule XXIV, striking out the words "the first and third Mondays," and inserting in the next line, after the word "approved," the words "and on the second and fourth Mondays after the call of the States."

The SPEAKER. And the fifth if there be one. In this month there are five Mondays.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will so state in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is the object of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he use the language "all Mondays except the first and third."

Mr. GARFIELD. I propose to amend it so that the clause shall read as follows:

On all days other than Monday as soon as the Journal is read and approved, and on all Mondays (except the first and third in each month) after the call of States and Territories, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees, &c.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] moves that the morning hour to-day be dispensed with.

The question being put, the motion was not agreed to; two-thirds not voting in favor thereof.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty minutes to one o'clock, and the House resumes the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, being the bill (H. R. No. 4219) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

The SPEAKER. The floor this morning belongs, by the arrangement of the committee, to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS.] That gentleman not being present, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. CULBERSON,] who reported the bill, to claim the floor.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Before the gentleman from Texas proceeds, I desire to know how long he proposes to detain the House with this bill in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has stated that he hopes to get the bill disposed of to-day.

Mr. CULBERSON. I hope to get through with it to-day.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I hope it will be disposed of, so that it may no longer block up more important business.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND,] and when that gentleman has completed his remarks I give notice that I will call the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is well known, Mr. Speaker, that in the beginning of the last Congress, and again at the commencement of the present, I introduced a bill looking to an arrest of the evils resulting from the exercise of the enlarged jurisdiction of the Federal courts by repealing certain sections authorizing the removal of causes. I made a speech on this subject on June 12, 1878. In the course of my remarks at that time I characterized the law of removal in the following language:

This law of removal is un-American in its tendencies. It is stealthily introducing beneath the foundation of our present constitutional form of government a lever by which the advocates of centralization may overturn and revolutionize the government of Washington, Jefferson, and Madison, and in lieu thereof establish the government which Hamilton and John Adams sought to fashion for us.

That law has already nearly demolished the independence of the State judiciary and threatens to destroy their very existence. It disturbs the constitutional balance of the Government, and may bring on a conflict between the State and Federal judicial power which will tax the patience of the people and the wisdom of the ablest statesmen to the utmost in order to save the country from violence and civil war. It has inflicted much inconvenience and great expense upon the people, often defeating the ends of justice by practically placing it beyond the reach of the weak and the poor. It has inundated the Federal courts with a flood of cases far beyond their capacity to adjudicate. It has heavily increased the burden of taxation in a period of direful distress.

My speech will show that I then considered the question "fraught with deep import to the autonomy of the States, the sovereign and primary rights of the people, their convenience, peace, and fortunes."

Sir, nothing has transpired since then to weaken that conviction, but events have occurred which justify the remarks I then made. It was only yesterday that Judges Field and Clifford, in passing upon the habeas corpus case of Judge Cole, the county judge of Patrick County, Virginia, said:

Nothing could have a greater tendency to destroy the independence and autonomy of the States and reduce them to a humiliating and degrading dependence upon the central Government than that doctrine asserted in this case, that Congress can exercise coercive authority over judicial officers of the States in the discharge of their duties. In the case of Collector vs. Day, this court held that "any government whose means employed in conducting its operations are made subject to the control of another and distinct government can exist only at the mercy of that government." The independence of a State consists of its legislative, executive, and judicial officers. If this were not so, a State would cease to be an independent member of the Union, and would be brought to the level of a dependent municipal corporation, existing only with such powers as Congress might prescribe.

But the limitation upon my time compels me to hurry on. While the measure I had introduced failed to secure action in the last Congress, it did receive the attention of that wiser and superior body, the people. As soon as this Congress had assembled in the extra session, we found an influx of new members imbued with the advanced ideas of the people; the subject was quickly taken hold of and for weeks pressed for action. But, under the leadership of gentlemen on the other side of this House, the friends of corporate capital and centralization prevented final action, and the bill was by agreement lodged in the Committee of the Whole, where it has been delayed by the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules. That having now been disposed of, we hope soon to resume its consideration. That bill goes much further than this in remedying evils from which the people suffer, and I am confident its main features will, when reached, be enacted into law.

I am gratified, however, to find that the agitation in the press and among the people over that bill has awakened the attention of this House to the necessity for a diminution of the jurisdiction of the Federal judiciary, and that the Judiciary Committee has brought forward this measure, which occupies, it is true, a field different in the main from the scope of the bill, yet one that will produce beneficial results in the same direction. But the debate during the extra session on the bill to which I refer was so extended and elaborate and the discussion on this bill has been so full and able that it will be unnecessary for us to prolong to any great extent the discussion upon the general features of this subject. I have heretofore so fully discussed it that I would remain silent in my seat now were it not for the desire to call the attention of the House to the nature and the difference between these two bills, and therefore have availed myself of this opportunity at the close of the debate to address the House.

When this bill first came before the House for action a word in its title led me to infer that the Committee on the Judiciary had infringed so seriously upon the bill of which I have charge that I apprehended the consideration of two measures of the same nature would embarrass the success of both, and that thereby injury would result to the effort for reform. I was well assured in my own mind that the majority in this House did not desire such a result should occur. Therefore I suggested to the gentleman who had opened the debate the propriety of referring it to the Committee of the Whole, in order that it might be considered in connection with the other bill. But upon careful examination I find that this bill does not intrench upon the other, except to a very slight degree; so slight, sir, that its consideration and disposition in the morning hour and as an independent measure will not seriously affect the other measure. In fact, this bill will form a good companion measure to it.

In the main this is a wise and meritorious bill, and as I have already said occupies a field almost entirely different from that occupied by the other measure. The measure of which I have charge relates exclusively to the law authorizing the removal of causes from State courts, civil and criminal, while this relates almost entirely to the original jurisdiction of the Federal courts. This bill shall receive my concurrence and cordial support. I will, however, offer amendments to it relating to the original jurisdiction of the Federal courts which I deem important, and which I now ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 10 so that it will read:

"That section 640, and the ninth, tenth, and eleventh clauses of section 629 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I shall not now discuss the necessity for legislation of this character to protect the independence and dignity of the State courts, and for the promotion of economy and the convenience of the people. Therefore I shall confine myself to a few points relative to the nature of this bill and some of the observations which have been made by gentlemen upon the other side of this House.

It will be seen from the bill before us that the Committee on the Judiciary provides for a repeal of only one section of the statute defining the original jurisdiction of the Federal courts. It is section 640, which I will now read:

Any suit commenced in any court other than a circuit or district court of the United States against any corporation other than a banking corporation, organized under a law of the United States, or against any member thereof as such member for any alleged liability of such corporation, or of such member as a member thereof, may be removed, for trial, in the circuit court for the district where such suit is pending, upon the petition of such defendant, verified by oath, stating that such defendant has a defense arising under or by virtue of the Constitution or of any treaty or law of the United States. Such removal, in all other respects, shall be governed by the provisions of the preceding section.

This section affects comparatively but very few corporations, being, I believe, only those chartered by the Government for the construction of a few railroads, and of course its importance is almost exclusively confined to the States and Territories through which these roads run. I can easily comprehend how anxious the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WELLBORN] is, as he expressed himself the other day, to rid his constituents of the dangerous and omnipotent power of the Texas Pacific Railroad in the Federal courts, when they have driven one of his constituents seeking redress into a forum where he who enters as an antagonist of corporate capital may well tremble with fear that justice is not only a blind but a deaf goddess.

I am surprised that no member of the committee reporting this bill seems to have given attention to another provision of the statutes which permits another class of monster monopolies to harass the people of every county in the Union by suits in the Federal courts. I allude to the clauses of section 629, which endow national banks and the owners of patents with the special privilege and protection of Federal courts. The Clerk will read the clauses to which I refer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ninth. Of all suits at law or in equity arising under the patent or copyright laws of the United States.

Tenth. Of all suits by or against any banking association established in the district for which the court is held, under any law providing for national banking associations.

Eleventh. Of all suits brought by or against any banking association established in the district for which the court is held, under the provisions of title National Banks, to enjoin the Comptroller of the Currency or any receiver acting under his direction, as provided by said title.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. To remove these statutes, I shall offer the amendment which I have had read. It is certainly germane to this bill, and in line with the arguments and purpose of the majority of the committee. Knowing the composition of that committee, and believing that a majority of its able and distinguished members are in favor of a repeal of these laws, I trust and believe they will not take it unkind in me to offer this amendment, and will consent that it may be voted upon; for every reason assigned in favor of the repeal of section 640, which relates, as I have said, almost entirely to railroads, will apply with tenfold more force to the other clauses embraced in my amendment.

Why, sir, is there a member representing an agricultural district in this Union which does not contain farmers and others who have been harassed by patent-right sharks and monopolies with suits in the Federal courts, or by threats to sue them there for some pretended infringement of a patent, often for the purpose of levying black-mail? So often have these outrages been perpetrated in my section that a strong feeling of hostility is growing up against our patent system. I shall consume no further time in the discussion of this amendment, for its importance must be clear to a very large majority of this House. I insist that national bankers and the patent-right owners should be placed on a level with all other citizens, in order that all shall have equal rights before the law, and it is my purpose to impose upon the members of this House the responsibility of showing their hands on this proposition if the committee will permit.

Another feature of the amendment I suggest is one which makes more intelligible the clause of the bill amending the tenth section. It must be admitted that it is either awkwardly drawn or that it does not mean what every member of the committee who has addressed the House claims for it. That section says:

That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act and section 640 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Now, the ordinary understanding of that section would be that only the laws in conflict with this statute and the laws in conflict with section 640 are repealed, while I have no doubt all the members of the committee will admit that this bill intended to repeal not only the laws that are in conflict with its provisions, but that it intended also to repeal the whole of section 640 of the statute, and was not intended to repeal any law which is in conflict with it. That portion of the bill which is termed the corporation clause meets with my hearty approval. As it has been so ably discussed pro and con, I will not consume the time of the House in expressing my views in regard to it, but will at once call your attention to section 2 of the bill before us, which relates to the removal of causes from the State into the Federal courts. This is said to be a step in the direction of the reform demanded by the people, who have bitterly complained of the abuse made of it by corporations when sued in the State courts, but it is only a step in that direction. It will, in my judgment, be of but little practical value to the people. It will have about the same power to cure the great evil resulting from the laws in regard to removals as a court-plaster would have to stay the flow of the life-tide from a severed artery.

Our friends on the other side need have no hesitation in supporting the bill on that account, for the opinion will soon prevail that it will prove but a rope of sand in restraining corporations from oppressing suitors in the Federal courts. The only substantial relief it accomplishes is to raise the minimum jurisdiction of the courts from the sum of $500 to $2,000. There are but few suits instituted in the Federal courts which have proved an annoyance to the people for a less sum than $2,000. The complaint in my section grows out of litigation with non-residents, with insurance companies and other corporations which generally involve sums ranging above $2,000 and where the Federal courts have appointed receivers for insolvent railroad companies. Comparatively speaking, but a small proportion of insurers obtain policies on life or homes for less than $2,000. Therefore even if this law should go into effect it will not afford relief to the mass of cases which are now taken into the Federal courts by these corporations. That feature of the bill which limits the right of removal to the defendants is not a matter of so much practical importance to the people as we may at first blush imagine, for the reason that suits may be instituted by foreign corporations and non-residents in the Federal courts, and therefore they seldom have a reason for bringing their suits in the State courts. What the people are most interested in is a law which deprives the defendant as well as the plaintiff of the privilege of transferring the cause from the State into the Federal court. But, for reasons which have been often assigned, the amendment establishes a sound principle, and therefore should be adopted.

I shall not go into a rehearsal of the burdens, expenses, and difficulties of litigation in the Federal courts, and of the greater convenience and economy on the part of the resident suitor of litigating in the home or State courts. I have done this sufficiently in speeches I have heretofore delivered in this House, and other gentlemen who have occupied the attention of the House in discussing this bill have more ably and clearly set this forth than I am capable of doing at this time. All the gentlemen on this side of the House who have engaged in the discussion of this bill admit that it falls short of what is desirable, and thereby they leave open the way and show the necessity for the other bill now pending in the Committee of the Whole and which provides an effectual and complete remedy for these evils by repealing the law authorizing the removal of causes from the State to the Federal courts except where a Federal question is involved.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will my colleague permit me to ask him what legislative relief his bill proposes that is not embraced in the bill before the House?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Before the attention of my colleague was attracted to my remarks I had pointed out the fact that the bill now pending before the House relates almost exclusively to the original jurisdiction of the Federal courts, whereas the bill that is now in Committee of the Whole relates exclusively to the removal of causes from the State into Federal courts. This bill does not trench upon that bill to any serious extent. The main thing accomplished by that bill in that direction is to raise the jurisdiction of Federal courts from $500 to $2,000, as I have already explained.

Mr. CULBERSON. Do I understand the gentleman to state that the bill now pending before the House does not provide for a change in existing law in relation to the removal of causes from the State to the Federal courts in certain cases?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Oh, no. If my friend from Texas had listened to me he would have seen I had shown exactly where the bill changes the law in that regard. What I have been arguing is that this bill, so far as it relates to the removal of causes from the State courts, furnishes but a very small degree of reform; I am, however, advocating and showing the necessity for the more radical measure that will give the full measure of relief demanded by the people and which will soon engage our attention.

But, sir, it is perhaps well that the Judiciary Committee has incorporated this infinitesimal or homeopathic dose of reform in this regard in the bill before us, for it has served the purpose of fastening the attention of the House and the country upon the importance and necessity of the more radical measure to which I have referred. I have heard it said by one or two around us that owing to the temper of this House we shall not be able to accomplish the full measure of relief so earnestly desired by the people. Upon what ground such an opinion is formed I am unable to conceive. The only temper which has been exhibited in this Congress against a more radical measure was that of the gentleman from Maine and others on the opposite side of this Chamber when they filibustered in the extra session against the bill in the Committee of the Whole.

But I would remind my friends that that measure is now in the Committee of the Whole, where filibustering is unavailing, and I would further remind them that this is a democratic House, and that they should not judge of its temper by the will of the gentleman from Maine, or any of the leaders of the opposition, for, be it said to the credit of the democratic members on this floor, they stood faithfully and solidly to the support of the bill during the whole of the time which the opposition wasted in filibustering against it. And I have faith enough in the loyalty of the majority to true democratic principles and to the best interests of the people to believe that we may rely upon their courage and determination to secure the passage of that bill when it is reached for consideration.

Mr. Speaker, it may be that the gentleman from Maine has a cause to feel contempt for the judiciary of his State. Perhaps there are others in this House who, if they lived in Maine, might share in his contempt for some of the acts of the State tribunals of Maine, but, sir, men educated in the school of Jeffersonian democracy cherish and defend the dignity, independence, and efficiency of the State judiciary as the shield of the rights and liberties of the citizen. They view with alarm the encroachment of the Federal judicial power upon the rightful domain of the State judiciary.

I would further remind my faint-hearted friends of this side that they should not surrender the struggle for reform because its enemies have vauntingly thrown down the gage of battle. In such a contest the duty of a true man, of a true democrat, and of a true representative is to defy the opposition and meet it with resolution and courage. Some of the gentlemen upon the other side complain that the people of the West are tired of the pressure of Federal judicial power. Why is it so? Any one who has had experience in these courts in the West can easily answer that it is because when resident litigants meet a corporation as an antagonist there they have too often found to their sorrow that the attainment of justice has been very difficult and expensive.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will my colleague permit me to interrupt him again?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. While I agree with my colleague in the general tenor of his remarks, I wish to say that no gentleman in the State of Illinois occupies a higher position than the judge of the southern district of that State, Judge Treat, and that he has always in all his decisions recognized and observed the true line of distinction between the State and Federal power, and has always respected it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have said nothing personally to the detriment of those who occupy positions on the Federal bench, and will in the main agree with him in what he says of Judge Treat. I have simply registered here my protest against the accusation which came from the other side of this House that it was unsafe for a creditor to trust his case in the State courts, implying that the State courts lacked the capacity and the integrity to see that justice was done there. And I want for one to say that notwithstanding my respect is as high as that of my colleague for Judge Treat and some other individual members of the Federal courts, yet I wish it known here and now that the members of the State courts of Illinois are the peers of the Federal judiciary in all the qualifications for a just and efficient dispensation of justice.

My colleague from Illinois [Mr. BARBER] has come to the front as a champion of the Federal courts and joined his voice with those who distrust the integrity and ability of the State courts, and he prophesies direful disaster to the West and South if we do not permit the money-lenders of the East to sue in the Federal courts. When it is remembered that he represents a district which is entirely embraced in the county of Cook, and almost if not entirely within the limits of the city of Chicago, where a Federal court is established, it will be easily seen that it is a question, so far as convenience is concerned, of far less importance to the litigants in his district than to those constituencies in Illinois which are remote from the locations of the Federal courts, as for instance in my own district, where we are required to travel two hundred miles or more, and dance attendance upon the slow progress of judicial procedure in the Federal courts. But why does my colleague cast such a reproach upon the judicial tribunals of his own State? Are they inferior in integrity or in ability to the Federal judiciary?

Sir, I do not fear to challenge comparison of the integrity and capacity of the judges on the State bench of Illinois with that of the Federal judges holding courts in the State which I in part have the honor to represent. Yea, sir; I am willing that a comparison shall be made between the supreme bench of Illinois and the Federal Supreme Bench. If you will run the history of the judiciary of Illinois back to its organization, covering a period of sixty years, no Illinoisan need fear the result. It is with pride that I defy you to point to a single scandal which has attached to its fair fame. No one dare assert that it was ever packed to reverse a former decision, or that in the adjudication of any question it was ever governed by political bias. Illinois in all her political phases has ever kept its judiciary free from the mire of partisan prejudices. During the war period, when party feeling ran higher than ever before in this country, notwithstanding the State at times recorded a republican majority of 50,000, yet, sir, the people retained on its supreme bench a court composed wholly of democrats. This I say to the credit of many republicans of Illinois, because justice and truth demand it at my hands.

It is well known in our State that even when candidates for the bench have been nominated by the republican party in strong republican districts, if his opponent was esteemed to be better qualified for the bench the people have in most instances elected the man best fitted, and the same is true of largely democratic districts. In other words, an election, in Illinois, of a judicial officer is not dependent altogether upon the political party which makes the nomination. Of course in a district where the candidates for the judiciary are regarded as of equal fitness for the position the dominant party will place in position the one who holds to its organization.

I feel warranted, therefore, in saying that the judicial tribunal of my State is purer in a political sense than the Federal judicial tribunals, for the Federal judges are always selected by partisan administrations, which in these latter days have never been known to disregard the political qualifications of the candidate for the bench.

Let me repeat to my friend from Illinois that he must admit that those who occupy positions on the circuit and supreme bench of that State are in private character, in judicial acumen and learning, the peers of those who hold positions on the Federal bench in that State. Look at your own county of Cook. Is not McAllister the equal, in all that becomes a man and judge, of Blodgett? Then, why, I ask, does my colleague with so much warmth declaim here that it is a dangerous proposition to compel a non-resident creditor to sue on a promissory note before Judge McAllister instead of Judge Blodgett? Has justice fled from the breasts of State judges and taken shelter in the bosoms of Federal judges?

A stranger would imagine from the argument of my colleague that the men of the South and West are the mere bond-slaves of eastern capitalists, and that when his fellow-slaves of the West attempt to assert their freedom and manhood he would say "Down on your knees before your lords and masters, ye miserable menials." He would say to the farmers in the West, "Thank your God that you are permitted to plow even on your own land for tribute to the Caesars of Wall street." To the Chicago merchant he would say, "Off with your hat in the presence of the eastern creditor, and yield obedience to all his commands." To the State judges he would say, "Prostrate yourselves in the dust when you hear the tread of the United States marshal."

What does all this mean? It is easily to be seen that it means centralization of power in the Federal Government. It means a distrust of the capacity of the people for self-government and a destruction of the Republic as fashioned by our fathers. It means a strong government. It means an obliteration of State lines and the degradation of the State judiciary. But, sir, are the people of Illinois as cringing and poverty-stricken as the logic of his argument would have you believe? If that gentleman had carefully read the recent article of that able statistician, R. P. Porter, which has recently appeared in one of his home papers, he would have found that far from the Northwest being a pensioner on the bounty of the East she is not only the agricultural bonanza of the world, but is rapidly becoming the seat of manufactures, wealth, and population in this country. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] has revealed to us enough of the secrets of his committee to acquaint us with sentiments from a quarter which will occasion surprise. He says:

While I would not divulge the secrets of the consultation of the committee before, yet I feel that I may say to this House that in the discussions and testimony before us in regard to the establishment of a circuit court in a certain State in this Union it appeared that the people wanted the United States court there because they had more confidence in it than they had in their State courts. And I say further, so that the credit may go where it is due, that this was in one of the Southern States of this Union.

Thank God, sir, no such humiliating confession has emanated from a Western State. If those who fill the places once occupied by Madison, Randolph, Calhoun, and Clay permit such a statement to go forth unchallenged, I am, as an Illinoisan, content to permit the State referred to to enjoy all the credit accorded to it by the member from the State of Massachusetts. If this be true, and if that Southern State should in that regard suffer in the good opinion of any of its sister States of the South or West, its people may perhaps console themselves with the consciousness of having reached a condition which secures the commendation of republicans in the State of Massachusetts, which was never before accomplished by any State in the South, except when it was under carpet-bag rule. But let me warn those of that State that they will not escape the unfavorable judgment of those who cherish the Government as it was framed by our fathers, which judgment will be that the people of no State have ever before given stronger evidence of their incapacity for home rule or furnished a better argument against the theories of Jefferson, Madison, and Douglas, and those who formed our national Constitution, nor contributed more to strengthen the dogmas of the old federalists and modern centralizationists. But I will not believe such sentiments prevail with the majority in any Southern State until I am convinced that the liberty-loving character of those of that section has undergone a marvelous change since the early days of the Republic.

As I have already intimated, this question brings up the old issue which has ever been the true line of demarkation between the democratic party and its opponents—the question of home rule and of centralization; the question of the government of the many as against the rule of the few; the question which divided Jefferson and Hamilton. The long life of the democratic party is mainly due to the position which it has ever occupied upon that great question. In my judgment it has been enabled by its fealty to the true Jeffersonian principle on this question to survive so many disastrous defeats, and it will by means of its adhesion to this position live as long in the future as it furnishes brave and true men to lead in the battle for the freedom and happiness of the people.

It is strange that while all Europe is now advancing toward constitutional liberty there is a strong party in this country seeking by desperate means, to turn this home of freedom back toward centralization and despotism. While the wires down under the sea bring us tidings that the Czar of Russia, the most absolute of the monarchies of the Old World, contemplates calling the notables of his empire together for the purpose of framing a constitutional form of government we find on this floor successors to John Hancock and Samuel Adams advocating a doctrine which is destructive of our constitutional form of government. When the old federal party, the progenitor of the present republican party, first advocated a strong centralized government, we had strong, brave, and true men, like Jefferson and Madison, who, by the help of the people, were able to crush it. Would to God we had such men in our midst to-day, in place of some of the timid time-servers who have neither the courage nor the inclination to denounce in fitting terms this treason against the Constitution and the rights of the people of the States! We see the Federal judiciary stealthily marching upon the rights of the States, aiming a deadly blow at the Republic, and instead of arresting its progress we find men cringing before it and talking about the temper of the opposition party being such that no attempt should be made to resist by legislation the impending disaster. Was this the language of Jefferson when he saw at its commencement the stream which has since swollen into such a volume as threatens to engulf the Constitution? No, sir. Let me read to those who lack courage the utterances of that fearless apostle of liberty. He said in 1821:

It has long, however, been my opinion, and I have never shrunk from its expression, * * * that the germ of dissolution of our Federal Government is in the constitution of the Federal judiciary, an irresponsible body, (for impeachment is scarcely a scare-crow,) working like gravity by night and by day, gaining a little to-day and a little to-morrow, and advancing its noiseless step like a thief over the field of jurisdiction, until all shall be usurped from the States and the government of all be consolidated into one.

And again in 1822:

The foundations are already deeply laid by their decisions for the annihilation of constitutional State rights and the removal of every check, every counterpoise to the ingulfing power of which themselves are to make a sovereign part.

What the people demand is measures of the kind I have been advocating here, and they also need men on this floor who have the nerve and integrity to stand up and turn back the tide of centralization which threatens to swamp the Republic, men who will combat it as well when confronting it openly in the form of executive usurpation, as in the more insidious and therefore the more dangerous form of judicial construction.

In conclusion let me say that so far as this bill relates to the original jurisdiction of the Federal courts and the restrictions upon corporations, I regard it as being well prepared, and it will prove of great value to the public; but I trust the amendment which I offer will be adopted, for it will perfect and complete the bill in that regard. So far as it relates to the removal of causes from the State courts, in all that it falls short the bill now pending in the Committee of the Whole, repealing the law authorizing the removal of causes, will cure, and therefore I hope that all who favor curtailing the jurisdiction of the Federal judiciary will give it their cordial support.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, [Mr. FINLEY.] The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask the Clerk to read an amendment which I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 10 so that it will read:

"That section 640 and the ninth, tenth, and eleventh clauses of section 629 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. CULBERSON. I now call for the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say to the gentleman who makes that motion, [Mr. CULBERSON,] that it was understood that after the morning hour of to-day the session would be devoted to eulogies upon the late Senator from Alabama. The House is now, especially this side of it, quite thin, and I do not think it would be right to bring us to a vote this morning on this bill and amendments. The gentleman himself certainly does not want to take us by surprise, and it was generally understood that the debate would occupy the morning hour and after that the eulogies would follow.

Mr. KNOTT. Let the previous question be sustained, so that this bill may be taken out of the morning hour, and then the matter can go over.

Mr. GARFIELD. That may be all right; but I would inquire whether the views of the minority of the committee have been properly represented by amendments offered by them?

Mr. KNOTT. I understood that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] who has charge of this bill will yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON,] to offer some amendments.

Mr. CULBERSON. I propose to do that.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then there will be no objection, I suppose, to ordering the previous question.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have been instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to allow the minority of the committee to submit any amendments they may see proper. I propose to call the previous question, but before doing so I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] to submit such amendments as he may desire on behalf of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is all right, and the previous question can then be called on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to state that I do not yield to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the gentleman propose to cut off all amendments except those that may be offered by members of the Committee on the Judiciary? If so, I shall oppose the previous question.

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand from the gentleman who has charge of this bill that the debate upon it has ceased?

Mr. CULBERSON. I propose now to call the previous question.

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman propose to press this bill to a vote to-day?

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not.

Mr. WHITE. Then I will ask the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND,] who seems to have charge of a bill kindred to this, reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, if it is intended to press that bill before the House this session?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is. I propose, just as soon as I can do so, to go into Committee of the Whole on that bill.

Mr. WHITE. They are kindred measures, and it seems to me that the vote on this bill should be postponed until both bills can be considered together.

Mr. BARBER. I would like to ask my colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois] a question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will answer it if I have time.

Mr. BARBER. I understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to say in the outset of this debate that there is no politics in this bill. I understood my colleague from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to say that this bill involves the old question of State rights on the one hand and centralization on the other. Now, how can those two statements be reconciled?

Mr. KNOTT. Is debate in order?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I should like to answer the question of my colleague, [Mr. BARBER.]

Mr. KNOTT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] yield for a question?

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. BAKER. Then I trust the previous question will be voted down.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] to submit certain amendments on behalf of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understood the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. KNOTT] to say that if the demand for the previous question shall be now sustained, the vote upon the bill and amendments will not be taken this morning.

Mr. KNOTT. I suggested that by way of a compromise, in order that the bill might be taken out of the morning hour.

Mr. ROBINSON. I send up to the Clerk's desk the amendments which I desire to offer on behalf of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Clerk read the amendments as follows:

First. Strike out the sum "$2,000" wherever it occurs in the bill and insert "$500."

Second. In line 132, after the word "except," insert the words "in cases arising under the patent or copyright laws and;" so that it will read "except in cases arising under the patent or copyright laws and in like cases in which said courts are authorized by this act to take original cognizance of suits between citizens in the same State."

Third. Strike out all from line 126 to line 140, both inclusive.

Fourth. At the end of the bill add the following:

Provided, That this act shall not affect the jurisdiction over or disposition of any suit removed from the court of any State, or any suit commenced in any court of the United States before the passage hereof.

Mr. CULBERSON. If there be no other amendments to be proposed by the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If this demand for the previous question shall be sustained, will it cut off all other amendments except those moved by members of the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. Then I hope it will be voted down.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. CULBERSON for the previous question, and it was seconded; and the main question was then ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CASWELL.]

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration should have our most careful attention. It proposes no change in the criminal but a radical change in the civil jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States. Except by the amendment of 1875 no step so important as this has taken place since the passage of the judiciary act of 1789. I cannot in the brief time allotted me enter upon a full discussion of those changes, but must content myself with little more than a reference thereto.

The Constitution delegates to Congress all judicial authority not vested by it in the Supreme Court. Article 3, section 1, provides:

[The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.]

The circuit courts are unknown to the Constitution. They are the creatures of statute. They are inferior tribunals, with limited jurisdiction, having such authority only as Congress may confer. This jurisdiction may be restricted or enlarged from time to time, as Congress shall deem proper.

From the organization of these courts down to the year 1875 a very large class of cases, involving commercial paper, contracts, and obligations, was withheld from them. These obligations were executed between citizens of the same State, domestic and local in their character. Unless the assignor could sue, the assignee could not. All such contracts and controversies were triable only in the State courts. Congress withheld them from the Federal courts, notwithstanding the owners resided in other States and the controversy would be between "citizens of different States." The authority to do this is well settled by the Supreme Court in several cases, which I need not cite. The long period of time in which these causes were excluded from the circuit courts, as well as the unbroken line of decisions sustaining Congress in its action, is a most excellent reason for a continuation of the restriction. But in 1875 the judiciary act of 1789 was so amended as to extend to the circuit courts causes between citizens of different States, whether the assignor could sue or not. This turned into the Federal courts a large number of causes which rightfully belonged to State tribunals.

The transfer of claims to citizens of other States is often made for the purpose of coercing parties to a settlement rather than enter upon an expensive litigation. This bill will restore the law as it existed before its modification, and remand these cases to the courts in which they belong. Up to the present time no common-law action could be brought in the circuit courts unless the claim exceeded $500. The bill before the House extends this limitation to $2,000. In my judgment this, as well as the clause which restores to the State courts the other class of cases to which I have referred, is wise and for the best interests of the country. In 1789, when the sum of $500 was fixed as a limit, the business of the country, as well as the cases in court, was very limited. That sum then represented a greater amount of property than $2,000 do at the present time. The number of cases in court was very small; now they are very large.

If citizens of the same State make contracts which can be litigated between the makers only in the State courts, there exists no reason why the place of trial should be changed because foreign parties subsequently become interested. The forum for their litigation and trial is fixed when the contract is executed, and it is no hardship to whomsoever may become the owner if the trial of a controversy which may arise out of the transaction be confined to the local courts.

If this bill stopped here it would meet my hearty approval. But it goes further. Although the amendments I have referred to will eliminate from the Federal courts nearly one-half their present business, the bill proposes to close the door to all corporations in controversies which may arise in actions at the common law or in equity. I have no doubt of the power of Congress to do this.

If this bill becomes a law it will work a repeal of a part of the judiciary act of 1789. If Congress has the power to confer it may withdraw jurisdiction. If it be necessary, in the first instance, to confer jurisdiction upon the court, no one can doubt the power of Congress to take it away. It has been urged upon this floor by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] that such discrimination would be in violation of the Constitution. He brings to his aid much ability, as well as some expressions of the judicial mind. But they are expressions merely, not decisions. The Constitution does not create the circuit court as it does the Supreme, and there is no implied authority in that instrument which would confer rights upon any person or corporation in these courts other than those prescribed by Congress. If, indeed, the Constitution recognized corporations as citizens of the United States, and conferred upon them such rights as belong to the citizen, a different case would be presented. If that were true the gentleman might find some warrant for his position; but these courts spring from Congress alone, and are by statute clothed with all the power it exercises.

It is true the Supreme Court has held that corporations are so far clothed with citizenship as to be able within the meaning of the judiciary act to bring suit in the circuit courts. But such decisions are based upon the presumption that the individuals composing the corporation are natural citizens of the State in which it is created, and an allegation to that effect is essential in the pleadings to confer jurisdiction. In other words, the courts hold that a company of citizens may sue in their collective or corporate capacity the same as they might do as individuals. It is, however, entirely competent for Congress to forbid it, and leave them to the State courts. Corporations are also but creatures of law. They have no existence, no power or capacity without or independent of legislative enactments.

The Supreme Court has also held that they are not citizens within the ordinary meaning of that term as used in the Constitution, and consequently have not the rights of a natural citizen. They may be excluded from the exercise of their franchises in other States and be limited for a field of operations to the State in which they are created. The comity of States will not even give them recognition against the legislative will. The very objects of their organization in one State may be mischievous to the welfare of all the others, and the States may by legislative enactments exclude them altogether.

In this I am sustained by the leading case of Paul vs. Virginia, (8 Wall., 163.) The court in that case reaffirmed the doctrine in La Fayette Insurance Company vs. French, (18 How., 407.) I have no doubt, therefore, that the provisions of the bill are entirely within the Constitution. Reference has been made to the case of Home Insurance Company vs. Morse, which arose in the State of Wisconsin. The Legislature of that State attempted to restrict the jurisdiction of the Federal court, or rather compel the insurance company to stipulate away a right guaranteed to it by an act of Congress. This clearly could not be done. The company, like an individual, could not be bound by an agreement to waive the privileges given to it by law. The question here presented was not involved in that case in the least degree. But I am confronted with a question of policy as well as of comity between the States. The citizens of each State are permitted to sue in the Federal courts of every other State. Our fathers deemed this so essential as to give it place in the Constitution. At the time of the adoption of that instrument corporations were scarcely known or recognized, and being principally of State creation no provision was made in their interests.

The courts should administer the law without reference to parties. Whoever can appear in court should receive such justice as will make no distinction in the title of a cause or the capacity of litigants, whether they appear as individuals or as corporations. The stockholders are the parties interested. The capacity in which they sue should not be material. Distinctions of this character should never be the subject of judicial inquiry, nor find a place upon our statute-books. It is true a non-resident has a choice between the State and Federal courts, while this privilege is not enjoyed by his adversary. But it is also true that in either court the latter has a jury of his locality, and the advantage, if any, is overcome. There is no reason why a private bank in the city of New York should be admitted to sue in the United States courts in Wisconsin, while a savings-bank of the same city must be excluded. Is there any sound reason to justify the distinction? The laws are made for all—the rich and the poor should meet in court upon a level. The law should be administered to them alike. Justice is blind and should know no parties. Injustice may be done in some cases. It is better however that a few should suffer than to incorporate into our statutes so invidious a distinction.

The judiciary system should be above reproach. The equality of litigants should be preserved. In civil actions capital alone is involved. It is immaterial who the parties are that possess that capital; whether they be individuals or corporations.

Reference has been made to some legislation in the Western States as tending to defeat justice. Acts of this nature may have crept into the statutes of these States in some instances, but they were the necessities of the hour, enacted as a shield to protect the people against the oppressive demands of capitalists, who were exacting dollars for cents. But in every instance the statutes have been repealed, or overturned by the courts, and to-day their sense of honor and desire to meet their obligations is not excelled in any of the States of this Union. Nor exists there a people who yield a better return for the capital which they employ, whether it be owned in the East or in the West. A growing prosperity now enables them to discharge these obligations with interest. Our State courts are gaining a reputation which may well be envied, and which will ere long place the empire States in the first ranks. If this provision be stricken out I shall hail the passage of the bill as a step in the right direction. If it be retained, I shall not deem it my duty to oppose its passage, for the good which will flow from the other sections will more than compensate for the mischief which will be created.

Mr. CULBERSON. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] to offer an amendment in behalf of the minority of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "them," in line 29, page 2, insert the following:
And if in any suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity the plaintiffs or petitioners shall recover less than $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, the defendants shall recover from the plaintiffs or petitioners their costs and charges.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that amendment in order now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the amendment as being read for information. The previous question has been ordered on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] that it was the understanding that the minority of the committee should offer such amendments as they saw proper.

Mr. KEIFER. But it is too late to offer the amendment after the previous question has begun to operate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I consent to allow the amendment now.

Mr. KEIFER. I submit that it is out of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] to discuss the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I submit that the amendment is not now in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered on the bill and pending amendments. The Chair would hold that that vote cuts off all subsequent amendments unless they be offered by unanimous consent.

Mr. KEIFER. I object to this amendment.

Mr. BAKER. I understand that the gentleman from Texas, in making his demand for the previous question, coupled with it a statement that the minority should have the right to offer whatever amendments they desired to offer. That was the understanding of the minority of the committee. Now, one member of that minority has offered an amendment in pursuance of that reservation of right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By a vote of the House the previous question was ordered on the bill and pending amendments; and whatever the gentleman from Texas may have said, the Chair can only enforce the order of the House.

Mr. BAKER. I inquire whether or not the fact is not as I have stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. According to the understanding of the Chair the gentleman from Texas stated that if the minority had no further amendments to offer he would demand the previous question on the bill and pending amendments. The Chair then submitted the motion, and the previous question was ordered by the House. That cuts off all subsequent amendments, unless by unanimous consent; and objection is made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.]

Mr. BAKER. The point I made was this: that when the gentleman from Texas demanded the previous question he did so with the statement that the right was reserved to the minority to offer such amendments as they might choose to offer. It was with that understanding that the House seconded the demand for the previous question. I appeal to the gentleman from Texas to say whether that was not the form in which the matter occurred.

Mr. KEIFER. I feel bound to object in this case, because we have not an opportunity to perfect this important amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules that the amendment is not before the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Lest I may appear indifferent to my own amendment, I desire to say that I approve the principle embraced in the amendment; and at the request of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] with permission as I supposed of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Texas, I offered the amendment in good faith. I should be very glad to have it regarded as pending.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he had the amendment in his possession until after the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] had been refused the opportunity to offer it.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I cannot speak as to the fact of the gentleman from Indiana having been refused the opportunity to offer the amendment, but it was handed to me only a few moments before I offered it.

Mr. ROBINSON. This is precisely the same amendment that the gentleman from Indiana tried to offer in his own right here, and permission to do so was refused. Now the amendment has been passed to a member of the committee after the previous question has been ordered on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. BAKER. I appeal to the gentleman from Texas to yield to me for a few moments. I want to make a statement.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. BAKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is true that I tried to get this amendment in some days ago; I gave notice to the House that I proposed to offer such an amendment; and I wish to say that in my belief there is no proposition in connection with the whole subject of remodeling the jurisdiction of the Federal courts more important than that embodied in this amendment. Unless such a provision be adopted it will still be in the power of the Federal courts to take jurisdiction of claims of less than $500, although their jurisdiction is limited to amounts of $500 and more. All that is necessary in order that a Federal court shall get jurisdiction of a case is that the party who sues shall allege in his complaint or declaration that his cause of action amounts to $500 or more; this will confer jurisdiction on the Federal court. If this bill should pass the amount necessary to confer jurisdiction would be increased to $2,000. Then all that the party would have to do would be to allege in his declaration that his cause of action amounted to $2,000. If upon prosecuting the cause to judgment he should recover less than $2,000 or less than $100, he would still have the right to recover that judgment. I propose by this amendment to put a penalty upon a man who thus goes into the Federal court without having a case which really entitles him to sue there—the penalty of requiring him to pay the costs of the suit—allowing him to recover his judgment but applying to him the same rule which is to-day applied to parties in the State courts.

Where parties sue in a State court of general jurisdiction for causes of action that should have been prosecuted in another court, and fail to recover a certain sum of money, they are required to pay the costs.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, there is a provision which authorizes the Federal judges to tax the costs against the plaintiff in such cases; but legislation has been made, and it is applied in all the Federal courts, as will be found by reference to elementary books and the decisions of courts on that subject. The rule is, unless the cause of action is frivolous the party will be entitled to recover not only his judgment, but the costs, and if he has any cause of action at all the rule is his cause is not frivolous.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy all that time, and I would not say a word, but I understand my point of order to have been sustained. The gentleman seems to be anxious his amendment should be admitted, but as it is on my objection it is kept out I desire to offer a word of criticism.

I think the proposed amendment has not been well digested, and as we have not an opportunity of considering it at this stage of this bill we ought to exclude it altogether.

In the first place, sir, it requires a recovery before you can carry costs greater in amount than the jurisdiction given to the United States courts by the bill. It may be possible where a man comes into court on a promissory note of $1,500, which has $500 of interest accumulated on it, making the amount of the claim $2,000—it may be you may come into the court with that claim, and when you have recovered and the court has applied the jurisdiction to it you will have to pay the defendant's costs, as I understand the bill—as you would under this proposed amendment.

Mr. BAKER. One word. It follows precisely the phraseology of the jurisdiction of the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. I have not examined it, but I understand from the gentleman having it in charge that the jurisdiction depends on the amount of recovery.

Mr. BAKER. Two thousand dollars, exclusive of interest.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Speaker, costs and interest are to be excluded in determining the question. The rule is, in all the States where there is a limitation of the right to recover costs, to require the defendant to pay his own costs and the plaintiff his own costs in such cases. But here the proposed amendment is to require a plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs when the defendant himself is in the wrong in not paying his debts or in making his defense.

But still there is another objection to this. There are many cases where the amount involved might be many thousands of dollars where the final recovery might be less than $2,000 because of counter claims, or, what is still worse, set-offs, which come in on assigned claims to defendant unknown to the plaintiff when he comes into that jurisdiction. In fact, he might have a case where there were $50,000 involved; but when you come to strike a balance there might be but $2,000 difference unclaimed; and they say, after you have gone through all that litigation, if the plaintiff does not recover beyond $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, then he must pay the defendant's costs. I assert here there is hardly a State in this Union which has any law that requires the plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs where there is a recovery against the defendant. There are many States where the rule is, if the plaintiff does not recover beyond a certain sum in a certain class of cases, the plaintiff then must pay his own costs, but this carries the rule entirely outside, and I submit it ought not to be done.

Mr. CULBERSON. I learn there was an understanding that no vote should be taken on these amendments to-day; and, if that be so, I now ask by unanimous consent the morning hour may be considered as having expired.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and this subject goes over until the next morning hour.

DEATH OF HON. GEORGE S. HOUSTON.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolutions from the Senate on the death of the late Hon. GEORGE S. HOUSTON be taken from the Speaker's table and read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resolutions from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN SENATE UNITED STATES.
February 26, 1880.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with regret of the death of Hon. GEORGE S. HOUSTON, a Senator from the State of Alabama, and extends to the family of the deceased Senator and to the people of Alabama sincere condolence in their bereavement.

II. That the long public service of GEORGE S. HOUSTON has been marked by fidelity to his convictions of duty, by industry and patience in his labors for the public welfare, by distinguished ability in the legislative councils of the United States, and by devoted and wise service to Alabama as governor of that State.

III. That the Secretary of the Senate transmit to the family of the deceased, and to the governor of Alabama, a copy of these resolutions, with the action of the Senate thereon.

Mr. FORNEY. I offer the following resolutions, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has received with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. GEORGE S. HOUSTON, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended to allow suitable tributes to be paid to his many virtues; and, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator, the House, at the conclusion of said tributes, shall adjourn.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, Alabama asks this House to pause for the present in its legislative labors, and unite with her in paying a suitable tribute of respect to the memory of her deceased Senator, Hon. GEORGE S. HOUSTON, who died at his home in Athens on the 31st of December last, beloved, honored, and esteemed by the citizens of his State. The announcement of his death was a shock to the people, who had so recently, through their representatives, conferred upon him the highest position within their gift. He lived to a ripe old age; he had reached his three score and ten years.

Senator HOUSTON was born in Williamson County, in the State of Tennessee. Although not a native of Alabama, yet he had resided within her borders full sixty years, from the date of her admission into the Union as a State. He selected for his profession the law. Soon after he was admitted to the bar, on account of his studious habits, close attention to business, and exemplary conduct, the people of Lauderdale County elected him to the Legislature. Rising rapidly in his profession, in 1837 he was elected solicitor of the circuit in which he resided. While in that position he made great reputation as a lawyer of ability and evinced, at that early period of his career, that unimpeachable integrity, earnest devotion to duty, and sacred regard for the inviolability of public trust that governed him in his future political life and made him so conspicuous among his fellow-citizens. So well had he discharged the duties of his office, so satisfactory his conduct, at the close of his term as solicitor the people elected him a member of the Twenty-seventh Congress. He took his seat in this House in the year 1841, and was successively re-elected a member, frequently without opposition, until 1861, except to the Thirty-first Congress, when he declined a re-election.

I will not stop to speak of the great services rendered his State or the country during the eighteen years he sat as a member upon this floor. His record speaks for itself. While a member of this body he occupied the most important positions as chairman of prominent committees. During his long service as a member of Congress he stood high in the esteem of the great and good men with whom he was associated in that day and time. He was one of the color-guard of the Treasury; his record shows with what watchful care he guarded it. He was an able and faithful public servant; a true patriot, his patriotism was not bounded by State lines, but embraced his entire country. Integrity was the granite base upon which he reared the superstructure of his political life; that sterling integrity placed him beyond the reach of temptation. At the close of his long public service no blot, no stain tarnished his bright escutcheon. No bribe ever polluted his fingers or left a dark spot in his hands. At all times with him "a good name was rather to be chosen than great riches, a loving favor than silver and gold."

He was a popular and successful man. To his great popularity and success in life he was indebted to his native talent, his known integrity, his purity, honesty, and to his knowledge of human nature. He studied the people more and knew them better than he did books. He was a good judge of the popular feeling and popular demand. He was truly the friend of the people, he consulted their wishes, conditions, and interest. He honestly desired their happiness and welfare, and possessed the happy faculty of making them believe it. The people believed he was honest and true; they knew he was capable and faithful, and were ever ready to place him in power. He was never defeated before the people for an office. As a debater he had few superiors upon the stump. He was powerful in a political campaign. He could attract the attention of the masses and hold it with interest to the close of his address. He was not a man of brilliant or showy talent, nor what the world calls a genius. He never originated new departures in politics, but clung with tenacity to the old landmarks established by the fathers. Neither did he dazzle the country with his eloquence or glowing declamation. Nor was he an impassioned orator, or one that charmed for the moment. He appealed to the judgment, not to the passions. In his speeches to the people his end and aim was to be understood, to carry conviction to the minds of his hearers, to make an impression which would last. He would never drop the iron-wrought link in his chain of argument to supply it with the silvery net-work of poesy. He was what might be called an instructive and convincing speaker—one that carried his point.

The crowning acts of his life, those that endeared him most to the people of his State, were the services rendered them while governor of Alabama. His political friends, unsolicited by him, in the year

1874 nominated him as their standard-bearer for governor. The people elected him by a decided majority. When he took control of the helm of state as governor of Alabama there was no money in the treasury, and the great problem then to be solved was the debt question—the debt which had been illegally contracted during the days of reconstruction, while Alabama was under the dominion of a class of men who had flocked, like birds of prey, within her borders to feed and gorge upon the little that the war had left her people; men whose interests were not identified with the best interest of the State, whose end and aim were personal aggrandizement. During those days extravagance and corruption had held full sway; an immense debt had been wrongfully fastened upon the State. He entered upon the discharge of his duties as governor with a determination to bring relief to his suffering people. He was equal to the great emergency. Economy in all matters of state became his watchword. Under his administration the people soon began to have faith in their ultimate redemption, hope was stimulated and confidence inspired. At the close of his first term the people almost with one acclaim said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," and re-elected him by an immense majority. While governor the State commissioned him and two others of her citizens alike distinguished for their ability, honesty, and probity, (Hon. T. B. Bethea and General L. W. Lawler,) with power to adjust and settle the State's indebtedness. The result of the labors of the commission met with the cordial approval of the people. The debt was adjusted honorably to the State and satisfactory to the creditors. It can be truly said of him that in the many responsible positions which he filled during his forty years' service as a public man he never failed to prove himself equal to the duties devolved upon him and worthy of the confidence and trust reposed in him.

He possessed administrative and executive capacity of no ordinary character. His administration of the affairs of state while governor was such as commanded the esteem and confidence of his political opponents as well as his party friends. As an evidence of the people's high appreciation of his services, the Legislature of his State elected him, at the close of his term as governor, to the Senate of the United States. He took his seat at the commencement of the late extra session. He was not permitted to serve out the term of his election. Death stopped him in his useful career. He died with his harness upon him. He has crossed over the river. His manly and stalwart form lies in the graveyard of the village in which he spent the greater portion of his life. He sleeps in the beautiful valley of the Tennessee, the loveliest portion of Alabama.

No lovelier land the prophet viewed,
When on the sacred mount he stood,
And saw below, transcendent shine,
The streams and groves of Palestine.

There he will rest, his dust mingling with the dust of kindred, friends, and neighbors, until the morn of resurrection, his memory enshrined in the hearts of a grateful people, his name enrolled on the list of Alabama's most illustrious dead, long to be remembered as one who had done his State some service, who died, as he had lived, "an honest man, the noblest work of God."

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I second the resolutions submitted by the gentleman [Mr. FORNEY] from the seventh congressional district of Alabama. There is, perhaps, no one in the present House from whom this tribute to the memory and eminent virtues of the deceased could more appropriately come than from myself. When I took my seat for the first time in this Hall—or rather the old Hall—on the 11th of December, 1843, I found Mr. HOUSTON a member. He was two years ahead of me in this branch of the public service. I left him here when I retired in 1859, though he was on his own voluntary action not a member from 1849 to 1851. When I met him he had during his first Congress acquired considerable reputation as a man of ability, integrity, and business qualifications. He was then on the Committee on Public Lands. Just over to the right of the aisle, as you pass from the Clerk's desk to the outer center door, he sat usually engaged, when nothing interesting was occupying the attention of the House, in reading or answering letters or examining papers. He seemed never to be idle. My seat was far off to the left of the Speaker, near the outer row. I well remember the first impression upon my mind upon seeing him in his place. During our association on this floor I met him often, not only in consultation upon public matters, but socially. I therefore knew him long, well, and intimately.

While he was not a man of genius, so called, yet by industry, application, and assiduity in the discharge of his duties he rose to the leadership of the House—to the chairmanship of the Committee of Ways and Means. We differed in political associations during the whole period of our joint service on this floor; but in the essential principles of the true Jeffersonian democratic creed we never differed. Our friendly relations were never marred, or even jarred, during our long association in the public councils. In personal appearance Mr. HOUSTON presented a fine physique. He was well developed in manly form. His complexion was ruddy. His voice was strong and good, though somewhat sharp and shrill for a man of his size. It was exceedingly penetrating. In debate he was didactic, clear, and perspicuous. In social qualities he was always agreeable and affable, and never austere in manner. He possessed great equanimity of temper. He was always cheerful, and never was seemingly depressed on account of anything. He was ever buoyant in spirit. He had the fortitude of a Christian with the philosophy of a stoic. In oratory he seldom assumed the declamatory style, and hence was never regarded as among the brilliant speakers of the House. His object on all occasions seemed rather to convince the judgment by logical argument than to enliven the imagination by rhetorical displays. He was emphatically a man of work and business. Labor was his pleasure. With him it seemed that—

The bliss of life is the bliss of toil.

Such were a few of the many virtues and excellences of GEORGE S. HOUSTON, by which he rose from the humblest walks of life to the highest honors and distinctions his fellow-citizens could bestow. Sustained by honor, truth, integrity, and uprightness of purpose, with a spotless purity of character during a long and eventful career, he has gone to his grave leaving a name that will perish only with the history of his country.

In referring, Mr. Speaker, to the events of my first acquaintance with my distinguished departed friend and the very memorable occasion in my life when I first took my seat in the Federal House of Representatives, reminiscences of very deep impression are vividly awakened in my mind. It may not be inappropriate in these funeral ceremonies to recall some of these.

It was nearly forty years ago. What changes have taken place since then!—changes especially in the constituent elements and the personnel of this House and the other wing of the Capitol, as well as the controlling actors in every department of our public affairs. In respect to the House of Representatives and its surroundings, to a perfect stranger looking down from one of the galleries everything would seem now quite like it did then. He would see the same conformation of the Hall, the same arrangement of seats, the same or similar aisles. In looking on he would see no change in the proceedings of the body. He would see the same routine of business; the Speaker in the chair now as then; the clerks at the desk now as then; the call of the roll now as then; the Sergeant-at-Arms—the mace, the insignium of his authority—the Doorkeepers and pages now as then. The House itself he would see now composed, as then, of old, middle-aged, and young. The actors in the drama, to one so looking down, would appear to be the same; yet how different are the individual actors in the scenes now from those who figured upon the stage at that time!

When I entered Congress John W. Jones, of Virginia, was Speaker. Then just over there to the left sat the venerable John Quincy Adams, ripened with age and honors, and whose learning in all the departments of science, literature, art, history, and politics was, perhaps, unsurpassed in his day. Around there on the extreme right sat Henry A. Wise, the distinguished member from Accomack, Virginia, then recognized as the most eloquent member of the House. He was soon transferred to a higher public service. A little in his rear and still on the right of the Speaker sat Lucius Q. C. Elmer, an accomplished member from New Jersey, who was then at the head of the Committee of Elections, who is still living, I believe, and enjoying in his old age that otium cum dignitate which is the crowning glory of a well-spent life.

Still further to his right on the same side was the venerable William Wilkins, of Pennsylvania, then at the head of the Committee on the Judiciary. A little in front of him, and near where Mr. FERNANDO WOOD now sits, was James J. McKay, of North Carolina, then head of the Committee of Ways and Means. In all respects he seemed to be formed after the model of his great predecessor, Nathaniel Macon. Then near up in front sat Robert C. Winthrop, one of the acknowledged leaders on the whig side of the Chamber. Just over on the other side of the middle aisle, on the left of the Speaker, sat the brothers, Joseph R. and Jared Ingersoll, from Pennsylvania, both leaders, though on opposite sides in politics, Joseph R. being a whig and Jared a democrat. The latter was then at the head of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Then a little to the rear of these and farther to the left sat Samuel F. Vinton, of Ohio, whose acquaintance with the rules, great prudence, and sound judgment rendered him, perhaps, the most prominent leader on the whig side.

Allow me here to digress to say that the accomplished daughter of this great statesman, Mrs. Madeline Vinton Dahlgren, now lives in the city, and for several years has been the center of a literary society which does honor, not only to the metropolis, but to the whole country, and from whose pen there has been added a very valuable contribution to our political literature by her admirable translation from the French of Adolphe De Chambrun's treatise on the "Executive power of the United States."

Just to the right of Mr. Vinton and a little farther to the left of the Speaker sat another whig leader. This was Garrett Davis, of Kentucky, ever active, watchful, and vigilant.

The head of the Committee on Commerce at that time was Isaac E. Holmes, of Charleston, South Carolina. He was one of the most pleasant and agreeable men of the House. His colleague, Hon. R. Barnwell Rhett, was then already distinguished as one of the most prominent members of the House and statesmen of the country. He was then in the prime of life and full vigor of manhood. He had been here for several years, and, perhaps, at that time was at the height of his distinction. His seat was just there near the front.

Among the whig leaders in that Congress two others must be mentioned. One was Kenneth Rayner, of North Carolina, who is at present Solicitor of the Treasury; and the other was John P. Kennedy, of Maryland, the biographer of Wirt. All these were of the older class or of former Congresses.

With me in the Twenty-eighth Congress came quite a shoal of new members, many of whom have acted important parts in the history of the country since. Of these standing out most prominently in my memory at this moment are HANNIBAL HAMLIN, of Maine, since Vice-President of the United States, and now Senator in the other wing of the Capitol. Stephen A. Douglas and John A. McClelland, of Illinois, the latter of whom acted a very conspicuous part in the late war, and presided over the Saint Louis convention of 1876, while the name and fame of Douglas are deeply engraven upon the pages of our country's history. Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, who first became Vice-President and then President of the United States. Alexander Ramsey, of Pennsylvania, who is now Secretary of War. Hamilton Fish, of New York, who for eight years presided with so much ability and distinction over the State Department. Robert C. Schenck, of Ohio, who has since served his country in many high positions, and who still lives, and is a citizen of this city. Preston King, of New York; John Sliedell, of Louisiana; John P. Hale, of New Hampshire; Robert McClelland, of Michigan; George P. Marsh, of Vermont; George W. Jones, of Tennessee; Thomas L. Clingman, of North Carolina, and Howell Cobb, of Georgia. Robert Toombs, another distinguished Georgian, who has acted a great part since, and Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, and William L. Yancey, of Alabama, came in two years after. All these and others in that shoal have figured extensively in the subsequent history of our country. Most of them, it is true, have gone to their long homes—a few of them are still surviving. One in that list, not yet mentioned, I cannot omit on this occasion. I refer to Felix Grundy McConnell, of Alabama. He was one of the most extraordinary men I ever met with. Those who knew him can never forget him. He was without education, but with talents of the highest order. He was the original author and mover of the homestead idea in relation to the public lands. He was cut down early in life, lamented by all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a glance at the Senate as it was then composed: There was George Evans, of Maine; Levi Woodbury, of New Hampshire; the brilliant and eloquent Choate, of Massachusetts; Silas Wright, of New York; William L. Dayton, of New Jersey; James Buchanan, of Pennsylvania; William C. Rives and William S. Archer, of Virginia; Willie P. Mangum, of North Carolina; George McDuffie, of South Carolina; John M. Berrien and Walter T. Colquitt, of Georgia; William R. King and Arthur P. Bagby, of Alabama; Robert J. Walker, of Mississippi; John J. Crittenden, of Kentucky; William Allen, of Ohio; Thomas H. Benton and David R. Atchison, of Missouri.

These were all giants in intellect and Titans in debate, although neither Calhoun, Clay, nor Webster, the great trio of American orators and statesmen, was then in that body. Calhoun was in voluntary retirement, and was soon afterward called to the State Department. Clay had left the Senate the year before to lead the whigs in the presidential canvass of 1844. Webster had just left Tyler's cabinet, after the ratification of the treaty of Washington, which was his masterpiece of diplomacy. By it an amicable and advantageous settlement was effected on the long-vexed question of the northeastern boundary between the United States and the British possessions. For remaining in Tyler's cabinet to accomplish this great and patriotic purpose he had excited the opposition of his party associates throughout the country, and had especially excited great indignation on the part of the whigs in Massachusetts. This was a memorable epoch in his life. He went to Boston to defend himself. In speaking of this crisis in his affairs, I may be excused on this occasion in quoting what Theodore Parker said of Mr. Webster at that time:

The clouds had thickened into blackness, all around and over him, and hurled their thunders fearfully upon his devoted head, but there he stood in Faneuil Hall and thundered back again. It was the ground lightning from his Olympian brain.

Mr. Webster's contest with the whigs of Massachusetts ended with his again being returned to the Senate in 1845, where he again met Mr. Calhoun, and where they both again met Mr. Clay in 1849.

With several changes in the personnel before stated, the American Senate was perhaps at this period the most august body ever before assembled in this country. Cass was there. Hunter was there. Seward was there. Davis and Foote, of Mississippi, were there. Douglas was there. It was by this body and the House of Representatives, after a most exciting and protracted debate for months, that the great sectional questions were peacefully adjusted in 1850, under the lead and auspices mainly of Clay, Webster, Cass, Foote, and Douglas. Mr. Calhoun died while the debate was going on.

But, Mr. Speaker, I can indulge in these reminiscences no longer. They were suggested by the occasion. From what has been said some idea can be formed of the character of the men with whom GEORGE S. HOUSTON was brought in contact through his eventful life, of which others will speak; and therefore the more correct estimate may be placed upon the merits of one who, under the circumstances, achieved the distinction he did. It was certainly enough to gratify the highest ambition, but he, if I understood him, had no ambition but to perform his duty, and in its faithful discharge to render himself useful to his fellow-men in his day and generation. Honor to his memory, and peace to his ashes!

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, it was a great many years ago that I met Mr. HOUSTON in public life. In the Thirty-third Congress, which is nearly a third of a century since, I first met him. We then occupied the old hall of the Capitol. The foundations of this Chamber had not been laid when Mr. HOUSTON and I came into this legislative body. I refer back through that long series of years with a great deal of satisfaction in the reminiscences that I make now and then of the old, solid men who were associated with me in the legislation of that period. When we met here, sir, I found in the House of Representatives in that Thirty-third Congress such men as Thomas H. Benton, ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, Thomas H. Bailey, John Letcher, George W. Jones, John C. Breckenridge, and Thomas A. Hendricks. Contemporaneous with us in the other branch of the National Legislature there were Mr. Everett, Charles Sumner, Stephen A. Douglas, Salmon P. Chase, Lewis Cass, William H. Seward, R. M. T. Hunter, and many others that I might name. So that at the time to which I refer, and when I first formed the acquaintance of Governor HOUSTON, there were not only eminent men in this House, but very eminent men in the co-ordinate branch of Congress. Even amidst this array of celebrated men Governor HOUSTON, although perhaps he might not rank in point of intellect and power with some of the men whom I have named, at that time in this House had a prominent standing and an exalted position. He was chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, which then had more significance, I am sorry to say, than it has now—I do not speak disparagingly of the ability of the gentlemen who compose it now, but of the character and standing that the committee under the rules of the House ought to have. It was a proud and an honored position to be held among the distinguished men to whom I have referred. But a few years before this time the Senate presented a galaxy of intellectual power that has never been exceeded in the history of this country or of any other in the world. I refer to the days when Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Webster, and Mr. Clay occupied positions in the Senate, and other gentlemen of almost equal ability composed the Senate of the United States. The time I speak of, when I came here, these distinguished men had passed away.

I was present in the Senate when the eulogies were pronounced on Mr. Clay, and they made a great impression upon me. Men in those days could listen to eulogies on their dead colleagues and not employ themselves in conversing or in making disorder in the galleries. It would seem to be in better taste now to follow the example.

Governor HOUSTON I met for the last time previous to my leaving for my home during the holidays. He then appeared to be in good ordinary health, but the insidious enemy was upon his track—the enemy that is upon the track of all of us, and when and where he shall come is unknown to any of us. There are some things, Mr. Speaker, that we do know:

We know that moons shall wane,
And summer birds from far shall cross the sea;
But who shall tell us when to look for death?

Ah, Mr. Speaker,

He has all seasons for his own.

Governor HOUSTON was my junior by some three years, and in the ordinary course of nature I should have preceded him upon the journey to that goal in the distance that is so little known to us all, but which sooner or later it is a part of our destiny to make. In my associations with Governor HOUSTON I found him not what the world might call a great man, but better than that, Mr. Speaker, I found him to be an honest man and a good man, and greatness without these additional qualifications amounts to literally nothing in making up and forming the true standard of human character. Greatness without those essential qualities of the mind and heart, kindness, goodness, charity, honesty, is sadly robbed of its exalted status.

There are arbitrary terms we use in speaking of the attributes of human character. There are terms which we use in forming our opinion and estimate of the human mind, and I have lived to a long period and have mingled with a great many men, but in forming my opinion of what I regard as the character of a great man I want something else than genius as the sole qualification of a statesman, a warrior, or a distinguished jurist. I want greatness to go beyond that point. I want a man great in the noble qualities which distinguish our race; not

Great like Cæsar stained in blood,
But only great as we are good.

So I classify my distinguished friend now deceased, the friend of my early days, a man whose kind, generous heart endeared him to me; a man without guile.

I heard it said here, in these opening eulogies, on the part of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. FORNEY,] that during the long period of Governor HOUSTON's life no charge had ever been brought home to him of dishonesty, either in public or private life. Heavens! That is the reputation that makes a man great. Nearly a third of a century in Congress, and no charge of malfeasance made against him. The voice of slander even hushed; that forked tongue which throws its venom against the good, the honest, the prudent—in short, against many men of pure principles and upright life. How should he have escaped?

If there be any one thing dearer to me than another in forming the estimate of the true character of my friend, let it be said that he has been of some service to his fellow creatures, and possessing those elements of greatness that lead him to the giving of relief to others. That is true greatness. I do not detract from the reputation of those who have won their spurs upon the battle-field; I do not detract from the reputation of those who have led senates and in that sphere obtained a great and renowned reputation; I do not detract from those who have been renowned in the administration of the laws of the land. They have gained their laurels; let them wear them. But I hold in higher regard the reputation of those who have not reached such exalted positions, but who have excelled in all the great qualifications that adorn the human heart and place the crown upon the human head. I want such qualifications to be considered a part and parcel of those who in these days constitute greatness—not greatness in one thing, but greatness in all things.

We have before us to-day the history of a man who has passed a score of years in public life and whose reputation for honesty and integrity has grown brighter and brighter; though there have been occasions when temptations have been great, in the way of virtuous life. Such are the traditions of times past. He maintained unsullied his reputation, and even to the end of his career he is the same kind, generous, and upright man; his eye constantly on his duties here, fighting for a frugal administration of the Government, he has won no enemies and made all his friends. That, Mr. Speaker, is greatness according to my conception of the word.

So he pursued his onward way, beloved by all, liked by all, despised by none. Peacefully and quietly he goes down to his grave when no voice can be raised against him or any of the transactions of his life. Sir, it gives me pleasure to stand up here before this House and before the nation and record in strong language my admiration and my approval of a man so distinguished through so long a period of public life. Hushed is the voice of defamation. He is beyond the reach of calumny, because none are so daring as to cast the imputation.

I felt it my duty to say this much in memory of an old and highly esteemed friend. I should perhaps, in justice to his memory, have reduced my thoughts to paper and have presented them in a more condensed and appropriate way. My time was too much occupied; but, preferring to say something, I trusted to the inspiration of the occasion. What I have said was from the impulse of the moment, and perhaps better conceived and better said than if I had sat in my closet for a week preparing a eulogy. God bless the memory of GEORGE S. HOUSTON!

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I cannot let this melancholy occasion pass without adding a word in commemoration of the distinguished deceased. Although I did not know him as well by personal association as others, I think none now in congressional life knew him so early and so long. I met him first as an associate member of the Twenty-seventh Congress, in the month of May, 1841, which is now nearly thirty-nine years ago. He was a leading man at that time, in a Congress distinguished for the presence in this body of John Quincy Adams, Millard Fillmore, Henry A. Wise, Robert C. Winthrop, R. M. T. Hunter, and others, foremost in the annals of American legislation, while in the Senate were John C. Calhoun, Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, Thomas H. Benton, Silas Wright, and others, whose fame and names stand in history as among the first of modern statesmen. To have been a noticeable man among such men was of itself sufficient to entitle one to a claim for eminence.

And such a man was GEORGE S. HOUSTON. He possessed a clear, calm, and solid intellectual force. Without ornament or effort for display in debate, he was always intelligent and instructive. I well remember him at that time as a kind gentleman, obliging to the younger members, and always of service in enabling us to acquire a knowledge of the practice of the House. He has gone! He has but followed to the grave nearly every member of that Congress. The places that knew them then in these halls "shall know them no more forever." One by one have those who figured so conspicuously in the debates upon this floor, and who led their followers in forensic struggles, one by one have they gone down amid all their honors to the last sad resting-place of departed glory. Sir, when I look around upon my associates now and remember those to whom I held the same relations then, I am more than impressed with the stern realities of time and the inexorable demands of nature.

Not one of the men with whom I served in the Twenty-seventh Congress is here now, and but few—ay, indeed, but eight or ten out of the three hundred members of both Houses—are living. Gone forever!

When these thoughts force themselves upon me and I am brought face to face with this melancholy fact, when I look upon these seats and fail to find one, not one, of my early associates in Congress, it looks cheerless and dark. Sad thoughts are forced upon me, and the narrow and growing narrower period of my own continuance is made more evident and more positive.

I feel like one who treads alone
Some banquet-hall deserted;
Whose lights are fled, whose garlands dead,
And all but he departed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, for the last twenty years I was honored with the friendship of the gentleman whose death the country now mourns, and who served it so faithfully in varied and highly responsible positions. From intimate knowledge of his character, his proper meed of praise must emanate from an abler source than mine. Our friendship began as members of this body during that trying epoch in the history of nations—the Thirty-sixth Congress—embracing the year 1860 to 1861. During that stormy period his counsel and his votes were always in the interest of peace and for the perpetuity of the Union. His thoughtful mind comprehended the perils of the times. He saw the storm in the near future and bent all the energies of his ardent and patriotic nature to avert it.

Since his entry upon the stage of public action so many changes have swept across the face of society that his retention of confidence and support has but seldom been paralleled in our political history. For over twenty years before I made his acquaintance or was honored with his friendship his people had intrusted him with high and responsible duties. When his career began the country was comparatively in its infancy, struggling with the ill-concealed hostility of the great and despotic states of the Old World. When it needed the fostering care of brave hearts and great minds he was one of its staunchest supporters and ablest advocates and defenders. When death sought and conquered him the feeble Government of his early career had grown to gigantic proportions; a thousand varied and conflicting interests had subjected our institutions to the strains that follow far-reaching territory and large populations—had changed us from a people who then subordinated everything to love of country to a people whose national interests compelled each locality to contend for the maintenance of an equal balance of the favors and the protection governments afford.

A period intermediate between his entry into public life and his death represented one of the darkest eras in human history; when our unhappy country was torn by civil conflict the like of which perhaps has never been witnessed since the morning of creation; when brother was arrayed against brother in deadly strife and all our rivers ran red with the blood of the bravest and the best of our sons—as a result of which institutions that had given shape and characteristics to the society that had always honored him were swept from existence by a decree as eternal as the mountains, and a new order of things shaped from political chaos was to be wrought out for the salvation of his people.

His was the hand to which his neighbors intrusted the helm. That he faithfully and successfully fulfilled this high mission is now recorded in public history. His epitaph is written in the praises of a redeemed, a great, and a free State. His judgment was so tempered by sound philosophy that no sentiment ever escaped his lips during his whole career that could affect the nicest sectional susceptibilities. While loving the State that had fostered and trusted him in his youth and sustained him in his manhood, he was as broad as his country and as just as Aristides. His counsels during the short period he served in the Senate tended always to the promotion of peace among all our people, and his ambition was that the institutions handed down by our fathers should be perpetuated here to so elevate mankind that by force of example empires and kingdoms would crumble to dust and that the people should be the masters of their own destiny throughout the world.

Such men always die too young; but their example lives after them, and so molds and shapes coming events that the order of affairs is tending ever to a higher and a more just public control, is tending ever in a republican government against turbulence and bloodshed; is carving a pathway through the darkness of the past to a brighter, more hopeful, and peaceful future. In losing the dead Senator the Union has lost an able defender, every honest and good man an admirer, and myself one of the best of friends and the safest of advisers. To those more nearly allied to him the solace is that his spirit is with his and their kindred in the presence of the Most High; that the purity and justice of his life assure him a blessed immortality.

Mr. HOUSE. Mr. Speaker, the career of the politician and statesman in this country is beset with as many difficulties and burdened with as many cares as man is called to meet on any other path of life which duty or ambition may prompt him to travel. To the young and aspiring fancy invests no place with more fascinating attractions than that of high political position. In a land where the very highest office under the Government is open to the obscurest boy, and where the very humblest have reached the exalted position, it could not be otherwise than that the avenues to political preferment should be crowded with eager aspirants. But along the track of political conflict how many hopes have been wrecked and how many dreams have perished! And even among those who reach the goal of their ambition, how many feel in the very hour of their success that they have but imitated the ardent boy that chases the gay butterfly only to find it, when caught, turn to gilded dust upon his fingers. The man of the people treads no flowery path. He lives and moves in the glare of public observation, his motives often impugned, his private character perhaps criticised and assailed, his course always open to the animadversion of political foes and watched with unfriendly scrutiny, it may be, even by political friends, with the hope of detecting some fault or mistake in his public service which may forfeit the support of his constituents and cause them to retire him in favor of some more fortunate rival. His whole career is often an animated struggle for political existence, in which he is exposed at the same time to a fire in front and rear. Even if victorious in the unequal conflict, he frequently receives wounds that follow him to the grave.

His private character is too often considered public property, which the irresponsible scribbler feels himself licensed to deal with as he would partake of a free lunch or speak of the weather. In the partisan struggles of this country there has always been too little regard paid to personal reputation. It has been too much the custom to regard everything fair in politics, as in war, and to treat a political adversary as an outlaw against whom it is legitimate to use even poisoned weapons of warfare. There are too many leading journals that do not hesitate to publish any rumor against a political adversary which will create a sensation or score a point against the opposite party. The rumor may be wholly unfounded; its publication may blast a human life and plant a thorn that will rankle in innocent hearts until they cease to beat; but the newspaper has enjoyed the profit of a sensation and the pleasure of befouling the reputation of a political opponent. 'Tis but a poor recompense to a man thus injured and slandered, and to his suffering family, to be told by the newspaper that has voiced the scandal to its thousands of readers that he can have the use of its columns to refute the calumny. Equipped in its seven-league boots the falsehood sets out on its journey and laughs to scorn all the efforts that truth can make to overtake and disarm it.

The press of the country should lift itself above the level of the common tale-bearer and scandal-monger. Neither the race of diligence in giving news to the public, nor a desire to win a character for enterprise, nor an effort to promote the fortunes of a political party should cause our public journals to wield the immense power they possess to destroy private character. No meritorious cause is subserved by unjust and libelous attacks on individual reputation. No man who occupies a public position can claim to be exempt from criticism. His public acts are public property, and he has no right to complain if they are censured or condemned. But every man, as long as he conducts himself as a gentleman, has a right to expect and demand that his private character shall be free from the assaults of falsehood and calumny. But how many of our distinguished public men have enjoyed this immunity while battling with the elements of party strife and climbing to the mountain ranges of political ambition? But however unhappy the life of a public man may be made by this uncivilized mode of warfare, he may always console himself with the reflection that the people are neither unjust nor ungenerous to a faithful public servant. If he is true to his trust, true to himself, and true to his constituents, they will neither withdraw their confidence from him nor suffer his name to be cast out as evil.

Mr. Speaker, it fell to the lot of the distinguished subject of these memorial services to spend a great portion of his manhood upon the stormy theater of political life. He met its perils, faced its antagonisms, bore its criticisms, engaged in its conflicts, and retired from the long-fought and well-fought field with no stain on his name and no reproach on his memory. More fortunate than many others, the tongue of slander never assailed his honor or impeached his reputation even in the fierce and bitter struggles of partisan warfare. He was born in Williamson County, Tennessee, in the year 1809. When he was only twelve years of age his parents removed to the State of Alabama. As Tennessee gave him to Alabama, it is not inappropriate that the voice of the mother should mingle in the solemn ceremonies in honor of his memory and feel a portion of the pride with which his adopted State must ever cherish his fame. At the early age of twenty-three years he was elected a member of the Legislature, the year after he was licensed to practice law.

In 1834 he removed to Limestone County, Alabama, to practice his profession. In 1837 he was elected solicitor of his district, which position he continued to hold until he was elected to Congress in 1841. He served his district in Congress for eighteen years, with an interval of only one term, when he voluntarily declined to be a candidate. Though often opposed by men of ability in his district, and engaging in warm and animated contests, he was never defeated before the people. His congressional career is a part of the history of the country. He was for several terms chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, at a time when that leading committee of the House of Representatives, in addition to its other important and onerous duties, was charged with the responsibility of preparing the appropriation bills. His distinguished services at the head of this committee of the House, which numbered among its members at that time many eminent men, stamps him as a man of no ordinary attainments and ability. It may be safely said that no man at that time exerted a greater influence over the legislation of the House than GEORGE S. HOUSTON. He may not have possessed, in as high a degree as some others, those dazzling and brilliant qualities which readily captivate the public mind, but in soundness of judgment, in political wisdom, in thorough comprehension of the subjects of legislation, in strength of will, firmness of purpose, indomitable energy, and patient, laborious, and conscientious discharge of duty, he stood, and deserved to stand, in the front rank.

He may not have had what is popularly called genius, whatever that is, but he had in an eminent degree what Buffon, the great naturalist, denominated genius—patience. His long and useful career in the national councils is a monument to his ability as a statesman and his integrity as a man. When his State determined to withdraw from the Union, he resigned his position as a member of this House, and went home to share the fortunes, good or ill, of the people who had honored and trusted him, although in the presidential campaign of 1860 he had opposed secession and supported Stephen

A. Douglas for President. I care not to pause or comment upon the course he saw fit to take in this great and trying emergency when Alabama decided to sever her connection with the National Union. Suffice it to say, he was incapable of taking any step which to him did not seem dictated by duty and sanctioned by honor. I leave his action and his motives, together with the actions and motives of others who under like circumstances pursued a similar course, to the calm judgment of just men, whose applause or censure is alone worthy of being prized or deprecated.

Soon after the war Mr. HOUSTON was elected to the United States Senate from Alabama, but was not allowed to take the seat to which he was elected. Though deprived of the honor of representing his State in the Senate, there was one thing of which those who denied him his seat could not deprive him, and that was the consciousness that Alabama considered him worthy of the high honor and conferred it upon him. In 1874 he was elected governor, and was again elected to the same position in 1876. During his term of service as governor, the difficult problem of a State debt, with which so many of the wasted States of the South have had to struggle since the war, came up for solution. I remember to have had a conversation with Governor HOUSTON on the subject of the debt of his State. Every instinct and impulse of his nature rose in rebellion at the idea that Alabama should incur the odium of repudiation. Under his wise, patriotic, and judicious guidance the debt was adjusted upon terms satisfactory to the State and her creditors and honorable to both. He led Alabama through this ordeal safely, and had the proud satisfaction of seeing the State he loved so well and for which he had labored so faithfully stand without a stain upon her escutcheon or a cloud upon her title to honorable recognition among her sister Commonwealths.

As honorable, faithful, and distinguished as were his services in the national councils before the war, his labors and influence after the great struggle had closed, in readjusting Alabama to the new order of things and the changed condition of affairs, must ever form the brightest chapter in the history of his long and successful public life. The services and counsels of such a man at such a time cannot be well overestimated. The State acknowledged and appreciated his services in her behalf. At the close of his gubernatorial term he was again elected to the Senate of the United States, and took his seat in that body on the 4th day of March, 1879. But he was not long permitted to wear this crowning honor of his people and his State. On the 31st of December, 1879, the venerable statesman was gathered to his fathers. He was followed to the grave by the people whose trust he had never betrayed, whose honor he had never compromised, whose cause he had never deserted, and whose confidence and affection he had proudly worn as his crown of glory. Surely, if anything can adequately compensate a man for passing through the strife and turmoil and bitterness and unrest of political life, Senator HOUSTON had cause to be content with his lot. He now sleeps beyond the reach of praise or censure, but his fame is in the custody of those who will guard it well. When, in the coming years, Alabama, like another old mortality, shall make her solemn rounds to rechristen the fading names of her distinguished dead upon the marble that guards their sleeping dust, she will pause at the grave of GEORGE S. HOUSTON,

To bless the turf that wraps his clay.

Upon her roll of honor she will point to the name of no other son with fonder pride; for no other son of hers has ever given her greater cause to cherish his memory and to revere his name.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, one of the compensations for death is the belief that when it comes, the errors of our life will be buried with the mortal body, and the eccentricities of our human nature be rounded into a shining orbit of charity. Who would speak of the dead save in the phrases of loving kindness? Rarely have I felt that a word of mine in their eulogy could do adequate justice to the merits of deceased friends. But when manly men, like Stephen A. Douglas, Michael C. Kerr, and GEORGE S. HOUSTON fall here in the sphere of duty, and when their characters present so much to praise, I have overcome my reluctance and entered upon the threshold of the unseen world with the unreserve of enthusiasm.

If excuse were needed for taking part in this ceremony, is it not enough that I knew Governor HOUSTON during a part of his early service here more than a score of years ago? I knew him, to respect his talents and love his character. His kindness to young members was remarked by my colleague, and this is why my recollection of him is embalmed so sweetly now. Indeed, as early as the Thirty-fourth Congress, in 1854, I had remarked him towering as a conspicuous figure in yonder old hall, commanding the attention and consummating the work of this House. In the Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Congresses we sat together upon this side of the Chamber. Here his practical mind and generous qualities gave him pre-eminence. He was prominent in debate, not merely because of his readiness and fullness in details and his knowledge of parliamentary methods, but for his large views and patriotic sentiments.

That he was thus accounted for duty was owing to his great experience in public affairs, his influence among men, his courageous and charitable opinions of his fellows, and his ready familiarity with the structure and essence of our Government and its complicated and refined polity. This experience was gained by close attention to his duties in every province where he was called, and to the maturity and reliability of his judgment, and to his prophetic insight into the needs of his Commonwealth and the country.

Forty years ago here his voice here for frugality and honesty. As chairman of the Ways and Means he allowed no prodigality to give meretricious splendor to the Federal system. To him squandering was almost crime. I never recall his services in those Congresses before the war that I do not associate with him two other statesmen, George W. Jones, of Tennessee, and John Letcher, of Virginia, whose aims and efforts should be forever a living pattern.

His first elaborate effort in the Twenty-seventh Congress was for the restraint of legislation here within the narrowest limits and against implied powers. He would leave all legislation to the States "over subjects where they could as amply and beneficially legislate as Congress." This was the key-note of all his service. As early as 1842 he ably contested the power of Congress over elections, holding them to be aloof from Federal supervision. He was not only a strict economist, but jealous and denunciatory of the Senate on money bills. That body, he thought, should defer to the House, the immediate representatives of the people, but if they did not, he was for appealing to the people.

He was a bold denouncer of tariff tyranny, as his speech in 1844 shows. His wisdom as to the public lands was often evinced in the early period of his service, for he held our lands to be a trust for the people, and not for speculative greed.

During these years, Texas annexation and the Oregon boundary were leading themes. I need not say upon which side this courageous statesman stood. His Oregon speech, and indeed all of his elaborate speeches, are remarkable for exhaustive research, perspicuity, defiance, and patriotism. Perhaps the best element of his character was his fearlessness and self-abnegation. In a speech against the general internal improvement system, on the 26th of May, 1846, he avowed his opposition to the appropriation for his own Tennessee River, and especially when associated with streams less consequential. Though that river ran between States and through States—navigable but for obstructions, for eight hundred miles, washing seven of the leading agricultural and planting States, and a link between the Atlantic, the West, and the Gulf—still he would not countenance the system which took unequally from one portion of the country to give to another. He would have equal exactions and equal favors or none. He thus defied the wishes of his people, exclaiming: "I value too highly the little character I have earned in the public service to forfeit it for office or by corrupt bargains."

This independence was rewarded, for his constituents saw in it the best type of a trustworthy representative.

Whether in scrutinizing the expenses of our Army and requiring accountability for the least item, or arguing against subsidies to the Collins steamers as fraught with partiality and unjust to fair and free trade; whether defending the privileges of the House or vindicating the supremacy of the treaty-making power, he brought to the debate pithy sentences and linked logic, now and then relieved by flashes of faciæ, and all subordinated to a sense of honor, justice, and patriotism.

When, on the 16th of February, 1853, his Committee of Ways and Means and that Congress were criticised as not being comparable to earlier committees and Congresses, he defended their assiduity and economy, and, rising into an eloquent panegyric of the great and good men who once adorned the House, and referring to the mutations which time had wrought, he softened acrimony into praise, by saying:

Truly, Mr. Chairman, changes have taken place. In that the gentleman and myself are perfectly agreed. But, sir, changes are inevitable, and it is not for us to complain of the decrees of fate or of evils over which we have no control. We must make the best we can of our present condition, while our hopes, our aspirations, and our efforts should be directed to the amelioration of the ills that surround us and the removal of the obstacles that lie in the way of our usefulness. Such is the teaching of philosophy, such the dictate of justice.

The changes which he then described have been more remarkable since. Death has been busy with those who belonged to that Thirty-fifth Congress in which we first met. Their roll is lessening year by year. It was the first Congress in which I served. The old hall and its members, by some natural law of memory, rise before me with photographic vividness and with more dramatic interest than even later Congresses, in this new Chamber. It was during that Congress, on the 17th of December, 1857, that we migrated to this Hall. I recall the solemn prayer of our Chaplain, Rev. Mr. Caruthers, "that it should be made a temple of honor, patriotism, and purity." That scene is the more graphically pictured in memory, as upon that day it was my fortune, good or ill, to make the first speech in this Hall. In that spectacle no form stands out in bolder relief than that of GEORGE S. HOUSTON. How changed, all; and what changes—both in the personnel of the House, the subjects discussed, and the fierce passions which then raged here as the premonition of other conflicts! Ah! sir, our present politics are but a summer's sea, calm and serene; then it was a frenzied tumult. The wild passions of that time developed the peculiar characteristics of every member. Not more distinct and individual were they, than the trees of the forest; and in no one among them is there found so fit an emblem of the tough fiber and gnarled nature of GEORGE S. HOUSTON than in the oak.

What a galaxy of varied and lustrous attributes shone in that assemblage: the Washburnes, Banks, Thayer, Bishop, General Sickles, John Kelly, Haskins, Corning, and Spinner, of New York; E. Joy

Morris, Bockock, Governor Smith, and Faulkner, of Virginia; Sherman, Giddings, Bingham, and Groesbeck, of Ohio; Whiteley, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Farnsworth, and Maynard, of Tennessee; Niblack, English, and Colfax, of Indiana; Craig, Clark, and Phelps, of Missouri; Curtis, of Iowa, and Lane, of Oregon. These survive and have filled honorable stations, while such men as Mr. Speaker Orr, Quitman, Florence, Hickman, Owen Jones, Glancy Jones, Covode, Montgomery, Leiter, Tompkins, Miller, Stanton, Stewart, Henry Winter Davis, John G. Davis, Harlan, Bowie, Millson, Burlingame, Nicholls, Caskie, Gilmer, Stalworth, Shorter, Eustis, Burnett, Clay, Hughes, Petit, Lovejoy, Harris, Caruthers, Hawkins, Ready, Goode, Hopkins, Burton Craig, McQueen, Seward, Dowdell, Elliott, Peyton, Underwood, Jewett, Warren, and other stars, differing in glory, but now shining in other spheres! But why, sir, extend this roll of death? One-half of that Congress have crossed the silent river to the viewless realm. The great issues they debated are settled by the stern wager of battle, and their contentions ended in that "other country beyond the sun."

Five beside myself remain to illustrate the vicissitudes of political and mortal life; the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON,] from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] and from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES.] A few have been transferred to the other branch of Congress: Senators LAMAR, PENDLETON, MORRILL, and DAWES. Some fell bravely in the fierce encounter to vindicate their thought: Branch, Barksdale, Keitt, Jenkins, Zollicoffer, Moore, Ruffin, Garnett, Shaw, and others; while of those who fought them, Curtis, Cockerill, Blair, and others survived the war only to die where affection administered its last offices. The vernal season which is bathing the land in sunlight, and making the melody of birds in the woods; which is warming into new life the beauty of the flower and the splendor of the grass, is weaving its garlands over hillocks where their remains repose. It teaches by its analogy the resurrection and the life of our human bodies. It scatters its flood of floral promise, and bends its iris of hope over the living and the dead, dyed in all the hues of a sunlit heaven, as the covenant of God with man, of our immortality. Amid these changes, I cannot refrain from reflecting that I am left alone here as the surviving member of that Thirty-fifth Congress from the North, while from the South there remain but the five I have named of that splendid group who challenged the admiration of their opponents by the gifts of eloquence with which they championed and adorned their cause.

Of this number GEORGE S. HOUSTON, while he was one of the leaders, if not the leader, of legislation, was not one of that galaxy of orators who "graced the noble fervor of the hour" by urging the departing of our States.

If southern associations could have made GEORGE S. HOUSTON a devotee of the peculiar tenets which found their final issue in force, he would have been such a devotee. Born in the State of Tennessee, so prolific of statesmen of heroic mold and civic qualities, deriving his early lineage from Ireland and on his mother's side his lineage from South Carolina, educated for the law in the State of Kentucky,—he sought the fresh and attractive field of Alabama in the morning of his career. After honoring his profession in offices wherein his legal abilities were displayed, within a decade after his removal to Alabama he was elected to the Federal Congress. He served his State here from 1841 to 1847, when he retired to resume his profession. The stirring events of 1850-'51, growing out of perilous sectional questions, again called him to the front. Here he remained as the faithful trustee of his people until his State seceded.

He retired with sorrowful heart and brimming eye to his home, for he saw with the prescience of a statesman, the terrible eventualities of the conflict which he always deprecated. While the red storm of war raged around his home, he remained, like many other men equally chivalric, a sad spectator in the conflicts of force.

When the war ended, and failing then to secure in 1865 and 1866 a seat in the Senate to which he was elected, his people, in 1874, sought for him, their first citizen, as the head of the State. He was made their governor, and began the work of building up the waste places which the desolation of war had made. He made a highway for the people; and, lifting his voice above the ruin and distress around him, he began the work of construction with that sagacious adaptation of means to end which is the distinguishing feature of genuine statesmanship.

In seeking for the pivotal characteristic of this representative man it is to the honor of his nature that it is not found in the desire to destroy. There is in every human heart some controlling thought—the end-all and be-all of exertion. It is that mysterious and magic inspiration which exalts the daily work of life into a daily beauty. It evokes out the unreal, reality. It is the aura which sustains the intellectual and moral nature, giving it stamina and energy, as the atmosphere sustains our physical existence. It directs the aimless and erratic meanderings of the mind into fruitful, smooth, and healthful currents. It creates the loftier life, and in death it inspires loving hands to weave chaplets for the tomb of the departed.

The genius of this statesman's life is found as well in his reticence and reticacy, when the havoc of war menaced and ruined his State, as in the vigor with which, when that havoc was over and its debris lay around him in orderless despair, he removed the charred framework and began to replace it with happy homes and good rule for a contented people. To him more than to any other man in Alabama that State owes its resurrection. He rolled away the stone from its sepulcher and, like the good angel, guarded its door. Amidst all the perils of surf and sunken rock the warning voice of Governor Houston had here spoken peace and good-will for the tranquillity of the whole land and its indestructible unity. It had spoken in vain. His State was launched on the tide of war. She enlisted one hundred and twenty thousand of her sons in the confederate army; one-fourth of them fell fighting for the southern cause. Everywhere, in field and village, city and country, there was devastation. Even after the war, misgovernment and maladministration added their cruelties and burdens to the desolating effects of the war. But these, which were discouragements for others, were to him incentive and ambition. His genius for rebuilding uprose with the dire emergency. It is said of Alabama, after it was traversed by the Spanish army under De Soto, more than three centuries ago, seeking for gold and in the search drenching it in blood, "that the dark curtain that had covered her territory was suddenly lifted, a brilliant but bloody panorama passed across the stage, and then all was shrouded in primeval darkness." This chiara oscura of the historic Rembrandt, but faintly portrays the dark shadows which rested upon the Alabama of 1865-'66. But the picture did not appal the stanch heart of GEORGE S. HOUSTON. He manfully began to wash out the stains of blood; he desired to "scatter plenty o'er a smiling land;" he pleaded for reconciliation, and by his efforts and under his magic the spears of grain burst into gold and the cotton-pod into snow. While by his wise policy he elevated the credit of his State and saved it from insolvency and debt, he helped to open his wonderful State and its opulent resources of mine and plantation to the light, which has since given to its people encouragement, good government, and renewed prosperity.

The magic by which he controlled affairs was not altogether his knowledge and experience. His nature was not devoid of ready sympathies, and even poetic sentiment, though he seldom revealed himself in this relation. But it could not be otherwise with one nerved by the pure air and pleasant sun of Alabama. He represented no dreamy sentimentality and no impractical abstractions; for that portion of Alabama to which he was accustomed, has not the soft local coloring like that which interpenetrates the magnolia-laden air on the margin of the Mexican sea. There the breath, shine, and flora of spring glorify even the midwinter. Living within the crescent which the majestic Tennessee makes as it bends through the upper region of Alabama, his mind took from its scenery something of that rugged cast which the soft allurements of the farther South did not mitigate or temper. There runs through his life, like the ridge of iron through the heart of his State, virile virtues of unbending and inexorable honesty. But with all this he was pervious to the influences of sentiment, and his life was free from the vices and stains of passion. The mountains and streams of his State—the early adventures arising out of Spanish, French, American, and Indian conflicts; the romantic legends of his State, woven into a web of witchery by the indigenous poetry of the South—its prehistoric mounds and historic memories; its constellation of honored names, such as the Kings, Lipscombs, Gaineses, Toulmins, McKineys, Moores, Crabbs, Lewises, Clemenses, Yanceys, Bibbs, Pickenses, Fitzpatrick, Carrolls, Clays, Elmores, Forsyths, Walkers, Hilliards, Pughs, Shorters, and Currys in the State, and the Evanses, Baldwins, Meaks, and Hodgsons in the republic of letters, honored as well in other States as in Alabama—these were a part of his local pride and literary amenity.

My honored friend [Mr. FORNEY] has drawn a picture of the landscape around his home, and adorned it by a stanza from one of the cantos of a favorite southern poem descriptive of the beautiful valley of the Tennessee. It was impossible with such ennobling examples of superior men, and with such a physical surrounding, with its jeweled islands set in flowing waters, and with its mountains like giant sentinels that the imagination even of one so practical in the daily routine of professional and legislative life should not have partaken something of the quality of this splendid land, and of the attributes of its noble men.

Mr. Speaker, there is no sweeter word in any tongue than Alabama! Most musical in its tone, it echoes its legendary meaning. Among the many fanciful stories connected with this State of legends is that which is engraved upon its escutcheon above us. It is said that a tribe of Indians, flying from their enemies, reached a splendid river. There a chief struck his weapon into the soil, exclaiming, "Alabama!" "Here we rest." Who is there so practical that he would deprecate this incident by questioning its authenticity? The very sky and scenery of Alabama, with its dreamy loveliness, seem to give it reality. "Here we rest!" Ah, sir, he who did so much to assuage the unrest which the passions and ambition of men created; he who accomplished so much and so magically by his word and work, has now found within its bosom that rest which his busy life did not bestow. He who lived no cloistered life, whose active thoughts and unblemished fame gave their sweet effluence to guard and restore the homes of his State, measured the circle of his own felicity in contributing to that of his people. The murmur of the rivers which flow through his beloved Alabama, and the lapse of the waves which fall upon its southern shores, break in melancholy cadences to sing and sigh his requiem, and lift their voices in praise of him who after doing so much, at last rests from his labors amidst the sympathy and sorrow of his bereaved countrymen. Every home and heart from the stately Tennessee to the beautiful Mobile Bay contribute to

Shed a beauty round his name—
A light that like a star will beam,
Lustrous and large—a golden glory
Adown the Future's gliding stream,
To gild his country's morning story!

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, my long and somewhat intimate personal acquaintance with the late Senator HOUSTON, and the well-known high esteem in which I held his character, will account for the request with which I am honored by his colleagues to participate in the mournful services of this memorial occasion. After what has been already so well said, by more than one speaker, of his life and services, it would seem superfluous for me to make further allusion to them, except as an illustration of his character. I may be pardoned, therefore, for referring very briefly to his public services, and especially during the period it fell under my own eyes. When I first entered this Hall as a member, now nearly a quarter of a century ago, the name of GEORGE S. HOUSTON stood upon the roll as the acknowledged leader of the House of Representatives. At this particular period he was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, having, however, previously served four years as chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. These posts of honor had been accorded to him by common consent on account of his long, able, faithful and patriotic service as a Representative from the State of Alabama—serving at that time his eighth term, and he was afterward re-elected to his ninth term, making eighteen years in Congress.

Reared in the Jeffersonian school of American politics, as illustrated and administered by the illustrious sage of the Hermitage, it was natural that he should range himself beside President Polk, and ably and efficiently sustain his administration, which sealed to this country a magnificent empire whose agricultural value and marvelous mineral wealth exceeds the approximation even of an estimate.

At a later day, in 1850, when sectional animosities became so intense and bitter as to alarm the just fears of the patriots of the whole country, and ended in calling forth the most important and the last efforts of the great American Commoner for the pacification of the sections and parties, once more healing the wounds upon the body-politic which sectional agitation had inflicted, the faithful historian of that eventful epoch in American annals will find the name of him whose memory we this day embalm in our heart of hearts as one of the strong, active, efficient, and prompt supporters of the compromise measures of Mr. Clay, which saved these States from the fratricidal war which fate had decreed only a decade later.

As chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. HOUSTON, by virtue of the duties and prerogatives of his position, stood at the head of that power which performed the dual service of pointing out the sources of the Government's revenues and at the same time preparing and submitting to the House of Representatives the annual budget of expenditures. How he succeeded let the pages of those annals speak to the millions who have examined and will hereafter examine them. With a country as large then as it is now, (excepting Alaska,) such was the rigid economy and honest simplicity with which the affairs of the General Government were then conducted that he was enabled to fall as low as $52,000,000 per annum for the net ordinary expenditures of this nation. But it required ceaseless vigilance and unremitting toil, coupled with an honest and courageous firmness in defense of the public Treasury against the horde who were then as they are ever ready, like vultures, to prey upon it, to keep within the limits of such practical economy. I recall among others of that period the names of three distinguished men, (two of whom were mentioned by my distinguished friend, Mr. COX,) now living, but long since voluntarily retired to private life, who were the associates, friends, and active supporters of HOUSTON and his frugal policy. To one familiar with that period I need not mention the names of George W. Jones, of Tennessee; John Letcher, of Virginia, and John S. Phelps, of Missouri. Whatever bill of expenditures went through Congress passed beneath the searching gaze of their watchful eyes, and was doubtless necessary to the public weal.

No measure of doubtful constitutionality or expediency eluded their untiring vigils. In this guardianship of the public Treasury Mr. HOUSTON stood forth as the worthy and accepted leader.

I shall not refer further to his public service, for that has been already more worthily treated than I could hope to do. I will add a word as to some of the more prominent traits of his character as seen by me, perhaps through the lens of a personal friendship too partial to be accurate. And although it is only the omniscient eye of God that can penetrate the secret chambers of the human heart and read the thoughts and feelings of men, nevertheless the life-time actions of men may be reasonably accepted as the true indicia of their characters. Tried by this rule, GEORGE S. HOUSTON was an honest man. Truly he could say:

I know myself now, and I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities,
A still and quiet conscience.

Throughout his career of three-score years and ten, whether in the private or public walks of life, he never practiced fraud or deception upon any one. On all questions which rose to the dignity of an issue he always, after investigation, promptly and fearlessly maintained his convictions. He was careful never to disappoint just expectations, whether of his constituency, his friends, or of his enemies. He placed great stress upon accuracy; indeed he may have seemed at times a little hypercritical, so much was he opposed to loose and extravagant statements and semi-misrepresentations. This trait dominating his character, he was perforce an ardent devotee at the shrine of that noblest of virtues, sacred truth. If he ever seemed censorious or controversial, it was because he was unwilling in the least to tolerate dissimulation. Hence his statements of facts, being thoroughly accurate and rigidly true, always gained an easy lodgment before the people or the jury, the court, or at the forum of his country's councils. His sense of justice was well-nigh as sensitive as his love of truth. He had such reverence for this grand old virtue that he could hold up the scales wherein should be weighed the rights of a friend and an enemy and give a decision supported by the logic of common sense and inexorable right that would hush every dissentient note. So even balanced were these faculties and principles of his mind and the sensibilities of his heart, it is not strange that he was conservative.

Excesses of all kinds he avoided, and always stopped before he reached extreme ends. Harsh or violent measures he ever regarded as the offspring of passion and empiricism, and not of judgment and philosophy. Taken altogether, while it will not be claimed for him that he was the equal in ability and renown to a very few names of American statesmen, yet impartial history will place the honored name of Senator HOUSTON high upon the monumental shaft of immortal names that shall defy the corroding tooth of Time to efface, and shall stand unmoved by the shock of Oblivion's waves as they lash against its granite base. But Tennessee, his mother, and Alabama, his foster-mother, claiming him as the pride of their hearts, will not be permitted to appropriate the worth of his character and the value of his example alone to themselves. The sisterhood of this great Union of States claims him, too, as her son, and to-day holds him up before the millions of our people as a shining light to guide the footsteps of American statesmanship and American manhood.

Statesman, yet friend to truth, of soul sincere,
Of action faithful, and in honor clear;
Who broke no promise, served no private end;
Who gained no title, and who lost no friend;
Ennobled by himself, by all approved,
Praised, wept, and honored by the land he loved.

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Speaker, a long and active public life affords great opportunities and facilities for the development of native talent and the acquirement of a high order of statesmanship, and promotes the highest standard of patriotism. In a country like ours, where the humblest citizen may aspire to the most exalted station, where the places of honor and trust are open to the competition of all, it is rarely the case that any man is permitted to enjoy continuously for any considerable period of time, the preference of his countrymen. When it does occur, the person so preferred must have developed superior wisdom and fitness for the duties and responsibilities of public station.

Very few men in this country who entered public service in early manhood have made such an impression upon the public mind and heart as to enable them to be thus honored throughout a long life; but conspicuous among these few was the late GEORGE S. HOUSTON, whose life and public services, in conformity to a beautiful and time-honored custom of Congress, we are here to commemorate.

Years ago Senator HOUSTON was called from the pursuits of private life to represent his people in the Legislature of Alabama, since which time, with the exception of short intervals, his services have been devoted to his country, closing his career in the Senate of the United States, full of years and full of honors.

Senator HOUSTON was not distinguished for the brilliancy of his talents or the grandeur of his conceptions. He did not acquire his influence or achieve his success through the inspirations of genius or by the sheer force of intellectual power. He did not control or sway men by the magnetic influence of superior declamation or force of logic. He was not gifted with the power of originating new and grand measures of public policy, nor did he waste his time on undeveloped theories of political economy, but he possessed the wisdom of prudence and the virtue of patient, untiring industry, which gave him an influence over men and brought him success. He was powerful, though not brilliant—powerful because he loved his country and his people; powerful because he was honest and upright; powerful because he was practical, cautious, and deliberate; powerful because he combined a high order of common sense with great goodness of heart, guided by an honest desire to promote his country's welfare. To his good sense he added industry; to his industry, honesty; to his honesty, prudence; to his prudence, patience; and to patience, energy and perseverance. Possessing all these elements of usefulness, stimulated by a lofty and patriotic ambition, he deserved the success he attained, for he was great in his goodness, and good in his greatness.

Years of faithful, earnest devotion to their welfare and interests have enshrined him in the hearts of the people of Alabama, and, though dead, his memory and good deeds will live on forever. It is good to dwell upon the lives of such men. They are full of instruction. They teach us the arts of usefulness, and point the way to honor and success. They stimulate the progress of civilization and leave the impress of their virtues on every page of the country's history.

We are often shocked by the sudden and untimely death of friends who are cut down in the full vigor of manhood, in the very midst of a career of usefulness. Such deaths always give us pain, and we feel that for them the ends and aims of life have been thwarted. But in contemplating the life and career of Senator HOUSTON, while we mourn his loss, we feel that he has fulfilled his destiny, finished his work, and gone to receive his reward—a reward higher and nobler than peoples or potentates or powers can bestow for a well-spent life.

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Speaker, as the old year was dying its setting sun lighted to the tomb a great and good man in Alabama, for on its last day, as though to gild the galaxy of its dead, GEORGE S. HOUSTON at his home in Athens, surrounded by weeping family and devoted friends, after a long life of eventful activity and usefulness, "fell asleep."

For nearly half a century, with short intervals, he served his people in official station and was faithful in every public trust. Many years he served in this House and enjoyed as the head, respectively, of the Committees on Military Affairs, Ways and Means, and Judiciary, an honor rarely, if ever, accorded to any other Representative, and while it would be unjust to others to say of him,

Among the faithful, faithful only he, yet it does no man wrong to place him in the foremost rank of laborious, upright, painstaking, and honest statesmen.

If the tongues of dying men,
Enforce attention like deep harmony, with what devotion ought we to listen to the lessons of sages and patriots whose "tongues are now stringless instruments," and whom God has endowed with power to speak for themselves and for us, and to us, and who will speak to the ages with

A golden drift thro' all the song.

It is Hawthorne who says that "to take in the meaning of a picture you must be alone with it." The lives of great and good men are never properly comprehended until we contemplate them in the solitude of the grave-yard, to which they seem to invite us as to a grand moral gymnasium, and propound to us and to posterity the sublime lessons of glorious living and noble dying. It is here, as "into a high mountain apart," lifted above the consuming cares and petty strifes of life, away from the babbling voices of a selfish world, that we see humanity transfigured from mortal coil to the shining vestments of a higher life.

There are two considerations, Mr. Speaker, appropriate to such an occasion as this. The first relates to the inherent elements of a great and good character like that of our departed friend. The second regards that character in its totality, in its motives, its intelligent and skillful conduct and beneficent achievements in the affairs of men, the history of its activities in practical life, which illuminates and exalts it into an example for our admiration and emulation.

Both in the analysis of the character of Senator HOUSTON and in the history of his distinguished public services, we find considerations to reconcile us to the labors of life; in view of the transcendent rewards of virtue, to exalt our hopes of usefulness, to encourage aspirations for honest fame, to animate patriotic devotion to the liberties, prosperity, and glory of our country.

I will not violate the proprieties of the occasion by uttering all I feel; but standing here to mouth an unmeaning eulogy as a part of merely formal and empty ceremonial of conventional respect would violate the sanctity of that friendship which existed between him and myself, of which I hope to retain until I die the gentlest memory and most thorough appreciation.

No man who knew him can doubt that it may be as truly said of him as of Augustus Tholuck, that he was "without pretense or cant." No man standing at his grave will deny that his whole life evinced an heroic love of truth. This devotion to truth logically induced frankness, independence, and courage. These are the glorious, cognate virtues which blossom on that heavenly-born tree of life, and mature fruit more precious than any which ever graced the garden of the Hesperides or grew in the hanging gardens of Babylon. It was in perfect harmony with these virtues that in all the relations of life he was charitable as he was frank; conservative as he was independent, and conciliatory as he was courageous. No impatient zeal ever betrayed his counsels into rashness; the storm of passion never dashed his vessel upon the rocks of inhospitable shores.

An honest partisan, he allowed no prejudices to cloud his vision or mar his policy where his country was concerned.

I leave to older men to recount the conflicts and triumphs of Mr. HOUSTON's earlier career. From the beginning he was a man of the people, and was always willing to leave his cause with them. The confidence with which he appealed to them and the enthusiasm which ever greeted such an appeal caused some men to thoughtlessly call him a demagogue. In a literal and noble sense, that he was a demagogue is true; that he was such in the unholly and ignoble popular acceptance, I absolutely deny.

He was affable and polite to the humblest citizen—all gentlemen are. He was gentle toward the weakness and sympathized with the misfortunes of others—a generous nature required this. He was particularly regardful of the feelings of men in lowly station—an infallible mark of greatness. He recognized the existence of as royal virtue and noble worth among men and women striving in the humbler spheres of life as could be found in the gilded salons of those who wrought in the "high stations of renown," and he was man enough to declare it. He was considerate of the opinions of his fellow-citizens, always and forever battled for their rights in high places, as he ought to have done, and deferred to the people as the sovereign power in the land. If these things constitute a demagogue, then he was one, and I honor him for it.

While for many years a Representative in this House, in the blaze of society, in the whirlwind and noise of political strifes and personal ambitions, he preserved the simplicity of manners and purity of morals which brought the satisfying experiences of a rustic Mantuan life—as little joining in the frivolous dissipation of social excesses in the vain world's chorus of applause at the petty pursuits and empty triumphs of little men as did old Elijah in the guilty vanities of Ahab's court.

It was during this time of his service here as a distinguished democratic leader that, in returning to his constituents, in the full consciousness of his rectitude and the honest pride of his cordial appreciation, he was facetiously said "to shake hands with them by the acre."

Mr. Speaker, among the great men of that day GEORGE S. HOUSTON was every inch a peer. Benjamin Fitzpatrick was then a Senator from Alabama, a consummately wise party tactician, a liberal statesman, and an expert manager of men, yet he relied very implicitly upon the sympathy, advice, and co-operation of this born tribune of the people. In his victorious campaigns in North Alabama he won and proudly wore the appropriate soubriquet of "the Bald Eagle of the Mountains," and eagle he was! His eyrie was on the loftiest peak, the very Caucasus of these mountains, and his scream was heard through all their democratic fastnesses. There is a royal decoration which William of Prussia sometimes sent to illustrious Germans in their age and failing strength known as the "Star of the Order of the Red Eagle." Senator HOUSTON's election by the people of Alabama to the Senate was a more brilliant decoration of a grander order, that of the "Bald Eagle of the Mountains." The difference is that between the favoritism of kings and the loving, grateful reverence of a free people. My personal acquaintance with him began some time before his first term as chief magistrate of Alabama. That acquaintance was from its first inception a friendship such as might subsist between an aged and venerable teacher and a young, ardent disciple of that school of politics founded by Thomas Jefferson.

I had many occasions of seeing him during his most able and successful administration of that high office to which he had been elevated at a critical period in the history of that State, of all the Southern States—of all the States of this Union. He was always calm, conservative, collected, and confident in his powers and resources; unshaken in whatever complications or emergencies might surround him. He was a zealous and thorough reformer of the evils, financial abuses, and of all the vicious courses in political and social life brought upon the State by the extravagance, reckless corruptions, and proscriptive, pragmatical tempers, of that system of malice and misgovernment which not only overthrew the rights and liberties of the people, but sapped the foundations of their material prosperity and social life—a system of oppression, terrorism, speculation, insolence, and irresponsibility without a parallel in this or any other civilized age.

His economy was exemplary alike in its far-reaching and intelligent methods, and its sound political and moral theory. Although far advanced in years, his industry was untiring—quite above the standard measure of official respectability, efficiency, and responsibility. His intelligence was equal to the demands of his convictions, to his firmness, his reformatory methods, his economy, and his signal industry.

His courage and impartiality brought the dignity of his office up to the ancient, which was his own high standard of purity and efficiency. His healing hand was felt on every wound which afflicted the body-politic. His sustaining official presence pervaded alike the halls of learning, the thoroughfares and palaces of commerce, and the humblest homes of our agricultural country people. He was such a man and such an officer as old Tacitus would have delighted to set in a historic frame as a companion piece for his Agricola; a man whom Plutarch, with his life before him, would have honored with a seat in his historic temple between his Camillus and his Cato.

At the close of his administration so great was his popularity that although his day was well-nigh spent, and he was opposed as a candidate for a seat in the Senate by some of the most intellectual and influential gentlemen of the State, men distinguished in the civil affairs of government and had breasted the fiery tempest and whirlwind of death on the battle-field, gentlemen of a high order of eloquence and attainment who would honor any station in any government in the world—notwithstanding all this, the popular wave bore him triumphantly over every obstacle into the high seat he occupied at the time of his death. It may be true that other men more learned, more eloquent, more brilliant, and better adapted by the vigor of unimpaired manhood to the duties of the station in whose fidelity the people had absolute confidence, contested with him the senatorial palm, but a grateful people would not refuse to crown his labors with the highest honor at their disposal.

His early death was generally anticipated at the time of his election. His sun had careened beyond its zenith. It was fast descending behind the western hills and sinking into the shades of night. It gathered about its pavilion golden clouds, and it was a people's wish that it should pass away from their sight in the purple splendors of a royal procession.

Mr. Speaker, GEORGE S. HOUSTON descended to the grave more grandly "robed like a king" than Charlemagne in his marble tomb, and the people of my State unite with us to-day in gracing his memory with this "elegy of words and tears."

He belonged, in a higher and a better than the classic sense, to an heroic age; to that noble band of primitive American patriots who not only founded States but built grand republics, the heavenward spires of whose resounding temples glitter among the stars. Such men as have erected Ohio and Illinois, Alabama and Mississippi, and Indiana and Kentucky, and their sister States into great Commonwealths, and launched them with streaming banners upon the tempestuous seas of government, manned by such crews of intelligent freemen as can be founded beneath the sun only among their posterities, and freighted with the destinies of all the coming millions of the human race.

What a fitting opportunity—what a patriotic resolve—standing by the grave of one who illustrated the statesmanship of the better days of the great Republic, to bury forever the memories, oh, how bitter, of all the past feuds and bloody strifes which have divided, distracted, and in all ways tortured and cursed the land left us by these ancestral heroes! Drawing inspiration from the undefiled patriotism which clusters around the memories springing from "high converse with the mighty dead," for the love of country and for the sake of real union why can we not allow the gaping wounds to heal, and with unity of purpose, unity of hope, and unity of effort march on to the accomplishment of our country's destiny, a grand, united, free Republic?

Mr. Speaker, there is one trait of Senator HOUSTON's character which unmentioned would leave incomplete any notice of him. Its entire absence would mar the heroism of Luther and detract from St. Paul's sublime manhood. As pre-eminently as any man with whose character I am familiar, GEORGE S. HOUSTON was true to his friends. And when he found a friend whose adoption would stand the test and ordeal of trial, he anchored him to his "soul with hooks of steel." On this subject I speak whereof I know.

But such as he was he has gone from among us. He passed away calmly and quietly, as "the morning star melts away in the sunlight."

He lies as low as Caesar—no lower than kings and princes—no higher than peasants and paupers. The Great Leveler levels evenly. He lies as low as you and I and all of us shall shortly lie.

Such as he was he has gone; and

Of such as he was there are few on earth.
Of such as he was there are many in Heaven,
And life is all the sweeter that he lived,
And all he loved more sacred for his sake,
And death is all the brighter that he died,
And Heaven is all the brighter that he's there.

Casting "this stone upon this cairn" my task is done.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, it was not my expectation to be here at this time, and hence I had made no preparation to participate in these ceremonies. But as I am here, and as I represent a large portion of the old district of the deceased Senator, where he was so well known, loved, and honored, I feel that I would be unjust to my constituents and wanting in reverence to the distinguished dead if I should now altogether lay my hands upon my mouth. I must offer some tribute, however humble and feeble, to the memory of our departed friend.

Those who are unacquainted with the deep hold that Senator HOUSTON had upon the affections of the people of Alabama can little conceive how sharp was the pang that ran through our borders on the tidings of his death. He had been their friend, faithful and just to them; and he had served them with a fidelity and an effectiveness unsurpassed; and every household felt that the loss was personal to itself. He was a popular man with the masses, not through any of the arts of the demagogue, for he never fawned or flattered or sacrificed principles to expediency; but because he was of them. His heart beat in sympathy with them. He knew, honored, and trusted them. He was the unflinching representative of their plain, honest ways, of their saving common sense, of their straightforward and manly courage, and of their devotion to the old landmarks and the essential principles of constitutional liberty. He had shared their toils, had known their sorrows, and had partaken of their homely joys and of their warm free hospitality.

His own life was work, and his language rife
With rugged maxims hewn from life.

Standing thus on a common ground between him and the people, possessed of a mind eminent for its sagacity and practicalness, with a superb physical constitution capable of all endurance, with a heart large, genial, and overflowing with its rich vein of humor, a spirit bold, combative, even aggressive, yet never deserted by his inimitable self-composure, combining the happy power to instruct, illustrate, and amuse, he was the most successful and effective speaker that I have ever seen upon the hustings. Conscious of his thorough knowledge of men, of his varied experience, of his enlarged views, of his ripened intellect and his familiarity with facts—for like Mr. Fox he thought one fact worth a thousand arguments—he had that confidence which boasteth not itself, but which, as Lord Chatham said, was a plant of slow growth in an aged bosom.

I shall not attempt, Mr. Speaker, to portray his public career. That has already been well done by others.

In the palmy days of this Republic he was the intimate friend of Silas Wright, the trusted adviser of President Polk, and the intimate associate of Mr. Douglas. He was the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and for many years the leader of this House. And in the eventful days that followed reconstruction he was the chief oracle of his own State. In that memorable struggle of 1874 for our redemption, as the champion of the people his popularity reconciled all differences, his patriotism won all hearts, his zeal and courage inspired all confidence, his energy overcame all obstacles, and he achieved the greatest peace victory recorded in the annals of our State, the beneficent fruits of which will descend to generations yet unborn.

And as my friend has said, the people were not ungrateful. They demanded of their immediate representatives that they should show this gratitude by elevating him to that exalted position which he held at the time of his death.

When the dread summons came which was to gather him to his fathers, although he had passed his three-score years and ten and was surrounded by loving hearts and tended by gentle hands, still the blow was a severe one to my people. We had a sore need of him in these days of modern degeneracy. We fondly hoped that his wisdom, his counsel, and his example would be spared to us for his full term in the Senate.

If the last days which he spent at this Capitol cast a shadow of disappointment over his patriotic soul and made him sigh for the better days of the Republic, let us console ourselves with the thought that he has joined those noble patriots of the past who went before him, and with their sweet companionship can now realize in the light of eternal truth that all the struggles and sacrifices for human liberty have not been in vain.

Mr. HERNDON. Mr. Speaker, the relations which I bore to Senator HOUSTON seem to make it imperative upon me not to remain silent when a tribute is to be paid to his memory.

It was only in the last seven years of his life that I had any personal acquaintance with him, but I have known him as a public man from the time that my attention was first called to the conspicuous characters in the politics of Alabama. No man, save William R. King, late Vice-President of the United States, remained longer and more continuously in public life in Alabama, nor more occupied the attention of the people of that State, than General HOUSTON. In this way his public career became known to me, but I do not propose now to trace it throughout the long period which it covered. This has been, or will be, done by others. I shall attempt only to delineate him as he impressed himself upon me, and sketch, as faithfully as my words can, the outlines of his character.

When success throughout a long career attends one in every position, in every aspiration, and in every undertaking, and finally crowns his hopes and his ambitions, the world will concede, must concede, without being able to analyze the causes or comprehend the qualities which secured it, that there must have been in such a man a something greater and superior than in other men, which has not only commanded but deserved success. Success, it has been said, is the highest test of merit. No one's career could be more safely submitted to this test than General HOUSTON's.

From his earliest manhood down to the end of his long life he was the recipient of the people's confidence, and, except when he voluntarily refused, filled offices to which it was in their power to elect him. Never but once defeated, with his young ambition looking upward to one supreme height, he ascended step by step from the lowest rung in the ladder of preferment up to that exalted station in which he closed his mortal course, and from which, in the fullness of his earthly fame, he was translated, we reverently trust, to that Highest Tribunal to receive the well-earned plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, thou shalt be made ruler over many."

To one who did not thoroughly know Senator HOUSTON it would be difficult to discern the causes which gave to him his unvaried success. He was popular throughout the State, and was almost the idol of the people of the congressional district in which he lived; and this popularity with the masses scarcely waned or diminished even in the times when the hearts of the people were stirred to their depths and the usual calm of popular feeling was broken into billowy passion by the dreadful tempest of civil war. In the fast changing and swift revolving of the minds and thoughts and feelings of the people in those times, passions ebbing and flowing as the tide of the conflict ebbed and flowed, long-worshiped idols were overturned and broken in pieces, trusted oracles silenced or contemned, and leaders were, as by a breath, made and unmade; but amid all this wreck of men General HOUSTON seemed never to have lost the confidence and affection of his people. When the tempest had ceased and the sun once again broke through the clouds which had so enshrouded our Southland, he stood out as formerly, "the people's man," loved as before, and trusted, as he had been for more than twenty years.

The people of the State of Alabama manifested this continued and unabated confidence in General HOUSTON in a most unmistakable manner in the year 1874.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that I do not offend the proprieties of this occasion by the remarks which I am now about to make. They are made in no partisan or sectional spirit; with no wish to excite unkind feeling, nor to revive memories, here or elsewhere, that may be disagreeable; but only to illustrate the services of Senator HOUSTON, by which he achieved his most enduring fame among the people of Alabama and won their inexpressible gratitude.

From the commencement of the reconstruction of Alabama under the acts of Congress enacted for that purpose up to the year 1874, the State had been in the hands and under the dominion of officials many of whom had but recently been emancipated from bondage, necessarily ignorant and debased and the mere instruments and puppets of bad and designing men who obtained control of them; and most of the others, these same bad and designing men, who had no home in the State, no kinship or sympathy with her people, no concern for her welfare, no regard for her good name, no compassion for her desolation, no desire for her peace, who came like vultures ravaging for prey and intending to stay only so long as they could glut their insatiate hunger with the flesh and blood of a stricken and helpless people. I shall not recite the ghastly details of the history of those seven years. That history has been written with a pen of fire into the memory of the whole country and its hot iniquity will never let it be forgotten. Suffice it for this occasion to say that as this incursion of strangers into the offices of the State of Alabama had for its object rapine and plunder, it became necessary that the conditions must be created on which this fell object could most effectually be accomplished. Disorder instead of law must prevail; turbulence instead of peace, discord between the races, and hate, instead of harmony and friendship. And as in other States, so in Alabama were these conditions created and so they did prevail to a great extent for seven years prior to 1874.

In that year, against his wishes, against his earnest remonstrance, GEORGE S. HOUSTON was called from his retirement, nominated by the democratic State convention for governor by acclamation, and elected by the people by a majority of over seventeen thousand votes.

Then began a new era for Alabama. With Governor HOUSTON all the State and county officers were elected, most of whom were in accord with him in political sentiment and who became useful aids to him in the Herculean work of rebuilding and reforming which he was about to undertake. No chief magistrate of a State ever entered upon the discharge of his duties under circumstances more difficult or more appalling. There was chaos in the treasury; chaos in the laws; chaos in the courts; chaos in society; chaos everywhere!

The advent into office of Governor HOUSTON, who had the confidence of every class of people in the Commonwealth, for his conservatism, his sagacity, his prudence, and his integrity, was in itself almost magical in its effect. Across the arch of the political heavens like a bow of promise it gave token of an approaching calm, and was hailed as the harbinger of a more auspicious future. All eyes looked to him with the highest hopes and expectations. Had he proven unequal to the great enterprise, had he failed, chaos, more chaotic, would have come again. But he did not fail. Disorder was succeeded by the order of well-regulated law; peace reigned where turbulence had raged; and distrust and discord were no longer felt nor heard in the borders of the State. His administration achieved all that it promised or that was hoped for. Wise and beneficent, it was upheld by the good citizens of the State of every party. Social and business confidence was restored, languishing industry was quickened into activity, and prosperity once more began to shed its sunshine upon the fields and the homes of the people.

It can almost be said of Governor HOUSTON, as was said of the great Alexander Hamilton, that he found the treasury a putrid corpse; he touched it, and it became a living soul! When he came into office the debt of Alabama was over $32,000,000, $24,000,000 of which had been created since 1867 by the vicious methods of preceding administrations. When he left it it was less than $10,000,000, with the honor of the State untarnished and its credit restored.

It would be unjust to others, as well as untrue in fact, to ascribe to Governor HOUSTON the entire credit for the adjustment and settlement of the public debt of Alabama. In devising the scheme he was aided by the suggestions and counsel of some of the ablest minds of the State, and in its consummation, so honorable to the State and so satisfactory to her creditors, he had the efficient services and co-operation of two of the most skillful financiers and intelligent of his fellow-citizens, his associates in the commission created for that object. I do not mean, therefore, in what I say to detract in the least from the credit to which others are entitled. The glory of the achievement was great enough for them all to share in, and the relief which it gave to Alabama was beneficent enough to entitle them to the unmeasured gratitude of the people. But the adjustment of the debt belonged to the administration of Governor HOUSTON; was a part of it; his counsel contributed to it; his handiwork was in it, and he it was who carried it out to completion. Others might have done as well had they occupied his place; but fortune, the tutelar deity that seems ever to have attended him, ordained that in him the man and the occasion should meet, and the man was equal to the occasion.

As I have said before, it is not easy to one who did not thoroughly know him, to analyze and precisely determine the causes of Senator HOUSTON's success as a public man, but as under all circumstances and at all times he has enjoyed it, it is sufficient evidence that he possessed many of the elements upon which success is conditioned. He had a thorough knowledge of the people; he knew their thoughts, their feelings, and their prejudices, and with marvelous power could always call forth a hearty response to his own expressions of them. It cannot be said of Senator HOUSTON that he was a leader, in the sense that out of his own brain he coined great thoughts or originated great measures which he impressed upon the people; nor that he molded popular opinion into any new form or led it into channels in which it was not accustomed to run. He was seldom seen in advance lifting up his own banner emblazoned with his own creed, but oftener in the ranks of the people, one of them, bearing their standard, uttering their thoughts, and sounding their watchwords. This was the key to his popularity and to his success. He was a friend to the people, and as he loved them and was faithful to them, they honored him and crowned him with their sovereign gratitude.

The mental characteristics of Senator HOUSTON were caution and judgment; he was sagacious rather than wise; reached his conclusions more by intuition than by any process of reasoning, and demonstrated his views and opinions more by action than by logic.

It was never my privilege to hear him in a deliberative assembly, nor in the judicial forum, and only on the stump before the people in the latter years of his life. He showed there none of the culture of the scholar, and but few of the graces of the orator. His phrase was homely and his style discursive, but his speeches abounded in strong common sense, unskillfully modeled, they may have been, as a composition, but most skillfully adapted to reach the understandings and touch the hearts of his hearers.

The long-cherished ambition of Senator HOUSTON was to represent the State of Alabama in the Senate of the United States. In the sunset of his life this ambition was gratified; but in returning, after an absence of twenty years, to a theater in which he had been a conspicuous actor and to scenes which were once so familiar to him, he found all things changed. In this House, where he was so well known and wielded such large influence, there yet lingered but two or three who sat here with him, and who to-day have paid fitting tributes to his memory; and in the Senate he met but few whom he had ever seen or who had ever seen him. A new generation had succeeded to that to which he belonged; his contemporaries had passed into retirement or into the grave, and men who had attained to senatorial age and had commenced public life during his absence, had taken their places. New ideas, new impulses, new policies, too, had greatly superseded those which obtained in his day. It is not surprising, then, if he felt almost isolated and alone in the grand presence in which he sat, and realized, as he must have done, after having scaled the height up toward which he had so long struggled, the vanity and emptiness of all human ambition.

It is hardly probable, had Senator HOUSTON been spared to live through his constitutional term, that he would have added much to his fame. Its measure was already full; but he would unquestionably have become one of the most useful and valuable members of the Senate by his wise and prudent counsel, his strong practical sense, his far-seeing conservatism, his unwearied industry, and by his close attention to the business of legislation, to the conduct of which so few in either House of Congress devote themselves, and in which the very qualities for which Senator HOUSTON was most distinguished are so essential.

He was not long enough in the Senate for that body to appreciate his worth or now to feel the void which his death has caused; but the people of his beloved Alabama, who have so often honored him and who loved and trusted him so well, lament his loss to them and to the country, and will ever cherish a grateful remembrance of his virtues and his services.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, on the last day of 1879 the telegraph flashed to all parts of this continent the sad intelligence that Senator GEORGE S. HOUSTON was dead. A committee of Senators and Representatives from this Congress, some from New England, some from the West, and some from his own loved land of the South, started at once for his home to mingle with the mourners there, and testify, by their presence, the grief of the whole people of this mighty land for the people's loss. It was my melancholy privilege to be one of that committee. The funeral awaited our coming. As we approached the beautiful little town, so long the home of the deceased, the day was perfect; the sun shone bright and warm as on a morning in May. But no carol of birds, no sound of joy from any living thing greeted our ears. Midwinter was on the gray fields and barren trees, and cheerless midwinter in the hearts of the people. Their homes and spires were hung with black; the gloom of grief was on every face. As I stood by the grave and listened to a gifted orator telling over the life of Alabama's best-loved son to the silent and listening throng of all ages, sexes, and conditions, and my mind swept back over the busy years of that life—years that were all ended in the grave before me—and then as I glanced up at the bright sunshine and thought how that sun would continue to arise and set and seasons would come and go, I felt

Alas! Alas!—
How soon we pass!
And ah! we go—
So far away!—
When go we must—
From the Light of Life, and the heat of strife,—
To the Peace of Death, and the cold, still Dust,—
We go—we go—we may not stay,
We travel the lone, dark, dreary way;—
Out of the Day and into the Night,—
Into the Darkness,—out of the Bright.—
And then! ah, then! like other men,
We close our eyes—and go to sleep—
We hush our hearts—and go to sleep,—
Only a few, one hour, shall weep,
Ah, me! the Grave is lone and deep!

But it is not true of him that "Only a few one hour shall weep." I do not speak the language of eulogy, but only the plain unvarnished truth, when I say that, though Alabama has many sons who are loved and trusted, the death of no other could have caused so keen a sense of personal loss to so many of her people.

Senator HOUSTON was a remarkable man and his was a remarkable career. He was born in Tennessee but came to Alabama in his early boyhood, and to him Alabama was always the mother State. To her people he gave the warm affections of his youth; to their service he devoted the energies of his manhood, and to them in their hour of need he consecrated the golden fruits of a ripe experience.

I knew him for years, but it was never my good fortune to become intimately associated with him until the last session of this Congress. During all that exciting period we were daily companions. Then I learned to love him as my wise counsellor and my friend.

Senator HOUSTON had not the advantage of a thorough education, and he was never a close student of books. Strict mental discipline in his youth would have helped him to a broader culture and a more finished style of oratory than he ever attained; but he was a broad-minded man and possessed in an extraordinary degree the genius of common sense. His mind was strong, active, and logical. It was objective rather than subjective. He never indulged in metaphysical abstractions, but he studied closely the practical bearings of every question and comprehended them clearly. His judgment was rarely if ever at fault. It is said that mistakes are the stepping-stones to wisdom. If in his long public career he was ever compelled to use these stepping-stones, they helped him to a practical wisdom I have never seen excelled. He was made solicitor and twice elected to the Legislature of his State when a young man. In 1841 he came to this House as a member and began here a long and honorable career. He served without intermission until 1849, when he voluntarily retired for two years. But in 1851 he was again returned and continued by successive elections as a Representative here till his State seceded in 1861. During all this time he grew in wisdom and usefulness. Experience, industry, ability, and an unswerving devotion to duty gave him high rank when such men as John C. Breckinridge, Humphrey Marshall, Frank Bowden, James A. Stallworth, James L. Pugh, David Clopton, Thad. Stevens, and Charles Francis Adams were members of this body.

He was once chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House and twice chairman of the great Committee of Ways and Means. He was the inflexible foe of a protective tariff and combated it with all his power and influence. He believed in a tariff for revenue and not for protection. He urged that protection of the manufacturer was robbery of the consumer. He was in all things an unflinching democrat, and never wavered in his fidelity to party. Trained in the school of Jefferson and Madison, he contended for a strict construction of the Constitution, for the rights of the States and the people of the States. Yet, sir, he was conservative in all his course. He was in this Congress, except two years, as I have said, from 1841 to 1861. I have looked back with as much care as time and opportunity would permit over the record of congressional debates during this period, I have turned over page after page in volume after volume, and, sir, I do not find that during all that time he ever made a single speech or uttered a single word calculated to fan the angry passions that brought on the war between the States. While others discussed politics he addressed himself to business. He was a member in the winter of 1861 of the famous committee of thirty-three. He voted for the formation of that committee, but it was unable to devise means of saving the Union. He remained in his place performing his duty as a Representative until after his State seceded. This he believed she had the right to do; and on the 21st day of January, 1861, he united with five other Representatives from Alabama in a letter, which was laid by the Speaker before the House, announcing their withdrawal from the further deliberations of that body. After reciting the secession of the State the letter proceeds:

The causes which, in the judgment of our State, rendered this action necessary we need not relate. It is sufficient to say that duty requires our obedience to her sovereign will and that we shall return to our homes, sustain her action, and share the fortunes of her people.

Of the signers, the name of GEORGE S. HOUSTON was first.

Thus terminated his career as a member of this House and the first era of his life as a public man.

Reviewing his history in this House, we find that he was always at the post of duty; that he took part frequently in debate, especially toward the close of his service; that he occasionally made exhaustive arguments in which there were sometimes eloquent passages, but there was no effort at display. He was in no sense an innovator. He never claimed to be wiser than the fathers. He accepted the Constitution without question. Its checks and balances, its delicately adjusted machinery, were to him the wisest piece of workmanship ever fashioned by man for the protection of individual liberty. He saw here a central government that was partly national and partly federal; national as to our ships at sea and commerce abroad—national as to all the outside world—national at home, in so far as it touched the people directly; but federal in every feature that recognized and guarded the autonomy of the States. He saw this government as did Washington and Jefferson and Jackson, and he deemed it the highest duty of a patriot to carry it on as they had administered it. To this effort he devoted the best energies of his life.

For thirteen years after he left Washington, in 1861, he lived at home, illustrating in the walks of private life all those domestic traits which so beautifully adorn and embellish the character of one who has distinguished himself in public station. His virtues were as conspicuous and shining in the charmed circle of home and friends as in the Congress of the United States.

In 1874 the time again came when the people needed his services. It would not be fitting in me, sir, now standing, as it were, in the presence of the grave, to indulge in the language of invective or say anything calculated to rouse bitter memories; rather would I, if I could, commit them all here to the dark waters of Lethe; but no citizen of Alabama can ever forget the anxiety, the distress, the dark forebodings of her people as they girded up their loins to enter into the great political conflict of 1874, upon the result of which so many felt the future happiness of the people and prosperity of the State depended. Alabama had always been proud of her honor and her credit. She had even sent gold through the blockade during the war to pay the interest on her debt. Now her head was bowed down with shame; her credit was gone, and profligacy and corruption were eating out her substance. The bright future her orators had painted, when her mountains should teem with wealth and her valleys with fatness; when her broad streams should bear on their liquid bosoms a mighty commerce to the sea; when every hillside and plain should be dotted with happy homes—all this roseate picture was shrouded with gloom. Confidence was gone; doubt and anxiety were everywhere. Her citizens by thousands and tens of thousands were fleeing her borders, and thousands more were awaiting the result of the great political conflict about to begin. All eyes turned to GEORGE S. HOUSTON as the leader of his party, and he was nominated by acclamation for governor. I shall never forget that canvass, and no one who heard him before the people will ever forget his speeches.

There were no graceful figures of speech, no classical allusions, no flights of fancy, no carefully studied phrases, and no effort at well-rounded periods, but his words went home to the hearts of the people with a convincing power I have never seen equaled. He addressed himself to every phase of opinion, to every shade of prejudice, and to men of all political antecedents. His logic was so plain that none could fail to comprehend him; his illustrations were drawn from the most familiar objects and always full of point; his every anecdote was an argument and his manner invited and compelled confidence. In fine, sir, there was that about him that caused his words to come as from one having authority, and it did seem that he spoke as the prophets spake. He was elected and re-elected, and during his term of service as governor abuses in administration were corrected, extravagance was checked, confidence was restored, the credit of the State regained, and Alabama was placed once more on the high road to assured prosperity.

At the end of his second term as governor the Legislature, reflecting the wishes of the people, sent him to the Senate of the United States, which had been for many years the goal of his honorable ambition. It is a sad, sad thought that death has deprived us of his services here. But the Reaper has garnered wheat that was ripe. Every honor the people of his State could bestow was his, and worthily he wore them all; but "he has run his course and sleeps in blessings."

Mr. Speaker, I do not mean, in pronouncing a just eulogium upon the dead, to detract from the well-earned praise due to the living. The credit of the wonderful campaign of 1874 is not all due to Governor HOUSTON. Behind him was a great mind organizing the forces and directing the conflict. By his side and everywhere throughout the field true sons of Alabama pressed forward to her deliverance; but wherever the fight in the front was hottest, and the smoke was thickest, there towered above all the crest of HOUSTON like the white plume of King Henry of Navarre at the battle of Ivry.

So, after he was inaugurated, the people held up his hands; they sent true men to aid him in his great work, and immediately about him were gathered wise counselors and co-workers. Yet among all and above all HOUSTON was the chieftain, the leader, the great reformer, the idol of the people.

Quis desiderio sit pudor aut modus
Tam cari capitis?

By a law of this Congress each State in the Union is invited to send the statues in bronze or marble of two of its dead, "illustrious for their historic renown or for distinguished civic or military virtues," to be placed in this Capitol in commemoration of the affections for their people and as bright exemplars of virtue. Maine has sent

William King, Massachusetts has sent Samuel Adams; New York, Edward Livingston and George Clinton. Other States have contributed statues of those they hold in fond recollection, and if the Legislature of my State will take counsel of the people and their desire to testify it in some fitting manner, it seems to me that Alabama will send GEORGE S. HOUSTON to stand in that Hall where the people of his district sent him so often when living—in that old Hall of the House of Representatives, now peopled with the images of departed greatness and kindling with glorious memories of the past—the Hall that rang with the eloquence of Clay, re-echoed the logic of Calhoun, gave back the immortal words of Webster, and was the scene of the ceaseless labors of HOUSTON for the people's good. It would be the people's tribute to the people's friend.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, grief is the natural emotion of the mind, when confronted by bereavements seemingly irreparable. Were it otherwise, we would be devoid of that sensation attesting the sincerity of our appreciation and gratitude, esteem and affection, love and devotion. Indeed, it would be equivalent to a denial of their existence, by reason of our incapacity for their indulgence. Who could contemplate humanity thus denuded of those floral beauties of the heart, whose incense and odors, were there no revelation teaching it, would inspire a conviction of a higher and better state of existence awaiting us? It is not only natural and proper that grief should dwell with us in such bereavements, but it is exalting and divine for it to be so.

In the loss of Senator GEORGE SMITH HOUSTON, of Alabama, the public mind is this day confronted by and contemplating an apparently irreparable bereavement. Who can doubt its impressive grief, prompted by the loss of this good and great man? If there be any such, there are none to envy them the desert waste of their barren hearts. Grief is not only here, but prompts the silent inquiry now being made in behalf of the great public mind and heart as to what shall be the bounds of her appreciation for and her gratitude to him, the glow of her esteem and the impulse of her affection for him, the depths of her love and the heights of her devotion to the memory of him who was her noble son, he who cherished her reputation and treasured her honor as he did his life, and who subserved her good and glory up to and with his dying utterances.

This eminent citizen was a public man throughout the greater part of his life—a life that extended to the ripe age of seventy. During this long career, in the different positions he held and filled, in private or public life, his excellency in morals was of an exemplary and unexceptionable character. His bitterest foe never called in question his integrity; his physical and moral courage was proverbial; his magnanimity was equally conspicuous, while his unvarying and successful popularity afforded the amplest proof of his geniality, his fullness of heart. Possessed of such elements in their most enlarged development, and with them displayed in action, none can deny that he was a good man. When you add to them true and forcible intellectuality, you will have finished the blending of attributes and virtues which as surely constitute a good and great man as the unity and proper diffusion of colors affirm the beauties of the rainbow.

What has been the career of Senator HOUSTON in the line of which he has displayed the intellectuality and qualities of heart pronouncing his goodness and greatness? Viewed as an executive officer in the courts of his State, a youthful, fearless, incorruptible solicitor, a wholesome terror to evil-doers, as well as an assured protection to the innocent, maintaining and vindicating the supremacy of her laws against all violators, he has left an example worthy of emulation. Or as a junior representative in the Legislative Assembly of his State, his modest and unassuming yet dutiful and studious career as such was marked with a discretion and ability that presaged his after efficiency and greatness. Or as the chief executive of his State, called thereto by the compelling voice of his people at a time when she was stranded in the shallows of bankruptcy; when she was dismantled and disfigured by a most profligate if not corrupt administration of her affairs; when lawlessness and disorder were rife in her midst; when life, liberty, and property were not vouchsafed by the strong arm of the law; when schisms, feuds, and bickerings were on the daily increase; when her treasury was exhausted and her credit unavailing; when her taxes were so onerous as to paralyze the efforts of her languishing industries; when the property of her people was without sale value by reason of the presence of seeming anarchy; when she was most flagrantly misrepresented by those professing to be her guardians; when emigration to her borders was inhibited by the deadly vapors pervading her atmosphere; when the hopes of her bravest hearts were in the embers of extinguishment; and when her people were insulted and disfranchised by a pretended constitution unknown to and unprescribed by them, imposed upon them by a swarm of vampires who were preying upon her vitals with vulturous greed—at such a time, in the midst of such surroundings, this wonderful, magical, unexcelled commander assumed the charge of her destiny, and with a spirit, nerve, and devotion that gave assurance at once of a vital and wholesome change in her affairs.

In the short space of four years he transferred her to her present most excellent chief executive repaired and refitted from hull to the pinnacle of her mast-head, moving majestically, under full sail, in the clear, deep waters defined as her track, by the consummate skill of an acknowledged navigator, with her treasury replenished, her credit restored; with her people relieved of overburdened taxation, and the hum of industry revitalized throughout her limits; with their hopes rekindled, their spirits reanimated, and their resolutions reresolved; with law and order reigning supreme throughout her borders, and schisms, feuds, and bickerings dissipated and obliterated; with life, liberty, and property secured beyond a peril and peace, plenty, and growing prosperity the daily blessing of her people; with a substantial value restored to her property and emigrants coming into her borders from all points of the land. And as a further testimonial of the devotion of the American people to that deathless principle, so essential to the existence of liberty, avowing that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, she now enjoys the benefaction of a constitution adopted by her own people, in whose broad, clear, and well-defined ordinations are to be found the amplest and fullest guarantees of all the rights, privileges, and immunities that belong or attach to freemen and citizens under our unequalled republican form of government.

Should I, then, not say that he has left a model administration of her affairs that may be wisely followed by his successors? Her people with united voice exclaim, in the language of one of her gifted poets:

All praise, all honor to her faithful son,
Who was the staff on which she sorely leant
When, debt-oppressed and 'neath the alien's yoke,
Her regal head in bondage vile was bent;
Who was her staff, and at whose magic touch
Her debt was lifted and her foes dispersed,
At whose high beck the clouds went rolling back,
And freedom's sunshine reillumed her track.

Has poetry or eloquence, in their most vivid portrayals, their sublime sketches, ever o'erdrawn the picture of blessings flowing from the toilsome, patient, self-sacrificing work of the good and great man who addresses his life to the building up rather than to the agitation, dismemberment, and destruction of his country? A most eminent subject for their divine arts, in this particular, is presented to them when the traits and characteristics, life and acts of Senator HOUSTON shall be fully made known.

If to induce two spears of grass to flourish where only one grew before constitutes a benefactor of his race, what shall be said of him who, uprooting and extinguishing all the noxious weeds to social and political health, induces an abounding in their stead of life-sustaining, health-invigorating plants, under whose benign influences revive and flourish law and order, sobriety and industry, quiet and contentment, gladness and peace, plenty and prosperity; or who reverses the face of his land and people from despair and desperation to righteousness and exaltation?

He who thus aims, though he should fail in his noble and God-like purposes, will be treasured in the hearts of his people as one who, soaring with the eagle, has left the record of his flight and of his failure among the stars, yet more to be admired and envied than he "who creeps the gutter with the reptile and beds his memory and his body together in the dung-hill." But with joyous success crowning his inspired aims, his tireless efforts, does not GEORGE S. HOUSTON stand out before his fellow-men encircled in a halo of triumphantly wrought, richly merited, imperishable glory?

Well may his days seem all too few to thee,
And yet he gave to time a perfect fame;
For though death wrote a finis to his deeds
While yet he strove to build a greater name,
Still in the compass of the years he had
He did achieve for thee, his beloved State,
A full redemption, and for all thy woes
A happy issue and a glorious fate.

When you come to view him as a Representative upon this floor for eighteen years an effort to recount his efficient and successful career here would swell these remarks to a volume. But let it be said his devotion and ability were such that he was returned as often as his terms expired or he would accept the proffered honor, and that for the last ten years of his service he walked over the track without the semblance of opposition, thus evincing his towering strength before the people as so formidable that none would dare oppose "The Bald Eagle of the Mountains," an appellation they conferred upon him in their generous admiration of his prowess and achievements.

During his membership here, he filled for a considerable part of the time the chairmanship either of Military Affairs, Ways and Means, or the Judiciary; positions of the most arduous, responsible, and honorable character; his elevation to which unmistakably indicated the estimate placed upon his abilities and integrity. And none have or ever will labor with more assiduous disinterestedness, impartiality, and proficiency to fully discharge the duties of the same.

His ceaseless vigils in protecting the people against a profligate or corrupt expenditure of the public funds, rightfully won for him here the merited cognomen of "the watch-dog of the Treasury." The stern and courageous presence of whom in later years would have relieved history of the recitals of robberies and plunderings, the magnitude and turpitude of which has been a just cause of reproach to our people, a humiliation to those who cherish her reputation or who treasure her honor.

Elected to the Senate of the United States in 1865, and shortly after the termination of the war between the United and Confederate States, he was denied admission—an act resulting in more injury to the Government and the people than to himself, and upon the justice of which history has yet to record that unimpassioned and truthful verdict so seldom if ever attained upon partisan representations; or other than "the feelings which inspiring it, rests on a regard for historical truth."

Re-elected by his State after the close of his gubernatorial term, he had not more than assumed the robes of a Senator and entered upon the duties of that august and responsible trust, when the icy fingers of the Pale Messenger loosened the heart-strings of life. But his last words on earth, as he was "going out," when he exclaimed to his faithful servant "Give me my shoes, I must go to the Senate," immortalized the devotion with which he had consecrated himself to its fullest exactions, and epitaphed his tomb with the one great cardinal feature of his life—ever to be at the post of duty.

He was furnished his sandals by the Pale Messenger, as he landed him upon the shining shore on eternity's side of the bright river; and he has gone to the Senate composed of the immortals of that celestial world whose presiding officer is the great "I Am;" where his imperfections and frailties here have been swallowed up and expiated by the entry made in its momentous, imperishable journals of "well done, good and faithful servant."

Should we not all take heed and so apply our hearts to wisdom that we may inherit that welcome plaudit, a legacy infinitely beyond all others in its priceless value, its unending bestowals?

Mr. Speaker, when on the last day of last year

The spring of life gently ceased,
And angels wafted his soul to peace, that potent voice, whose utterances to or for his people were the words of soberness and truth, wisdom and statesmanship, was silenced in their behalf forever; that heart glowing with a desire ever to promote the general welfare of his country, by a ceaseless devotion to the substantial and permanent interests of his people and which pulsated in sadness for their woes, in joy for their weal, sounded its last thrilling key-note in their behalf forever; that intellect, gigantic in its structure, powerful in its development, penetrating in its force, profound in its researches, solid in its conclusions, unwavering in its decisions, and which was watchful and active in the advancement of his country's best interest, his peoples' highest welfare, scintillated its last golden thought of solicitude in their behalf forever.

At such a loss how eminently becoming that the chief executive of his State should make public proclamation thereof, with tender of his sympathies to his people, and with the officers of State should close its departments, array in mourning its capitol, and hasten to the distant home of the deceased to add to the swelling throng that stood in unconsolled bereavement around his bier.

Such a loss could not—yes, should not—fail to deeply affect the public mind with impressive sadness and grief. No strains in eulogy of the absent one were needful to awaken and open up the deepest feelings of grief in the hearts of those who knew this truly good and great man. Alas! too well for their own consolation did they realize their loss in his death. Full well did they remember that his fidelity to them and their every interest was not within the range or grasp of any or all of the arts of seduction combined to entrap; that his vigilance in the pursuit of their interests, the maintenance of their rights, was above and beyond the influences of any magnetism to divert or any charm to lull to sleep; that his bold, exploring, and expounding intellect was not to be quailed, and only to be quieted in its pursuits when the goal of their successful defense from wrong, their protection from danger, had been attained; that no amount of physical trial or privation, mental struggle or endurance, seemed to impede or enfeeble his action or diminish his resolution when thus engaged; that it were full enough for him to know the ominous finger of duty pointed to the task on behalf of his people, and the same was at once initiated only to be achieved, for, as the great cardinal of France had invoked, in his bright lexicon there was no such word as fail.

With such ennobling traits and their bounteous results adorning and enriching his life-long pathway, what other insignia should crown his noble brow but that of goodness and greatness? If excellency in morals, force in intellect, constitute greatness, their possession by him would have been confirmed in the accredited proof of the trusts confided, the unqualified approval of his demeanor in and discharge of them by the people. If to be honored throughout his days for his prowess, treasured to his death for his fidelity, and embalmed thereafter in the hearts of his people for his goodness constitute greatness, the record of his life displays the one and attests the other, while the voice of his people, heard this day throughout the land, proclaim the last. His was a life of events rather than words; events guarding his pathway as towers of protection, alike repelling the javelins of criticism, the arrows of malice, or the missiles of envy, now standing up as so many monuments, beautified with garlands of the people's approval, bespeaking their devotion to and their grief for him.

The brawny mariner, with a generosity of heart toward his crew as capacious, a love for them as deep, as the fathomless waters upon which he floats, and whose matchless tact and crowning skill mid-ocean's wildest furies had tested, was never more deeply endeared to or more confidently trusted in by them than was he by the people; nor could their grief at the loss of one who had thus piloted them from mid-night's mountainous tempests into the sun-gilded and placid harbor of safety have been more poignant than were those who had thus stood around this political mariner in the perilous storms of the past.

Good mother, weep, Cornelia of the South,
For thou indeed hast lost a jewel son;
The Gracchi great were not so much beloved,
Nor with more worthy deeds their honors won.
Thy stalwart son deserves a Roman's fame,
For Cato was not more supremely just;
Augustus was not greater in the state,
Nor Brutus truer to the public trust.

When the deplorable events of 1861 began to cast their shadows so near as to startle and arouse an astounded world with their grandly awful issues, whose terrific currents were sweeping and counter sweeping into them section against section, that intuitive wisdom, nothing less than the inspiration of true and inherent statesmanship, presided with such vital force in the temple of his mind as to retard his movements. It adjured and constrained him to cling to the Union of the States, for which he had a love akin to adoration, and to which, neither by thought, word, or deed, had he ever been untrue. It admonished and emboldened him to plant himself upon deck as one of the watchful crew of the Federal ship of state, freighted with the covenants and jewels of American freedom, and then ingulfing in the livid billows of the clashing storms. With a ready and cheerful acquiescence did he listen and yield to her potential adjurations up to the moment his State ordained her separation and recalled her allegiance. Then fidelity to his people, that crowning virtue of the heart, panoplied in the sanctions of nature and of nature's God, that shielding and protecting goddess to all the other virtues, assumed and asserted in the temple of his mind her resistless sway.

In obedience to her behests, reluctantly and dejectedly did he turn his back upon the temples of that Union in no wise inimical to him, and left these halls in which he had acted with so much ability throughout a period of long, long years. Unlike the acquired child of Naomi, in her journey to the fruitful and prosperous land of Boaz, he was of the South, to the manner born. By the ties of a blood far thicker and stronger than water, by the impulses of a divinity of his nature that wafted love to all, malice to none, but peerless devotion to his own, her people were his people. By the light of a revelation, truth-inspiring and heaven-exalting, her God was his God. By a heart embowered in the encircling tendrils of the affection and devotion of her people did he unalterably resolve not to be entreated to leave them, and that whithersoever they should go and dwell there would he go and abide. By a constancy incapable of wavering or faltering, where her people died there would he die. And where her people are entombed and being interred, in equal sentiment of sublime devotion with Ruth, there doth he repose. Amid her vine-clad mountains, her flowery, dimpled valleys, radiant with the beams of her bright sunlight, at the golden age of three-score and ten, and full of honors, sleeps in quiet rest the statesman moved by no other impulse but his country's good; the patriot disdaining all lines or sections as circumscribing his endearments and attachments; the neighbor whom the good Samaritan could have greeted as a brother; the friend with whom Damon or Pythias could have locked shields; the husband and father who made his home an Eden and its dearly loved inmates the guardian angels of his life.

In the earlier days of my manhood I was a brief sojourner at Knoxville, in the renowned State of Tennessee, the honored mother of our cherished Senator. Arriving there on a bright Sabbath in November, 1847, in all the loneliness that could envelop one who was a stranger to her entire people, I strolled into her beautiful and attractive cemetery, feeling that I would need no indorsement or introduction to be on terms of welcomed companionship with her noiseless and quiet residents. While lingering in her silent walk-ways and on her treasured earth, my eye was attracted by a commanding shaft whose spire was towering above its associates with imposing beauty and grandeur. When I had neared and confronted it, I saw that it protected the sacred dust and commemorated the blessed memory of her illustrious and immortal son, Hugh Lawson White, that "noblest work of God," who held the inviolability of conscience of far greater moment than a seat in the Senate of the United States, a position he had resigned in preference to fulfilling his State's instructions upon a measure that met with no sanction in that sacred forum. The closing inscription upon that grand token, seen then for the first and until yet the last time in print, sculptured its sublime utterances upon my youthful memory in impressions as nearly perishless as were wrought upon the face of that beautiful monument. And now from that faithful memory, after the lapse of thirty-three years, I here invoke it as a poetical garland equally appropriate to adorn the memory of this her noble son, who was Composed in suffering, in joy sedate;

Good without noise, without pretensions, great;
True to his word, in every thought sincere;
He knew no wish but what the world might hear.

Mr. LOWE. I have the honor, Mr. Speaker, to represent, in part, Governor HOUSTON's old congressional district—his home and his grave—and therefore I beg to add a last word of tribute to his memory. But first let me express my acknowledgments to those gentlemen who, preceding me on this occasion, have so truly and eloquently voiced the general opinion of the country. I desire to reflect the particular sentiments of Governor HOUSTON's own people. He was, sir, a conspicuous figure in Alabama politics. No man has been more honored by the State; no man more trusted by the people. He was a member of this House for eighteen years; chairman in turn of each of its principal committees; influential with the ruling party of the country and busy in public affairs during the most interesting and instructive period of our history. He was twice governor of Alabama and twice elected to the United States Senate.

He was not, sir, what is commonly called a "man of genius." He did not possess that singular gift, that dangerous faculty, that rare personal magnetism to make men instinctively follow after him without a motive, or believe in him without a reason. But he was a strong, sagacious, useful man of affairs; with the supreme good sense to see at any time what was best to be said or to be done; and with the ability, tact, and prestige to say it or do it. He sought, as was said of another, "to serve, rather than to please the people." The sheer strength that never failed him in a political contest grew, I think, more out of his efficiency as a politician than out of his popularity as a man. Although personally loved and lamented, the fact is, and he gloried in it, that through an honest, impartial public service he won political success by deserving it.

He was not an orator in the ordinary, popular sense. In elocution he attempted no flights of imagination and eloquence. Yet in joint discussion he was thought to be without doubt the best debater, the most dangerous antagonist, in the State. I have heard him often. He seldom wrote or published his speeches, yet all the country-side in North Alabama abounds with popular traditions of his triumphs in argument, wit, humor, anecdote, rough and ready debate on the hustings and before the masses. In conversation with myself and a few other friends some months before his death, he said it was his habit not to memorize or read his remarks; that he rarely framed set phrases and sentences in advance, but studied rather to understand and to be understood, trusting more to the fullness of his information, on a given subject, than to memory or manuscript.

His election as Governor, after a long retirement, was his return to public life. It was also the renaissance of his party. His administration, being sustained in the most part by the property, conservatism, and intelligence of the community, brought order out of reconstruction, and gave a normal and settled appearance to society. It restored confidence to the people and credit to the State.

Senator HOUSTON in all his views was eminently patriotic and conservative. He stood, sir, between the extreme opinions of his day; antagonizing the "dogmas of secession" on one side and the "horrors of coercion" on the other. He desired above all things to maintain existing institutions. He saw himself a citizen of the greatest, freest Republic in the world. It was the crisis of the country, the climactic period of 1860. The nation then was at the zenith of its glory; the Augustan age revived, and that, too, under higher forms and better auspices. He saw around him a new and splendid civilization; the result of our common victories in war and peace—agriculture, commerce, manufactures, the mechanic arts, science, literature, popular education, security to life, protection to property—in other words, he saw and felt the reality of all that material prosperity, individual happiness, and political tranquillity which defines "the blessings of liberty" established by the Constitution. It was natural, therefore, that he should be conservative, distrustful of new ventures and experiments. He was himself, sir, not only a free citizen of this great Government, but an honored representative from its happiest, proudest, richest section. He wanted no change, much less revolution. Acting from these considerations, he alone of the delegation from Alabama advocated in the House in the last hours of the session the famous compromise committee of thirty-three members, one from each State, to reconcile, if possible, the conflicting interests and feelings which then threatened the country. He seems to have looked to that committee with profound solicitude as the forlorn hope of the Union, or rather as the poet has it—

The full of hope, miscalled forlorn.

The result, Mr. Speaker, is history—a bitter chapter. I need not dwell upon it. But surely, sir, if the men of 1860, his contemporaries in and out of Congress, had been as considerate, as thoughtful, as wise in their generation as he was, the most shameful and distressing page in American history would not, perhaps, have been written. Had his advice been heeded, no drop of American blood would ever have been shed in fraternal conflict. I pay him, therefore, this tribute. He stood by the country until the last southern star had faded from the flag; until every mental and moral resource had failed; until the Union in fact and in sentiment was dissolved. He then sacrificed his opinions and went with his State, "to share," as he then avowed, "the fortunes of her people." But he did not favor the movement, he did not provoke it; he acquiesced in it, but his judgment, his wisdom was against it. This is his eulogy. As Congressman, governor, Senator, he will take rank in history as the last representative leader of the old national democracy of Alabama.

Mr. Speaker, after eighteen years of almost continuous service, Governor HOUSTON left the House in 1861, and only returned last year to take a seat in the Senate. The Government, with a mighty impulse, had rushed ahead of him a score of years in time and a century in change, progress, development. He must have felt the flight of years and the changes in administration, but, sir, he seemed entirely equal to his exalted position. He sought, with the prudence and circumspection which characterized his life—boni senatoris prudentia—to adapt himself to the altered conditions of the country; and to practice that "statesmanship" which, Mr. Madison said, "is the science of circumstances." He engaged to some extent in the business and debates, especially on politico-economic questions, which occupied the Senate last spring. He ranged himself then, as heretofore, with the many against the few, with the people against classes and corporations. He was consistent with himself; he kept the tenor of his thoughts and actions harmonious to the end. In the truest sense, sir, he was a man of the people. Had he lived, I feel assured, he would have served the country, and the whole country, as well in the future as in the past.

Among the famous sons of Alabama who served in the old Congress in the Senate or in the House, I recur with pride to the names of Bagby, Bowdon, King, Lewis, Chambers, Pickens, the elder Walker, Harris, Yancey, Clemens, Dargan, and others. They form a galaxy of great men who have contributed largely to the honor and influence of the State and to the dignity and character of the whole country. But, sir, it is not invidious to say that none of them has done better service or more of it than HOUSTON; none has left with the people a stronger, cleaner, better record.

The death of such a man, Mr. Speaker, is always deplorable; but when he holds high place it becomes a public calamity. The reputation, the good fame he leaves behind him, is indeed our recompense. And in this respect, sir, the dead Senator, full of honors as of years, will not be lacking. The sturdy forces of his mind and character have made a lasting impression on the State.

Time hath, my Lord, a wallet on his back,
Wherein he puts alms for oblivion.

We naturally strive to withhold the better things of life from the gloomy forgetfulness of the grave. And so, sir, the example of GEORGE S. HOUSTON, through a long career of honest, patriotic public service, remains to us—a lesson to his contemporaries, a legacy to posterity. He died as he had lived, in the confidence of the country. Peace to his ashes! Honor to his memory!

Mr. Speaker, I now move the adoption of the resolutions offered by my colleague, [Mr. FORNEY,] and that, as a further mark of respect for the deceased, the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions submitted by Mr. FORNEY were then unanimously adopted.

The motion of Mr. LOWE was then agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 4, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 68) to authorize the printing of 13,000 copies of the Report on Sheep Husbandry was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers concerning the payment of the second installment of the annual compensation to James B. Eads, for maintenance of the channel at the South Pass, Mississippi River, for the quarter ending February 9, 1880, and payment of the first installment of interest on $1,000,000 for the six months ending February 9, 1880; which, on motion of Mr. BECK, was referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, covering a copy of a report of Captain C. B. Phillips, Corps of Engineers, upon examinations and surveys of York River, and of Lynn Haven, Link Horn, and Broad Bays, Virginia, made in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 4903) to provide for the purchase of a site for a post-office and other Government buildings in the city of Baltimore, Maryland; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of the Grand Division Sons of Temperance of the State of Ohio, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to public revenue and taxation, to crime, pauperism, the public health, morals, education, &c., and also the results of license, restrictive and prohibitory legislation in the several States and in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOOTH presented the petition of ship-owners and shipping merchants of San Francisco, California, praying for the passage of a bill to abolish the system of compulsory pilotage which now exists in many States, so that one of the heavy burdens on American commerce may be removed; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN presented additional papers in relation to the claim of George F. Brott, assignee of Brott, Davis & Sohns, for certain cotton taken from the schooner Sea Lion by the United States authorities during the late war; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I present the memorial of a large number of shoe manufacturers of the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the extension of the McKay patent for an improvement in sewing-machines. As the memorial is very short, only covering seven or eight lines, I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be reported at length, if there be no objection.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Patents, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives composing the Forty-sixth Congress:

1. We, the undersigned, shoe manufacturers of the State of New Jersey, do hereby remonstrate against having the patents of the McKay Sewing-Machine Association extended, and petition your honorable body not to grant the McKay Machine Association extension of their patents.

2. And your petitioners would humbly show that the McKay Sewing-Machine Association are the largest money monopolists in this country, having already gained six or seven millions of dollars, or more, since the patents were extended them; which is more than an adequate reward for the invention.

3. And your petitioners would further show that the McKay Sewing-Machine Association are avaricious and not at all liberal, as the manufacturers have very heavy royalties to pay and have paid them these many years, besides the enormous prices they are obliged to pay for duplicate parts which are continually needed to keep the machines in order, and which could be procured for one quarter of the cost which they are compelled to pay to the McKay Sewing-Machine Association if said patents should not be extended.

4. And your petitioners would also represent that all of the shoe manufacturers that are in favor of an extension of the patents of the McKay Sewing-Machine Association are stockholders of the same and draw about 35 per cent. dividends quarterly; and for the above and many other reasons your petitioners humbly request your honorable bodies to do all in your power to frustrate this great monopoly by opposing the bill granting the McKay Sewing-Machine Company an extension of their patents.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of G. W. Sherwood and others, citizens of Wyoming County, Pennsylvania, and the petition of J. N. McDaniel and others, citizens of Bedford County, Pennsylvania, praying such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which were referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of J. K. Hubler and others, citizens of Wyoming County, Pennsylvania, and the petition of citizens of Bedford County, Pennsylvania, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Wyoming County, Pennsylvania, and the petition of citizens of East Providence, Bedford County, Pennsylvania, in favor of the creation of an agricultural department; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. CONKLING. I have a petition to present, but before doing so I ask to be indulged in a remark. I observe that the practice is becoming quite frequent in the Senate of having petitions read at length, not because, as I can see, they are more important than other petitions. That is a violation of the rule, and moreover, as is more to the purpose, it puts other Senators in rather an awkward position. Here, for example, in my hand, is a memorial on a very important subject, signed by 1,158 leading representatives of a great interest. Under the rules I cannot properly have this memorial read at length and go into the RECORD, and yet I do not like to object to a Senator having any petition read at length which he chooses.

I make this remark entirely in good part, and in deference to every Senator, to show that I think we ought to have equality of understanding here, and if some petitions are to be read at length and put in the RECORD, then other petitions as important should be read at length also. But not understanding that that is the right of a Senator under any rule of the Senate, I will present two very important memorials, as I conceive they are, in the ordinary way.

I present the memorial of ship-owners of the United States who, I am told, represent together some millions of money invested in the enterprise with which they are connected, remonstrating against the passage of any bill to introduce foreign-bought vessels, and give them American registers, deeming such introduction unwholesome and pernicious competition with our own industries. I suppose the memorial goes properly to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a petition signed by 1,158 of leading representatives of the foreign commerce of the country residing in different ports, praying for the passage of an amendment to chapter 5, title 53, of the Revised Statutes, designed to remove the onerous burden imposed upon American commerce by the operation of the present law requiring the payment of three months' extra wages to seamen discharged in foreign ports, and intended fully to protect the interests of seamen also. This petition I suppose goes properly to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. RANDOLPH presented the memorial of shoe manufacturers of New Jersey, remonstrating against the extension of the McKay patent for an improvement in sewing-machines; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. EATON presented the petition of the National Board of Trade, praying for the passage of a law which will improve the present method of the transportation of live stock; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Territories, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1418) to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1161) creating the port of Tampa, Florida, a port of entry, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," reported it with amendments.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1320) for the construction of a building for the use of the United States at Toledo, Ohio, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 794) to provide for a building suitable for a post-office, for the accommodation of the revenue officers, and the United States courts and their officers, in the city of Charleston, West Virginia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GORDON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the memorial of officers and members of the Tobacco Board of Trade of Nashville, Tennessee, in favor of such action by Congress as will cause France, Spain, Italy, and Austria to abolish their government monopolies and permit open markets for the sale of leaf-tobacco, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FERRY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1419) authorizing the Postmaster-General to adopt a uniform canceling ink and stamping pad; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLAIR asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1420) to provide for the payment of pensions to their widows and minor children upon the death of pensioners totally disabled from wounds received in the service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1421) to make the crime of rape in the District of Columbia punishable with death; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BOOTH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1422) to amend section 1556 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COKE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1423) for the relief of William J. Budd; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INDIANS AS CITIZENS.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 88) declaring that Indians are citizens of the United States; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the joint resolution go upon the Calendar, unless some Senator desires that it should be referred to a committee. I ask that the Secretary report the joint resolution at this time for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas it is declared in the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside," and that "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws:"

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Indians born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are "persons" within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, and such persons are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside, and are subject to the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At the proper time I think the joint resolution ought to be referred to some committee. It involves a very important question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator submit a motion to refer?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely mention the matter because of the remark dropped by the Senator from Alabama that unless somebody desired it to be referred to a committee, he would like (as I inferred) to have it put upon its passage without a reference. I think at some time it should be referred to a committee for careful examination.

Mr. MORGAN. I would not attempt ordinarily to bring a matter of this importance before the Senate without the action of some appropriate committee. At the same time, however, I think a committee can throw very little light upon it, because there are no facts to be ascertained, that I am aware of, for the purpose of determining whether the Indians are persons within the meaning of the first section of the fourteenth article of amendments to the Constitution. Inasmuch as every Senator will vote on his own judgment upon this great proposition of constitutional law whenever the matter comes before the Senate, and inasmuch also as this is getting to be a question which must be settled, and in view of the important legislation which is being reported from committees upon this subject, I thought that, perhaps, the Senate might prefer to have the discussion within the body of the Senate, and directly upon this proposition, so that we might have the benefit of all the information and of all the opinions of Senators here that would by a reference be expended upon the subject in the body of a committee.

I should like to say further that I am not able to conceal from my own mind the fact that the proposition that is advanced in this joint resolution is the key of every question that comes before the Senate in regard to the Indian tribes. They are either citizens of the United States, or they are members of some independent tribal bodies within our jurisdiction, not being citizens, not entitled to the protection of the Constitution of the United States, its privileges and its immunities, and liable to its burdens. They occupy the one category or the other, and all the legislation that comes into the Senate must be predicated upon the one proposition or upon the other.

Now, it seems to me to be the first essential duty of the Government to ascertain what are its own constitutional relations to this body of people, amounting to more than two hundred and fifty thousand I believe—seventy-three different tribes, speaking thirty different dialects, within our own borders. If the joint resolution must go to a committee; if it is the understanding that it is better it shall go to a committee as being more in conformity with the usages of the Senate and more likely to get a discussion full and clear, in view of the constitutional question involved in it, I hope that whatever committee it may be sent to will expedite the measure as far as possible in order that we may settle this great elementary and leading proposition before we get into the details of further legislation in regard to the Indian tribes. I have no objection to referring the joint resolution, as has been suggested by the Senator from Vermont.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the proper reference would be to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to make a remark on the motion to refer. I believe that is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is in order.

Mr. GARLAND. I am very glad the Senator from Alabama has seen proper to bring this question directly before the Senate. We have never had a question connected with these people, it makes no difference how insignificant in itself it may be, that does not resolve itself back to this very point, as the Senator from Alabama has already indicated. We had a bill before us a few days since in reference to stealing horses and mules from Indians, and the discussion upon that bill had not proceeded twenty minutes before it came back to this original proposition.

It is high time, in my judgment, that Congress should settle this question. I believe in the theory indicated by the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Alabama, that the fourteenth amendment made these people citizens, and it was to that extent self-executing and no further legislation on the subject was needed; but upon that point there is a wide difference of opinion among gentlemen. The Committee on the Judiciary, several years ago, made quite an elaborate report, contending against that position. I believe, with the joint resolution, that they are citizens. I think it might go to the appropriate committee, however, and I join with the Senator from Alabama in the hope that the committee shall make as early a report as is possible upon this proposition, that we may settle the question lying at the foundation of all matters connected with the treatment of these people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DISTRICT POLICE FORCE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 19th ultimo, a full and specific statement of the name, age, place of nativity, and date of appointment of each policeman and watchman belonging to the police force of the District, also of the service of each in the Army or Navy of the United States, &c.; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

INDIAN DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call up this morning House bill No. 4432. Mr. ANTHONY rose.

Mr. ALLISON. It is an Indian deficiency appropriation bill, and will take probably five minutes to dispose of it. It is very important that the bill shall be passed and finally disposed of during the present week.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am too much attached to the traditions of the Senate to oppose the Committee on Appropriations when they desire to take up an appropriation bill, but I hope my friend from Iowa will allow the Calendar to have an hour this morning. It has been cheated out of its rights day after day by other business.

While I am up I will make a suggestion to the Committee on Appropriations. When I first came into the Senate, which is twenty-one years ago to-day, there was no Committee on Appropriations; the Finance Committee had charge of the appropriation bills, and after they had completed a bill and were ready to report it, it was the habit to refer the bill informally to the committee that had charge of the subject of the appropriation—the naval appropriation bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Indian appropriation bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs, the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The bill was then considered by the second committee, and their amendments were sent to the Committee on Appropriations, some of which were adopted and some of which were not. When the bill came into the Senate the second committee had the precedence, after the Committee on Appropriations, in having its amendments considered. I think that practice was a very good one. I suggest no rule on the subject—no rule ever existed—but I make the suggestion in the hearing of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much obliged to the Senator for the suggestion; and it so happens with reference to the particular bill which I ask to call up this morning, that it has received the careful consideration of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as well as of the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations propose no amendments to the bill. They recommend its passage precisely as it came from the House of Representatives. I ask that it be taken up this morning only because it will be inconvenient for me to be here during the whole of this day. I would have had it taken up yesterday but that I was unable to be present in the Senate. If there is no special objection, I trust the bill will be considered now.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall make no objection, Mr. President.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4432) making additional appropriations for the support of certain Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1880.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF DESERTION CHARGES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now proceed with the call of the Calendar, under the standing order of the day, commencing at the point reached on yesterday.

The bill (S. No. 876) for the relief of Edward Corselius and seven other persons, late members of the First Michigan Cavalry Veteran Volunteers, was announced as being first in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over. I have not had time to examine the remarks and statements made in the Senate yesterday in regard to the bill.

Mr. FERRY. Then I ask that it be passed over temporarily, to be called again. As I indicated yesterday there is correspondence pending with the Department on this subject. I was there this morning, and expected to receive a communication from the Department, but it was not quite ready. I expected to find it here by this time, but it is not here yet.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill take its course on the Calendar with the other cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri objects, and the bill goes over under the rule.

SILVER COINAGE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 564) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to coinage and coin and bullion certificates, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That bill was adversely reported. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from West Virginia to object.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I see by the Calendar that there is an adverse report upon the bill, and that is always in the nature of an objection, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The parliamentary question, when a bill is reported adversely and placed on the Calendar, is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read the third time?

Mr. MORRILL. Let the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make that motion?

Mr. MORRILL. I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Vermont moves that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I prefer that the bill should go over, as it is now on the Calendar. The chairman of the Finance Committee is not present, and it appears he reported the bill. I suppose he asked that it should go on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. He reported it adversely. I have no feeling about it. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the bill had better go over, and not be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A single objection carries the bill over.

DUTY ON A CHURCH WINDOW.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (H. R. No. 153) authorizing the remission or refunding of duty on a stained-glass window, from Munich, Germany, for All Saint's Church, in Saint Michael's parish, in Talbot County, Maryland.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise to object to that joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is objected to, and will be passed over.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) granting condemned cannon to the Morton Monumental Association.

Mr. MAXEY. There are several similar measures, one just after the other, on the Calendar, donating condemned cannon. After the report of the committee on the 3d of February, a communication was received from the Secretary of War, which is Executive Document No. 70, showing that there are no condemned bronze cannon belonging to the United States Government from which donations can be made. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that all of the bills on the Calendar relating to condemned cannon be indefinitely postponed, in accordance with the present action of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WITHERS. Because there are none?

Mr. MAXEY. There are none. The Secretary of War has made that statement to us.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I prefer not to have an indefinite postponement. Some modification may be made of the pending bill by striking out the donation of bronze cannon and substituting therefor iron cannon.

I am aware, as the Senator from Texas has stated, that the War Department have notified the Military Committee that there are no more bronze cannon to be donated, and therefore the passage of bills donating bronze cannon is totally unnecessary.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the joint resolution be recommitted.

Mr. RANDOLPH. My memory is that this joint resolution donates iron cannon, and therefore it should be passed.

Mr. TELLER. Let the joint resolution be read so that we may see what it is.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Let it be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to give the Morton Monumental Association of the United States four condemned and unserviceable bronze cannon and thirty-six cannon-balls, for casting a statue of Oliver P. Morton, late a Senator from Indiana, to be erected at the city of Indianapolis, Indiana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1056) donating six condemned iron cannon to John D. Musser Post, No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muncy, Pennsylvania, to build a fence around the soldiers' monument in the Muncy cemetery.

Mr. WALLACE. I think a bill exactly like that has already passed the Senate. I ask that it go over until I examine into the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3562) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Birmingham, Connecticut.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the bill be recommitted. That I may not be misunderstood, I desire to state that the Committee on Military Affairs has, since the reception of the letter of the Secretary of War of February 5, 1880, showing that there was no condemned bronzed cannon on hand, reported adversely upon similar measures, for the reasons set forth in the letter of the Secretary of War.

The motion to recommit was agreed to.

PORT GRATIOT RESERVE.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 3) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell or lease to the Port Huron and Northwestern Railway Company a portion of the Port Gratiot military reserve, and to authorize the city of Port Huron to grant to said railway company the right of way through Pine Grove Park; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARPENTER. Is there any sum fixed in that joint resolution at which the reserve shall be sold, or any method of ascertaining what it is worth?

Mr. FERRY. The joint resolution passed the Military Committee and the Appropriations Committee at the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress, and has repassed the Military Committee at this session. There is a report in the case. The joint resolution authorizes the Secretary of War to sell or lease. The Government has already sold six hundred acres out of about six hundred and forty, and forty remain undisposed of. This resolution provides for the sale or lease of a right of way to the width of one hundred feet, in the discretion of the Secretary of War. As I have said, the joint resolution was before the Senate last year; passed the Military Committee, and was before the Committee on Appropriations on the appropriation bill, and was reported by that committee, but on account of the irrelevancy of the subject it was stricken off—not by a decision against its merits, but simply because it did not apply to the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to hear the report read in this case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. RANDOLPH February 3, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution (S. R. No. 3) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell or lease to the Port Huron and Northwestern Railway Company a portion of the Port Gratiot military reserve, and to authorize the city of Port Huron to grant the said railway company the right of way through Pine Grove Park, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The Secretary of War, in a letter dated February 21, 1878, relating to this bill, transmits a report on the matter made by Colonel O. M. Poe, United States Engineers. The letter of the Secretary of War, embracing Colonel Poe's report, is as follows:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 24, 1878.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date inclosing Senate resolution 68, 'to authorize the Secretary of War to sell or lease to the Port Huron and Northwestern Railway Company a portion of the Port Gratiot military reserve, and to authorize the city of Port Huron to grant to said railway company the right of way through Pine Grove Park,' with request that the Committee on Military Affairs be informed at an early day respecting the same.

"Colonel O. M. Poe, United States Engineers, to whom the matter was referred, reports as follows:

"In my opinion, the right of way might be granted as proposed, upon a lease terminable at the pleasure of the United States authorities.

"If a sale be made, it should not be limited to a mere strip of 100 feet in width, after passing to the southward of the Grand Trunk Railroad, but should include the entire area bounded by Stone street, Thomas street, and the grounds of the Grand Trunk Railroad Company, for the reason that the occupation of the strip proposed will seriously impair the value of the remainder of the ground included within these boundaries, a fact made apparent by a glance at the map. To this the Port Huron and Northwestern Railway Company cannot reasonably object, for the ground is valuable, and any impairment of its value should be borne by the railway company.

"The report of Colonel Poe is concurred in by this Department.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"GEO. W. MCCRARY,
Secretary of War.

"CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate."

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. This is a matter as to which I make no claim to specific knowledge, but it is one of a series of measures of this sort to which my attention has heretofore been called, one or two of them arising in my own State, and several elsewhere. I venture to express a doubt whether such a bill or resolution as this in such a case is safe legislation.

This joint resolution proposes to commit to the Secretary of War discretion to sell or to lease to the "Port Huron and Northwestern Railway Company, a strip of land, not exceeding one hundred feet in width, along the western line of the Port Gratiot military reserve, to the Grand Trunk Railroad intersection thereof."

First, I object to committing to the Secretary of War discretion either to sell the fee-simple of a parcel of a military reserve, or to lease it for a term of years absolute or by a terminable lease, or for such other period as he chooses to determine. And second, in this case I object to it especially because if I understand the letter which was read on which this recommendation is founded, it is very specific to the point that this gore, this strip of land through this reservation ought not to be sold, and if a sale is to be made the parcel of the reservation should go with it, which will be isolated, cut off, rendered inconvenient by the sale of this strip; and yet in the face of that this resolution proposes to commit to the Secretary of War the discretion either to lease this strip for just as long or just as short a time as he pleases, and on such terms as he pleases, or to sell only so much of this reservation as constitutes this strip one hundred feet wide. That has been, if I understand the reading of that communication, expressly condemned in it.

I think Congress ought to determine whether a military reservation or a parcel of it is to be sold or not, and I think that determination ought in general terms to define the conditions on which the sale is to be made, and at all events specify the parcel of the reservation which is to be sold.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator from New York will allow me, I will say to him that under several acts of Congress all of this reservation, with the exception of these forty acres, has been sold. The original reservation was a section, six hundred and forty acres. About six hundred acres of the reservation have already been sold. The company are perfectly willing to purchase the whole of it, but did not ask for that, and only applied for enough to carry out an object they had in view, and that was a strip of land one hundred feet, the usual width, in order to reach the city. Their junction is outside of the city. The common council, and all the citizens owning property along the line of the route to the point where they wish to erect their depot, have given the right of way, conditioned on their getting through this military reservation. The company did not ask to purchase the whole, but they would be very willing to do it. If the Senator from New York will modify the joint resolution to cover what he takes exception to, I shall have no objection whatever.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Senator from Michigan will not suppose that I am trying to prevent the railway company from getting this reservation—not at all. I have already disclaimed any knowledge of this particular case, and the remarks I venture to make are addressed only to those considerations applicable to all these cases alike. Now listen to what the report is that comes from the Secretary of War:

If a sale be made, it should not be limited to a mere strip of one hundred feet in width, after passing to the southward of the Grand Trunk Railroad, but should include the entire area bounded by Stone street, Thomas street, and the grounds of the Grand Trunk Railroad Company, for the reason that the occupation of the strip proposed will seriously impair the value of the remainder of the ground included within these boundaries, a fact made apparent by a glance at the map.

Basing a report of a committee upon that statement, it is proposed to empower the Secretary of War to do the very thing which this report says it is obvious, it is apparent by a glance at the map, never should be done. Well, Mr. President, I think calling attention to this will not be misunderstood by the Senate as a wish to defeat this railway company, which I know nothing about, in making progress across this reservation if it should, on any terms which are proper; but when the officer of the Government detailed to make the observation says to us that it is an improvident thing which no owner of property would do; and the joint resolution comes in and proposes that very thing, I venture to call attention to it, deferring of course to the superior knowledge of the Senator from Michigan in whose State it is.

Mr. FERRY. I would suggest, then, to the Senator from New York that he modify the joint resolution to cover the whole tract, allowing the Secretary of War to sell the land, giving him the discretion either to sell or lease. The railroad company desire to reach a point where they can erect a depot. They do not care particularly whether they have one hundred feet or purchase the whole tract, if the Government require it of them. Their object is to reach a certain point, and it would seem as though there could be no objection—certainly the Senator from New York offers none—and if it can be reached by including all that comes within the report of the Engineer Department, I shall be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. CONKLING. I must beg the Senator from Michigan to excuse me from offering such an amendment as he proposes, for two reasons. In the first place, I have no responsibility or knowledge about this matter which enable me to frame a proper amendment with any certainty; and in the next place, I certainly should not offer it, nor should I with my present lights, vote for such an amendment as he now suggests, namely an amendment committing to the Secretary of War that very discretion which in my opinion should never be committed to anybody in such a case. The United States owns a military reservation. Congress proposes to determine whether a part or the whole of that reservation should be disposed of or not. In such a case I insist Congress should have the facts before it on which the determination should be made, and it should not commit to the discretion of an executive officer, as he pleases, and as the Senator now proposes, either to sell the fee-simple, or to lease for such a time and on such terms as he, under persuasions brought to bear upon him, can make up his mind are best. I would not commit to any officer such a power. If I were the owner of a piece of real estate, I might have an agent and commit to him certain discretion; but I certainly should not commit to him the discretion either to sell it or to lease it on just such terms and conditions and for just such time and with just such arrangements all around as he might please.

Mr. DAWES. And for any consideration he pleased.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no consideration stated here. It is a carte blanche to the Secretary of War to do just what he pleases. In legal phrase, it gives him the absolute jus disponendi of the whole thing. If it was some place in Asia which Congress could not visit, and in respect of which it could not ascertain the facts, and it was going to send a plenipotentiary to dispose of it, such very wide powers as these might be defensible; but in regard to a matter that we know all about, if we are going to legislate in regard to it, why should we not determine whether the land shall be sold or whether it shall be leased, and if leased, for how long; and as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests there should be something about the consideration and conditions; and then let the Secretary of War act accordingly.

Mr. FERRY. I would state in this connection that already by action of Congress the Secretary of War has been authorized to dispose of six hundred of the six hundred and forty acres without fixing any consideration whatever—a bill similar in terms to the one now pending.

Mr. CONKLING. Either to lease or sell?

Mr. FERRY. Either to lease or sell; simply those terms. I am not captious about this matter and, following the suggestion made by the Senator from New York, I ask that the joint resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs to cover just the point made by the Senator from New York, that the Department be authorized to sell or lease the whole. To that I trust there will be no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. Let me suggest to the Senator in that connection that if provision is to be made for a sale, provision should be made in the bill for an appraisal of the land by some officer of the Government, some officer of the Engineer Corps, if you please, in the neighborhood, and then it should not be sold for a less sum than that.

Mr. COCKRELL. In these cases it is usual for the bill to specify that the Secretary of War shall have the land appraised and not sell it at less than its appraised value, wherever its value has been enhanced by reason of the surroundings or by reason of any improvements upon it.

Mr. FERRY. I would reply to the Senator from Missouri by stating that that has been the course the Government has pursued in each case wherever a sale has been made. An appraisal has been had under the regulations of the Department. That course would be followed in this instance.

Mr. CONKLING. If that is so, it seems to me a most excellent reason why it should appear in the bill. But I seek permission to make a single remark further. If any bill which has ever passed the Senate since I have had the honor of a seat here, giving to the Secretary of War, or anybody else unbridled discretion to sell or to lease for such time, at such price, on such terms as he chooses to determine, a military reservation of this Government, it escaped my attention. I do not doubt the Senator's word, but I am only putting in an apology for myself. Had I ever heard such a bill read, as I hear this read this morning, I should have ventured to ask as I did here after the reading of the report, and I think I should have had the courage to at least call the attention of the Senate to the point involved.

Mr. FERRY. My recollection does not serve me as to this specific reservation, but I remind the Senator of the case of Mackinaw, where a sale was made to individuals, and the bill authorized the Secretary of War to sell a portion of that, and under regulations an appraisal was had and a sale made.

Mr. CONKLING. Now the Senator is stating a case, as I understand him, such as I say the bill ought to be. He says that bill authorized the sale of certain portions of that reservation. That is all right. What I object to is, a bill which authorizes the sale or not, the leasing or not, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary himself may determine. I do not deny that such bills have been passed; I do deny that such a bill ever passed in the Senate to which my attention at the time was called.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from New York will remember that the joint resolution specifies one hundred feet wide. It is specific.

Mr. CONKLING. As to that yes; but as to everything else utterly indefinite.

Mr. FERRY. I move that the joint resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

D. T. KIRBY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 965) for the relief of D. T. Kirby; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Captain D. T. Kirby to a captaincy in the infantry arm of the service, to be assigned to the first vacancy in that arm of the service, to take rank from date of confirmation by the Senate: Provided, That no pay or allowance shall be paid to said D. T. Kirby, from date of dismissal from the United States service, for time from that date up to his reappointment under this act.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there a report in that case, Mr. President?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] made a written report in the case.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to hear the report. I presume it is a good one.

Mr. TELLER. Let the bill go over; it will lead to some discussion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think there will be any discussion.

Mr. TELLER. There is sure to be. The report is a long one, and the Senator who made the report is not here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM GAINES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2902) to place

William Gaines, late ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a general bill pending before the Senate, reported by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] from the Committee on Military Affairs, in regard to the question here involved, and I think it is best that this case should lie over until the Senate has acted on that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SITE OF FORT STOCKTON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1205) to enable the Secretary of War to acquire for the United States the title to the site of Fort Stockton, Texas.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY], who has charge of the bill, whether the land proposed to be acquired belongs to the State of Texas.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Chair will order the report to be read, it will show fully the facts in the case.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY February 4, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the letter of the Secretary of War, dated January 5 instant, being Executive Document No. 25, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, respectfully submit the following report:

Said letter is as follows:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 5, 1880.

"The Secretary of War has the honor to recommend to the United States Senate such legislation as will provide for the acquisition by the United States of the title to the lands upon which Fort Stockton, Texas is situated, and to present for consideration the following facts:

"Camp (now Fort) Stockton was occupied by Company H, First Infantry, in conformity with Special Orders No. 20, headquarters Department of Texas, dated San Antonio, March 23, 1859, said company relieving detachments of the First and Eighth Infantry, which were ordered to same place by Special Orders No. 5, Department of Texas, dated January 8, 1859. The post was occupied by United States troops until April or May, 1861, when it was abandoned. It was reoccupied July 7, 1867, and has remained in the possession of the United States troops to the present date. The boundaries and limits of the post were duly announced in Special Orders No. 96, Department of Texas, dated May 15, 1871.

"Under date of May 20, 1874, the then Secretary of War transmitted to the House of Representatives copies of reports of a board of officers constituted by Special Orders No. 156, of 1873, from this Department, pursuant to the act approved March 3, 1873, entitled 'An act to provide for the purchase, by the Secretary of War, of land for the United States, in the State of Texas, for the site of forts and military posts.' Said reports (published in House of Representatives Executive Document No. 282, Forty-third Congress, first session) embraced a recommendation for the purchase of the land occupied by Fort Stockton, which was stated to be owned by Peter Gallagher, of San Antonio, and for which, in the opinion of the board, $12,000 was a reasonable price.

"No action, however, was taken by Congress upon the subject.

"By an act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, dated February 13, 1854, supplementary to an act dated December 19, 1849, it is provided that 'in all cases where the State of Texas may be the owner of the land which the United States may select and wish to acquire and occupy for any purposes specified in the first section of the act to which this is supplemental (i. e., for light-houses, forts, garrisons, military stations, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, &c.) it shall be lawful for the governor of this State to contract and agree for the sale thereof, and upon the payment thereof by the United States of the purchase-money into the Treasury of the State, it shall be the duty of the commissioner of the general land office, upon the order of the governor, to issue a patent to the United States in like manner as other patents are issued.'

"It appears that when the post of Fort Stockton was established, in 1859, and also when it was reoccupied, in 1867, the land covered thereby was vacant and unappropriated domain of the State of Texas, and, if such was its condition, the land was then open to selection by the United States for the purpose of a military post, under the act of 1854, above cited. It does not appear, however, that any measures were taken to acquire title thereto as contemplated by that act.

"In the case of the land occupied by Fort Quitman, the status of which case was the same as that of the case now in question, the Attorney-General, in October, 1870, decided, in effect, that inasmuch as the land was, at the time of its occupation by United States troops, public domain of the State of Texas, its occupation was, under the act of February 13, 1854, (above cited,) a sufficient selection within the meaning of that act to withdraw the land from public entry, and that the United States acquired by its simple occupation an inchoate title, which might be perfected at any time thereafter.

"Under date of September 18, 1879, the subject was submitted by this Department to the Attorney-General, with request for such legal action as might be practicable or desirable to secure the title of the United States to the land now in question. In his reply, dated December 2, 1879, the Attorney-General expresses the opinion that the only course which the circumstances of the case now call for is to proceed under the act of the Legislature of Texas of 1854, already referred to, which course is necessary to obtain the title in any event, and that the result will show what obstacles, if any, exist to prevent the Government from securing the title.

"The importance of Fort Stockton as a military post, and the necessity for its maintenance, render it particularly desirable that the Government should own the land upon which it is situated; but as no proceedings can be instituted for the condemnation of the land without authority of Congress, and as the purchase of land on account of the United States, except under a law authorizing such purchase, is expressly prohibited, (Revised Statutes, section 3736,) the subject is thus presented with earnest recommendation for such legislation as will enable the Government to acquire title to the land in question. The chief quartermaster, Department of Texas, reports, under date of December 18, 1879, that the land contains about one thousand acres, and that the price asked therefor is $18,000.

"It is the intention of the Department, however, to carry out the recommendation of the Attorney-General, and obtain title from the State of Texas, should Congress authorize the purchase of the land.

"ALEX. RAMSEY,
Secretary of War.

"The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE."

In order to ascertain the official survey made of the boundaries and limits of the post as shown by the foregoing letter to be embodied in Special Orders No. 96, May 15, 1871, from the headquarters Department of Texas, Mr. MAXEY, of the committee having the said Executive Document 25 in charge, addressed a letter to the Adjutant-General, who, under date of 31st instant, furnished official copy of said order, as follows:

"[Extract.]

"HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
"(TEXAS AND LOUISIANA.)
"San Antonio, Texas, May 15, 1871.

"[Special Orders No. 96.]

"The report of the board of officers convened at Fort Stockton, Texas, by paragraph 1, Special Orders No. 60, series of 1870, having been duly considered, the following are established as the boundaries and limits of the post of Fort Stockton, Texas, namely:

"The reservation as surveyed by Captain Lewis C. Overman, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, in February, 1871, being one and one-half miles north and south by one mile east and west, taking the center of the present post parade ground for its center point, containing nine hundred and sixty acres, and embracing survey No. 151 and portions of surveys Nos. 150, 204, 215, and 216, as recorded in the general land office of the State of Texas; also the tract of land now used as a post garden, containing about twenty-five acres.

"By command of Colonel J. J. Reynolds:

"H. CLAY WOOD,
"Assistant Adjutant-General.

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, January 31, 1880.

"Official.

"R. C. DRUM,
"Assistant Adjutant-General."

The facts are fully set out in the letter of the Secretary of War, from which it is clear, in the opinion of the committee, that a bill to enable the Secretary of War to purchase said site ought to pass.

It is, in the judgment of the committee, always wise to secure to the United States the exclusive jurisdiction contemplated by the Constitution (Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 17) over its forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings. The general laws of Texas make ample provision to meet the case.

It further appears that Fort Stockton is necessary to the common defense.

Wherefore the committee report back said Executive Document No. 25 with the accompanying bill, and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. CARPENTER. It seems to me that bill is subject to the objections made by the Senator from New York to the bill of the Senator from Michigan. Everything there seems to be left to discretion. In the first place nine hundred acres cannot be required unless it is intended to locate the whole Army of the United States in Texas, which would overshadow her State elections and become oppressive, and to which I have no doubt the Senators from that State would make vigorous protest. What do we want with nine hundred acres there for a military post?

In the next place $18,000 for this quantity of land that very recently was public land of Texas to be had for a dollar and a quarter an acre, I suppose, seems to be a pretty liberal price. There might be one benefit resulting from the purchase of the whole nine hundred acres. We should have some land to give away at the next session to some railroad company or somebody else that wants it, at a nominal price. I think the bill should go over this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is objected to and goes over.

JOHN THORNLEY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1206) for the relief of Medical Director John Thornley, United States Navy.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report in that case first and then some explanation.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a report; but I can explain it quicker perhaps.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read first.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. ANTHONY February 4, 1880:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of John Thornley, medical director, United States Navy, praying for restoration to his former position in the Navy, beg leave to report as follows:

Dr. Thornley was placed on the retired list June 1, 1861, a board of surgeons having pronounced him unfit for active duty. It seems that the examining board further declared that Mr. Thornley's disability was not incurred in his line of duty as medical director; and at that time Thornley was unable, through force of circumstances, to produce satisfactory evidence to the contrary. At a later period he succeeded in obtaining positive evidence, which had not previously been submitted, that his disability had occurred in the line of duty, and asked to submit the evidence for consideration before a competent tribunal. Upon statement of the facts to Hon. R. W. Thompson, Secretary of the Navy, the matter was referred to the Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. Under date of May 15, 1878, the Surgeon-General recommended that Dr. Thornley's case be referred to the retiring board for readjustment.

On the 12th of November, 1878, a medical board was convened at the Navy Department for further investigation and consideration of such documentary evidence as might be produced by Dr. Thornley. After a careful consideration of all the evidence relating to the origin of the said disability of Dr. Thornley, the board reached the conclusion that the disability causing the retirement of Medical Director John Thornley had its origin in the line of duty.

This report was approved by Secretary Thompson, and Dr. Thornley's name was ordered on the records of the Department from the 1st of January, 1879.

The Secretary of the Navy further says that, "having been retired upon insufficient evidence as to the origin of his disability, he is of opinion that Dr. Thornley's claim is just and deserving of favorable action of Congress."

In consideration of the above facts, the committee report favorably on Dr. Thornley's petition.

Mr. CARPENTER. That bill ought to go over.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think not, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before it goes over, I desire to spread on the RECORD some facts. I shall contest this bill when it comes up; and I desire now to have read, for the information of the Senate, a letter in regard to the facts in this case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be received and laid on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that it may be read now, so as to go in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. If the bill goes over, why not have that letter go in the RECORD without reading?

Mr. COCKRELL. I want it read for the information of the Senate. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FOURTH AUDITOR'S OFFICE,

February 12, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith Senate bill 1206, for the relief of Medical Director John Thornley, United States Navy, transmitted with your letter of the 10th instant; and, in reply to your inquiries, respectfully state, that Dr. Thornley was retired June 1, 1861, as a surgeon in his second five years' term; and if the causes for which he was retired are to be considered as originating in the line of duty, he would be entitled, under section 1588, of the Revised Statutes, to pay at the rate of $2,400 per annum.

If his account be adjusted in conformity with that portion of the bill you have marked, he would receive as difference of pay from March 3, 1873, to the 31st of December, 1879, inclusive, about $4,301.90.

From the 3d of March, 1873, to June 30, 1875, he was paid at the rate of $2,100, and from July 1, 1875, to December 31, 1879, at $1,600 per annum.

From the 1st of June, 1861, to the 20th of April, 1864, he was entitled as a retired surgeon in second five years' term, to pay at the rate of $1,200 per annum, but during nearly the whole of that period, and for some time after April, 1864, he was on duty and received the rate of pay provided by law for a surgeon of his grade on the active list. From April 21, 1864, to the 31st of May, 1866, he was entitled, when not on active duty, to $1,400 per annum; from the 1st of June, 1866, to the 30th of June, 1870, $1,866.66; and from July 1, 1870, to March 2, 1873, to $2,100 per annum.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. BEARDSLEY, Auditor.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 753) to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouri tribes of Indians, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Vermont who sits farthest from me [Mr. EDMUNDS] indicated a wish this morning in reference to this bill that he might have an opportunity to communicate with the Secretary of the Interior; and as the Senator from Vermont is not here, I ask that the bill lie over without prejudice until to-morrow, or the next day, in order that the Senator from Vermont may have the opportunity to communicate with the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DAWES. What does it mean to have a bill go over without prejudice?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It indicates that it will be the first called on the Calendar to-morrow morning.

WILLIAM H. DAVIS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1208) for the relief of William H. Davis, of Oakland, California.

Mr. CARPENTER. That ought to go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HEREFORD. I hope it will not be passed over. The report explains the case fully.

Mr. CARPENTER. I withdraw the objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to ascertain the fair and reasonable value of certain wharf and warehouse property formerly situated in San Diego, California, belonging to William H. Davis, of Oakland, and taken by the United States authorities for the use of the United States troops during the years 1861 and 1862; and he is to ascertain the value of the property at the time it was so taken, and certify the amount so ascertained to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon pay the amount so certified to William H. Davis, his heirs or assigns, first taking a written waiver of all further claim for the appropriation of his property. The amount allowed is not to exceed $60,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLEET MARINE OFFICERS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 210) regulating the rank and pay of fleet marine officers in the United States Navy.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of that bill. It is simply creating a new office, with an additional salary, and unless there is some necessity for the increase of officers I do not think it ought to pass.

Mr. ANTHONY. The bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and is recommended by the Department. It is a bill to give to the Marine Corps the same rank that is given to the staff officers in fleets. It gives the commanding officer of the marines the same rank that is given to the fleet surgeon and the fleet paymaster.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that; but what is the necessity for it? I see it is simply creating a very pleasant place with an accumulated salary, but I want to know some necessity for that kind of a place and that kind of an officer.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same necessity that there is for a fleet surgeon, and a fleet paymaster, and a fleet engineer.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think there is much necessity for doing that.

Mr. ANTHONY. The opinion of all the naval authorities is, that it is very useful indeed. It makes the service congruous, and it conforms with the practice of other nations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see no necessity for it upon the explanation of the Senator from Rhode Island. It is making a new office, and it is giving additional pay and compensation.

Mr. ANTHONY. The additional compensation is very small indeed.

Mr. COCKRELL. It amounts to something; the ocean is made up of drops.

Mr. ANTHONY. It does not create a new office, that is, it does not create a new officer.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand it does not create a new permanent office, but it does practically create the office of marine fleet officer, and it will be filled all the time by some captain of marines, who will receive pay; and so it is in reality an office to be filled by detail from the line.

Mr. ANTHONY. But it creates no new officer. It merely confers additional authority upon an existing officer.

Mr. CARPENTER. More grandeur and more salary!

Mr. COCKRELL. On that account I object to its present consideration. Let it go over. We have quite enough grandeur and pay enough salary now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CHAPLAINS IN THE NAVY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 48) for promoting the efficiency of the corps of chaplains of the United States Navy.

The bill was read.

Mr. CARPENTER. That bill ought to go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am in favor of the title, but opposed to the bill.

WEST VIRGINIA SOLDIERS' UNION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2771) to construe the act entitled "An act granting condemned bronze cannon to the Soldiers' Union of West Virginia."

Mr. HEREFORD. This is a House bill in relation to condemned bronze cannon. It was amended by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate by adding the words "that are now or may hereafter be condemned." The only objection I have to the amendment is that it will necessitate sending the bill back to the House. The objection that has been stated this morning to several similar bills does not obtain in this case for this reason: the original act of which this is explanatory was passed June 20, 1878, and I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing a letter from a major of ordnance, which I ask to have read. I hope the amendment of the committee will not be adopted, and there is now no necessity for it, as is shown by these letters which I ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

TITLES AT HOT SPRINGS.

Mr. WALKER. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to consider the bill named by him, he having given notice yesterday.

Mr. LOGAN. I should be very glad to accommodate my friend from Arkansas, but I know from the nature of the bill that it will require at least an hour's discussion, and I have detained the Senate so long now that I cannot give way for that purpose, I am sorry to say.

Mr. WALKER. Then I give notice that I will call up this bill at the expiration of the morning hour to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. RANDOLPH.

Mr. LOGAN resumed the floor and continued his speech. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.] Having spoken three and one-quarter hours,

Mr. CARPENTER. If the Senator from Illinois will yield, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN. I will yield for that motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will not the Senator let us have an executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) Does the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw his motion for that purpose?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 8, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—8.

Blaine,
Coke,

Davis of Illinois,
Dawes,
Hamlin,
Harris,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 4, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

Mr. CARLISLE. I think there is an error in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will indicate it.

Mr. CARLISLE. The House yesterday adopted a resolution calling upon the Public Printer to communicate the reason why the volume of memorial addresses on the late Hon. Terrence J. Quinn had not been printed as ordered by Congress. Before that resolution was adopted it was amended so as to include also an inquiry as to why the memorial addresses on the late General Alpheus S. Williams, of Michigan, had not been printed.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected as indicated.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same: "An act (H. R. No. 4903) to provide for the purchase of a site for a post-office and other Government buildings in the city of Baltimore, Maryland."

COLLECTION DISTRICTS IN VIRGINIA.

Mr. BEALE. I have been instructed by the Committee on Commerce to ask unanimous consent for that committee to report back at this time for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4214) to amend and re-enact sections 2552 and 2553 of the Revised Statutes. It is a bill entirely local in its character and meets the approval of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BURROWS. I call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the first business in order is the unfinished business coming over from the morning hour of yesterday, on which the previous question is operating.

Mr. KNOTT. Does not that come up immediately after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. It does not. During the morning hour of yesterday the previous question was ordered upon the pending bill, and it comes over to-day as unfinished business immediately after the reading of the Journal. It is not now in the morning hour at all.

Mr. KNOTT. Then I have been misinformed. I understood it would come up immediately after the morning hour of to-day.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the rule is as the Chair has stated.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair on behalf of Mr. BLAND, of Missouri, asks consent that Mr. Cardozo, of Virginia, be allowed the privileges of the floor for to-day. And on behalf of Mr. BELTZHOVER, of Pennsylvania, the Chair asks consent that the privileges of the floor be given to Hon. John J. Peirson and Hon. R. M. Henderson, judges of the Dauphin district of Pennsylvania, and to Hon. John Hayes, of Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, for ten days.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been called for, the House will now resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4219) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875. This bill comes up as the unfinished business from yesterday, and the previous question is operating upon the bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I ask the Chair whether this bill coming up as unfinished business is the same bill that was in the morning hour yesterday?

The SPEAKER. The operation of the previous question took the bill out of the morning hour. When a bill upon which the previous question has been ordered in the morning hour is not disposed of during that hour it continues before the House under the operation of the previous question after the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then, when the morning hour is called this bill cannot resume its place there?

The SPEAKER. It cannot again take its place in the morning hour.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. That is all I wished to know.

The SPEAKER. On this bill two amendments are pending—the first offered by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. CULBERSON,] the other submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON.] If both these are amendments to the original text, the question will first be on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ROBINSON. All the amendments are amendments to the text of the original bill; but my amendment is not an amendment to that of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. Then the better way would be to dispose first of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, which, as the Chair understands, comes from the committee. This can be done by consent; and then the sense of the House can be tested on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas was first offered, and, so far as I am informed, there is no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule an amendment to an amendment would be first voted on.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not understand that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is an amendment to my amendment. It relates to a different matter altogether and to another section of the bill.

The SPEAKER. According to the parliamentary practice the second amendment offered would be the first voted on.

Mr. KNOTT. As has been stated by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON,] there will probably be no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. I suggest that this amendment be voted upon first; and after it has been incorporated in the bill, the question can be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair has already suggested. If there be no objection the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be first voted on. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KNOTT. That amendment has already been accepted, by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It has not been accepted. The power does not rest with the committee to accept the amendment. The House must vote on it. The Chair, since making his remark a moment ago, understands that the amendment is offered by the gentleman from Texas as his own amendment, and not as coming from the committee.

Mr. KNOTT. The Speaker misapprehends me. I suggested that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas should, by unanimous consent, be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has already been given that the amendment be voted on first.

The amendment of Mr. CULBERSON was read, as follows:

Strike out in the printed bill the following, from the word "follows," in line 47, down to the word "and," in line 54:

SEC. 2. That any suit of a civil nature, either at law or in equity, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by the last preceding section, but which may be now pending, or which may be hereafter brought in any State court, may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the circuit court of the United States for the proper district.

And insert the following:

SEC. 2. That any suit of a civil nature at law or in equity, arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States or treaty made or which shall be made under their authority, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by the preceding section, which may now be pending or which may hereafter be brought in any State court, may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the circuit court of the United States for the proper district whenever it is made to appear from the application of such defendant or defendants that his or their defense depends in whole or in part upon a correct construction of some provision of the Constitution or law of the United States or treaty made by their authority; and any other suits of a civil nature at law or in equity of which the circuit courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by the preceding section, and which are now pending or which may hereafter be brought in any State court, may be removed into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein: Provided, Such defendant or defendants are non-residents of the State in which the suit is pending.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON, the first paragraph of which was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "two thousand dollars" wherever they occur in the bill and insert "five hundred dollars."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 62, noes 98.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the first paragraph of the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the second paragraph of the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON; which was read, as follows:

In the third section, after the word "except," in line 132, insert "in cases arising under the patent or copyright laws, and," so as to make the clause read:

"Except in cases arising under the patent or copyright laws, and in like cases in which said courts are authorized by this act to take original cognizance of suits between citizens of the same State."

Mr. KNOTT. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the third paragraph of the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON; which was read, as follows:

In the third section, strike out the following, being lines 126 to 140 inclusive:

That the circuit courts of the United States shall not take original cognizance of any suit of a civil nature, either at common law or in equity, between a corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any State and a citizen of any State in which such corporation at the time the cause of action accrued may have been carrying on any business authorized by the law creating it, except in cases arising under the patent or copyright laws, and in like cases in which said courts are authorized by this act to take original cognizance of suits between citizens of the same State. Nor shall any such suit between such a corporation and a citizen or citizens of a State in which it may be doing business be removed to any circuit court of the United States, except in like cases in which such removal is authorized by the foregoing provision in suits between citizens of the different States.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 35, noes 95.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 68, noes 167, not voting 57; as follows:

Mr. PERSONS. My colleague, Mr. SMITH, is paired with Mr. WILBER, of New York.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question then recurred on the fourth paragraph of Mr. ROBINSON'S amendment, as follows:

At the end of line 146 of the bill insert the following:

Provided, That this act shall not affect the jurisdiction over, or disposition of, any suit removed from the court of any State or suit commenced in any court of the United States before the passage hereof.

Mr. CULBERSON. We have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 162, nays 74, not voting 56; as follows:

On motion of Mr. STEVENSON, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CULBERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I now demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at eighteen minutes past one o'clock. Reports are now in order from the Committee on War Claims.

KENTUCKY MILITIA DURING THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

Mr. ROTHWELL, from the Committee on War Claims, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 3368 a bill (H. R. No. 4905) to declare the true intent and meaning of an "Act to reimburse the State of Kentucky for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting militia forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion," approved June 8, 1872.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That in adjusting the claim of the State of Kentucky the term "equipment" shall be construed to mean and include the arming of said forces as an essential part of their equipments; the word "supplying" shall include forage and fuel, and the transportation shall be embraced as indicated in the title of the bill, it being the intention of Congress in the passage of said act to settle and adjust said account.

Mr. ROTHWELL. I am instructed by the Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred House bill No. 3854, the object of which was to declare the meaning of an act of June 8, 1872, to indemnify the State of Kentucky for expenses incurred in suppressing the rebellion, to report the following as a substitute, with recommendation that it pass; and I ask its present consideration:

The accompanying report was read, as follows:

Report to accompany H. R. No. 3854, a bill to declare the true intent and meaning of "An act to reimburse the State of Kentucky for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting militia forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion," approved June 8, 1872.

The Committee on War Claims, to whom the H. R. No. 3854 aforesaid was referred, respectfully report:

That on the 27th day of July, 1861, the Congress of the United States, to encourage the States adhering to the cause of the Union to freely exert themselves to suppress the rebellion, passed "An act to indemnify the States for expenses incurred by them in defense of the United States," which is made part of this report, (Exhibit A.)

In the act the Secretary of the Treasury was directed "to pay to the governors of the States * * * the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by such State for enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting its troops employed in aiding to suppress the present insurrection," &c.

Under this act, and in virtue of its provisions, the said States incurred large expenses. Among them the State of Kentucky expended about $3,032,166.67, a large part of which has been refunded without interest. The Secretary of the Treasury construed said act after the accounts of the said States were presented, and after many of them had been nearly indemnified. In settling the claim of Kentucky in 1872 the accounting officers of the Treasury, as had been done with other States, allowed Kentucky $325,000 on her accounts. Objection was made by Mr. Boutwell, the then Secretary of the Treasury, to its payment, although the money had been appropriated by Congress for that purpose, and on June 30, 1871, the last day before the appropriation should be covered back into the Treasury, payment was refused upon the opinion of the Solicitor that the act of July 27, 1861, did not cover any expenses for any troops not actually mustered into the service of the United States.

The State came back to Congress and they promptly passed the bill of June 8, 1872, giving to Kentucky relief from the ruling of the Solicitor, and directing the accounts in the act of June 8, 1872, to be settled and paid upon the principles and conditions as provided in the act of April 17, 1866, in regard to the State of Missouri. The act in relation to Missouri in section 3 provides especially that the account for arming shall be stated.

This act of June 8, 1872, in its title says the accounts for "arming," "subsisting," "equipping," "transporting," but when the claim again came in for adjustment, the Solicitor compelled by his construction the accounting officers to reject the accounts for "arming," for "transporting," for "fuel," and for "forage." It was evidently the intention to give the State full relief. It is folly to suppose they would pay for equipments, and not arms; that they would pay for subsistence, and not forage and fuel, and not pay the transportation account, when the title of the bill says these were its objects.

Besides, Missouri was paid these very accounts. We therefore unhesitatingly say that it is just and right that the intention, founded on the good faith of the Government toward the States who acted on its promises and expended their money for its benefit, of the act of June 8, 1872, should be carried out and not thwarted. To do so we report the following as a substitute for the bill referred to us, and recommend its passage.

G. F. ROTHWELL,
Chairman Sub-committee.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that that should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. I will ask my colleague, before pressing the point of order, to permit me to ask a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill? I would like to ask him if this bill proposes to do what has been done heretofore in other loyal Northern States?

Mr. ROTHWELL. I understand this is what has been done in the States of Missouri, Tennessee, and Maryland.

Mr. WHITE. Pennsylvania, New York, and other States were reimbursed. I want to know if this comes under the same class. If so, I think we should pass the bill.

Mr. ROTHWELL. It is precisely the same, as I understand.

Mr. BAYNE. My friend is mistaken in saying it comes under the same class. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to answer the question?

Mr. WHITE. I merely want some information, if anybody can give it.

Mr. CONGER. I presume this discussion will not cut off the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SMITH] to make the point of order.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman as having made the point of order. He will now state it.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. The bill, as I understand it, is to reimburse to the State of Kentucky a certain amount of money expended by that State. That is the purport of the bill, and I make the point of order that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. That is not the purport of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be again read. The House will thus understand what it proposes to do.

Mr. CONGER. Let the original bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the original bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3368) to declare the true intent and meaning of an "Act to reimburse the State of Kentucky for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting militia forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion," approved June 8, 1872.

Be it enacted, &c., That in adjusting the claim of the State of Kentucky the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to said State, under the head of "equipment," the arming of said forces, as indicated in the title of the bill, it being the intention of Congress in the passage of said act to settle and adjust said account.

Sec. 2. That a sufficient sum of the $1,000,000 appropriated to pay said accounts is again appropriated to pay such amount as may be allowed under this bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. If I understand it, the point of order is made under Rule 112, that this bill makes an appropriation of money for the payment of the State of Kentucky, and that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. I desire to call the attention of the Speaker and of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SMITH] to the fact that no appropriation is made by this bill at all. The state of the case presented by the bill is this: In 1872 a bill was presented to Congress, which was then republican in its complexion, and was passed almost by unanimous consent, for the benefit of the State of Kentucky. There was no opposition made to the bill upon that side of the House, and it was passed under a suspension of the rules. The purpose of that act, according to the terms of its title, was to reimburse the State of Kentucky for moneys expended for the United States "in enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting militia forces to aid in the suppression of the rebellion," and it provided that the accounts of the State of Kentucky should be settled by payment being made to her just as had been done to other States. After the bill passed, the Solicitor of the Treasury decided that under it payment could not be made to the State for the arming of those soldiers, although the word "equipping" was used; and that payment for forage and fuel supplies could not be made, although "subsistence" and "supplies" were specially provided for. Now, this bill does not undertake to make any appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is drawing a distinction between the bill and the substitute.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. In the substitute offered by the committee for the original bill no appropriation is made.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made against the original bill, not the substitute. The substitute is hardly before the House; it has not a status before the House.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It is reported by the committee, as I understand, without objection on the part of any member, and, as I understand, is now before the House.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but it is before the House as a substitute for the original bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order against the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The original bill?

The SPEAKER. It is the original bill which is before the House.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Then I understand the Chair to rule that the substitute is not before the House.

The SPEAKER. It has not yet acquired its status. The point of order is made against the original bill. The substitute is merely an amendment to the original bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania who makes the point of order, that this bill requires no appropriation as it is now presented. It merely does for the State of Kentucky what has been done for every other State in the Union. Ohio had a bill passed just like this. Indiana had a bill passed like this for her benefit. West Virginia had her bill. Pennsylvania had every dollar of her money expended in the same way paid back to her. I am informed by the accounting officers at the Treasury there is not a single solitary State in this Union whose accounts have not been settled and paid except the State of Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE. Is not in fact the only measure before the House at this time the report of the committee, which is a substitute proposing only to declare the intention of a previous act of Congress?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. That is what I understand.

Mr. WHITE. I understand that is the whole of it.

The SPEAKER. That does not meet the point of order. The substitute would not have any status if the original bill did not come back.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand, the original bill is not here.

The SPEAKER. It is here.

Mr. WHITE. I understood it was merely read for information.

The SPEAKER. The original bill is before the House, and the committee recommend a substitute. Suppose the House voted down the substitute, would not the original bill then be before the House for action?

Mr. WHITE. The substitute is the proposition of the committee, and not the original bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. It seems to me the gentleman from Pennsylvania will probably withdraw the point of order when he understands there is no purpose whatever to press the original bill, the object being merely to have the action of the House upon the substitute. I admit that the point of order is a good one. The substitute could not be before the House unless it came accompanied by the original bill, and the point of order must be sustained by the Chair if insisted upon. But when the gentleman making the point of order shall understand distinctly that there is no purpose whatever to press the consideration of the original bill except for the purpose of having a vote as between it and the substitute, (which, if adopted, will avoid the point of order,) it seems to me that he will accomplish his whole purpose if he will withdraw his point of order and allow that vote to be taken.

Mr. CONGER. Is not the object sought to be accomplished exactly the same in both bills?

Mr. CARLISLE. I have not read either the bill or the substitute.

Mr. CONGER. Is not the object of both to provide for a refunding of money?

Mr. CARLISLE. I suppose that, as a matter of course, if the substitute shall be adopted and passed into law, the result will be that the accounting officers of the Treasury Department will audit the claims of the State of Kentucky for arming and subsisting these troops.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, as an interesting fact in this connection, that the original act was passed under a suspension of the rules, thereby evading the point of order that could have been raised against it. What is now before the House is, as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] the original bill, for which the Committee on War Claims recommend the adoption of a substitute. The point of order rests against the original bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. My purpose in raising that point of order is to afford to every one an opportunity in Committee of the Whole to investigate the merits of the bill and the substitute.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire briefly to appeal to my colleague [Mr. SMITH] and to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to withdraw the point of order. The date of the original act is 1872, at which time the republicans had a majority in both Houses of Congress. The matter was fully investigated, and the act was passed by more than a two-thirds vote. The Northern States have all been reimbursed for such services and expenditures; and, in my judgment, Kentucky is as well entitled to this refunding as any of the other States can have been.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Are the merits of this bill now before the House?

The SPEAKER. They are not.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Then I make the point of order against my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] that he is not in order in discussing the merits of the bill.

Mr. KELLEY. I am not speaking of the merits of the bill, I am making an appeal for an act of justice.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman's colleague objects.

Mr. KELLEY. That may be, and yet he might be touched by the truth if not by generosity.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Debate on the merits of the bill is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reminds the Chair that debate is not in order.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I have made the point of order. "The gentleman from Pennsylvania" is always ready to listen to suggestions—

Mr. KELLEY. I renew the point of order that debate is out of order.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Very well. When I make a point of order I want it to be understood that I mean it.

Mr. BURROWS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. Allow me one word.

The SPEAKER. To the point of order?

Mr. BAYNE. To a personal matter.

The SPEAKER. There is no personal matter involved, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. BAYNE. There is to this extent: I am a member of the Committee on War Claims. The gentleman making this report states that it is unanimously concurred in by the Committee on War Claims. I cannot consent to that, nor can I exactly dissent from it, for the reason that I have not seen the substitute in its perfected form, and do not know whether I shall object to it or not when it comes before the House.

Upon the point of order, the substitute undoubtedly intends an appropriation; it intends that the Secretary of the Treasury shall liquidate an account for money said to be due to the State of Kentucky under a prior act, which it is claimed the Secretary of the Treasury has misconstrued. There certainly will have to be an appropriation to meet the requirements of this act; otherwise, it would amount to nothing at all. I hope that the bill may be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I will say this to the question propounded: I am satisfied that if gentlemen on the other side of the House understood the nature of this bill there would be no objection to it.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman have any objection to this bill being investigated in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. None in the world, except the delay it would cause.

Mr. CONGER. Then let it go there.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I will say this to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER:] I understood that this was the unanimous report of the Committee on War Claims. They directed this substitute to be reported and to ask for its present consideration. This only puts Kentucky on the same ground with other States of the Union. It provides that the claims of Kentucky shall be considered by the accounting officers of the Treasury just as similar claims of other States have been. Special acts have been passed for the benefit of Ohio, Indiana, Virginia, and other States, and this only follows and adopts those acts. Pennsylvania has been paid every dollar which she expended for this same purpose. There is not a single State in the Union that, with claims not only for the last war, but for the revolutionary war, the war of 1812, and the Mexican war, has not had its accounts passed upon and settled by the accounting officers of the Treasury. We do not ask any interest on this account. The accounts of the other States were paid in 1866, 1867, and 1868. This account has stood until now.

Mr. BAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Yes, sir; I yield for any question.

Mr. BAYNE. Is it not the fact that the act applicable to Missouri and this bill, if we agree to the substitute, provide for a larger payment to these two States than was allowed to Ohio, Pennsylvania, and the other States?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Not at all. The allowance is the same.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Kentucky that he must address himself to the point of order.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Yes, sir. I was simply giving that explanation which the gentleman requested.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Having made the point of order, I do not desire to go into any discussion of the merits of the bill. The gentleman will do me the justice to say that I have carefully avoided any such discussion. At the proper time that question will be investigated. I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. This point of order is made upon the original bill, the second section of which contains the following words:

That a sufficient sum of the $1,000,000 appropriated to pay said accounts is again appropriated to pay such amount as may be allowed under this bill.

The Chair does not go to the extent of deciding whether the substitute, if presented as an original bill, would be subject to the point of order; but he decides that the second section of the bill is subject to the point of order, and therefore the bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole. The Chair sustains the point of order as against the original bill, without deciding whether the substitute is subject to the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. That question does not arise now.

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. If in order, I move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order now, because this hour is devoted to reports from committees. Reports are still in order from the Committee on War Claims.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. CARPENTER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the following cases; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

Petition of Mary E. O. McGregor, of Tipton County, Tennessee, claiming $730 as compensation for supplies taken by United States troops during the late war;

Petition of John S. Peete, of Mason's Depot, Tipton County, Tennessee, claiming $600 as compensation for property taken by the United States Army during the late war;

Petition of John W. Rosaman, of Gadsden, Madison County, Tennessee, claiming $84.40 as compensation for saddle, bridle, and hay taken for the use of the Army of the United States;

Petition of M. W. Young, of Benton County, Mississippi, claiming $2,970 as compensation for quartermaster stores and commissary supplies taken for the use of the United States Army;

Petition of William B. Read, of Haywood County, Tennessee, claiming $817.50 as compensation for quartermaster stores taken for the United States Army;

Petition of Zebulon C. Nolen, of Haywood County, Tennessee, claiming $700 as compensation for four horses taken for the United States Army; and Petition of Benjamin H. Rutherford, of Tipton County, Tennessee, claiming $2,385 as compensation for property taken for the use of the United States Army.

HENRY F. LINES.

Mr. CARPENTER, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4906) for the relief of Henry F. Lines; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. TYLER, from the same committee, reported back adversely the following cases; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

Petition of Charles D. McLean, of Memphis, Tennessee, claiming $3,280 as compensation for property taken for the use of the Army of the United States;

Petition of Francis M. Mendenhall, of Shelby County, Tennessee, claiming $838 as compensation for commissary supplies taken for the use of the Army of the United States;

Petition of Mrs. Sarah E. Norton, of Memphis, Tennessee, claiming $14,962.83 for rent and damages of building occupied by the military authorities of the United States as a military prison;

Petition of Francis Molitor, of Germantown, Shelby County, Tennessee, claiming $1,525 as compensation for lumber taken by Colonels Logan and Weaver, at Bray's Station, Germantown, Tennessee, in January, 1863;

Petition of W. C. McHaney, claiming $1,683 as compensation for cotton taken by the United States military authorities in December, 1862; and Petition of John R. Redford, of Memphis, Tennessee, claiming $150 as compensation for a horse taken by the United States Army in 1864.

Mr. FERDON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported adversely on the following cases; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The claim of John A. Farley, of Fayette County, Tennessee;

The claim of William B. Hamlin, Memphis, Tennessee;

The claim of Lucy E. Dowdy, executrix of William P. Dowdy, Fayette County, Tennessee;

The claim of Ezekiel T. Keel, Memphis, Tennessee;

The petition of Lytle Newton, Madison County, Tennessee;

The claim of John M. McClellan, of Memphis, Tennessee;

The claim of Gideon B. Wray, of Covington, Tipton County, Tennessee;

The claim of William R. Kearney, of Bolivar, Hardeman County, Tennessee;

The claim of Mrs. Lucie A. Jameson, of Memphis, Tennessee;

The claim of James A. Henry, of Henderson County, Tennessee;

The claim of Leland Leatherman, executor of John C. Lanier, deceased, of Memphis, Tennessee; and

The claim of Edgar McDavitt, John T. Stratton, and Samuel H. Dunscomb, of Memphis, Tennessee.

Mr. ATHERTON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported adversely on the following cases; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Theodore T. Coffin, of Loudon County, Tennessee;

The petition of William G. Harwood, of Carbondale, Illinois;

The petition of Greenberry Adamson, of Madison County, Tennessee;

The petition of John Mahony, of New Orleans;

The petition of Allen J. Holliday, of De Soto County, Mississippi; and

The petition of A. F. Bonner, as administrator of Martha A. Bonner, deceased, for quartermaster stores.

Mr. BAYNE moved to reconsider all the votes by which cases reported adversely were laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HEPTING AND OTHERS.

Mr. MULBROW, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4907) to confirm to John Hepting and others title to certain lands; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that all the right, title, claim, and interest of the United States to certain tracts of land on the right bank of the Mississippi River, opposite the city of New Orleans, in the parish of Jefferson, and now the site of the village of Mechanic-ham, and described as a tract of land fronting sixteen arpents on the river by forty arpents in depth between parallel lines, and further described in the official maps of the General Land Office of the United States as sections 3, 5, 34, 35, and 36, in township 13 south, range 24 east, and sections 40, 41, 42, 57, 58, and 59, in township 14 south, range 24 east, southeast district of Louisiana, be, and the same is hereby, granted and conveyed to the lady abbess and community of Ursuline Lady Nuns, of New Orleans, Louisiana, their successors, transferees, vendees, and assigns; provided that this shall have the effect only of a quitclaim of all the right, title, and interest of the United States therein; not to affect any valid adverse right or title to said land, nor create any liability on the part of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. MULBROW. There is; and I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the memorial of John Hepting and others, citizens of the State of Louisiana, praying for the confirmation of their title to certain lands situated on the Mississippi River, opposite the city of New Orleans, sixteen arpents front on said river by forty arpents in depth, and described upon the official map of the General Land Office of the United States as sections 3 and 5, 34, 35, 36, in township 13, range 24 east, and sections 40, 41, 42, 57, 58, and 59, in township 14 south, range 24 east, southeast district of Louisiana. This memorial, with the accompanying proof, was submitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and after a most careful and thorough examination by him, evinced by a clear, full, and exhaustive report, he declares in face of the claim, which report, dated January 2, 1880, has been transmitted to the Speaker of the House by the Secretary of the Interior, and is made part of this report.

The claim of title begins with an act of sale having date February 8, 1736, under which the community and convent of the Ursuline Lady Nuns of New Orleans acquired from Jacques Larcheresque title to a plantation on the right bank of said Mississippi River sixteen arpents front by forty arpents depth. This document is duly certified and perfectly authenticated by the proper authorities in Louisiana, the chain of title, together with the surveys which identify the land for which confirmation is prayed, as the identical land acquired by the Ursuline Lady Nuns in 1736, is unbroken down to the present claimants. There seems to be no doubt but that Larcheresque, from whom the title of the present claimants and memorialists comes, held the said land by what is known as a Spanish grant. The act of 1860, as extended by the act of 1872, affords the number — for exactly this class of cases. The land is now held by several hundred small property-owners who have improved their properties and who are constantly rendered uneasy as to the security of their homes by the attempts of speculators to deprive them of said homes and properties by having said lands declared public lands of the United States, and then by entries of the same.

Your committee, after very full and careful examination of all the records and titles which bear upon this question, agree with the conclusions of the Commissioner of the Land Office, and adopt his report as part of the report of the committee.

Your committee reports the accompanying bill, and recommends its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MULBROW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ISRAEL DODGE.

Mr. PACHECO, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 939, a bill (H. R. No. 4908) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Israel Dodge, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears that the claim of Israel Dodge, or his legal representatives, was confirmed by the act of Congress entitled "An act to confirm certain land claims in the State of Missouri," approved June 21, 1860, to the extent of 7,056 arpents, equal to 6,002.50 acres, and that on the 22d day of December, 1865, a certificate of location (No. 2) was issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in full satisfaction of said claim of Israel Dodge, erroneously reciting the act of Congress approved June 2, 1858, as the authority for the issue of said certificate; and

Whereas it appears that certain tracts of land subject to location and entry under the provisions of the aforesaid act of June 21, 1860, have been duly entered under and by virtue of said certificate, and in part satisfaction thereof: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to issue patents to such of the legal representatives of Israel Dodge, deceased, as may be entitled to them, for lands entered under and by virtue of certificate of location No. 2, issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the 22d day of December, 1865, to the legal representatives of said Israel Dodge, under and by virtue of act of Congress approved June 2, 1858, as though said lands had been entered under and by virtue of a certificate duly issued in accordance with the provisions of the second section of the act of June 21, 1860: Provided, Said entries be found free from objection in every other particular, and that for the remainder of the land yet authorized to be located under said certificate upon the surrender thereof, he issue to the legal representatives aforesaid, who may be legally entitled thereto, certificates of location in quantities not to exceed eighty acres, each of which may be located upon any lands not mineral, of the United States, subject to entry under the laws thereof, at $1.25 per acre and in commutation of pre-emption and homestead entries, and the lands located therewith patented in like manner as other public lands of the United States: Provided, That the location in each case shall conform to the legal subdivisions of the public surveys.

Mr. WHITE. Is there a report in that case?

The SPEAKER. The report accompanying the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred House resolution No. 965 for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Israel Dodge, deceased, have considered the same, and bring in the following as their report:

The justice of the claim upon which this bill is based is of the most undoubted character. The Commissioner of the General Land Office officially certifies to the following facts:

The claim of Israel Dodge or his legal representatives was confirmed by the act of Congress entitled "An act to confirm certain land claims in the State of Missouri," approved June 21, 1860, to the extent of six thousand and two acres and fifty hundredths of an acre, and that on the 22d of December, 1865, a certificate of location (No. 2) was issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in full satisfaction of said claim of Israel Dodge, erroneously reciting the act of Congress approved June 2, 1858, as authority for the issue of said certificate. And it appears that certain tracts of land subject to location and entry under the provisions of the aforesaid act of June 21, 1860, have been duly entered under and by virtue of said certificate and in part satisfaction thereof.

From these facts it is clear that the error was the fault of an officer of the Government, and that the legal representatives of Israel Dodge are entitled to the relief sought.

Your committee, in order to better protect the interest of all parties and in accordance with recommendations from the Land Department, have made some changes, and therefore recommend the adoption and passage of the accompanying substitute.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I desire to ask the gentleman whether there is any controversy pending in any of the courts respecting these lands?

Mr. PACHECO. The bill has been fully considered by the committee and reported unanimously. We know of no adverse claims.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. My question is whether the title to these lands is in controversy in any of the courts?

Mr. PACHECO. The committee has no information of any controversy. We have no evidence before us in support of any adverse claims.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Is there no adverse claim or claimant?

Mr. PACHECO. We have no information of any.

Mr. GUNTER. I will state for the benefit of the gentleman from Kansas that the Committee on Private Land Claims has carefully investigated this subject and find no adverse claims. The object of this bill is for the Government to convey land located under the act of 1862, for the old Spanish grant which had been utilized by the Government before; and we closely investigated the matter and found there were no adverse claimants whatever.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PACHECO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the following bills without amendments:

A bill (H. R. No. 3462) to amend section 3020 of the Revised Statutes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4432) making additional appropriations for the support of certain Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1880.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1208) for the relief of William H. Davis, of Oakland, California; and

A bill (S. No. 1314) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur, collector of the port of New York.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 3968) for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished-reserve lands, in the State of Kansas; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1153) to restore to the public domain a part of the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

ARTICLES OF HUMAN FOOD AND DRINK.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Manufactures, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 4738) to regulate the manufacture and sale of articles of human food and drink; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. AIKEN, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 445, a bill (H. R. No. 4909) to make the Department of Agriculture an executive department of the United States Government.

The Clerk proceeded to read the substitute. Before he had completed the reading,

Mr. MCLANE called for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I rise to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

Mr. BICKNELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BICKNELL. On the 13th January the bill (H. R. No. 2023) to amend sundry provisions of chapter 1, title 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to presidential elections, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, was assigned as a special order for consideration on Thursday the 29th January, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of. I ask if the consideration of that bill is not the regular order now?

Mr. HOSTETLER. There is a prior order, which I now call up.

The SPEAKER. There is a special order in the House, the bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER,] from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I raise the question of consideration against that bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to inquire of the Chair whether an order prior to all those orders is not the special order for the consideration of the bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, the bill (H. R. No. 440) for the ascertainment of the amount due the Choctaw Nation?

The SPEAKER. That bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and not in the House. The bill to which the gentleman from Indiana directs the attention of the Chair is in the House as a special order. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] as having the right to contend for consideration of the bill named by him; and the gentleman from New York has the right to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. My object being that the House may resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt which was made a special order for March 2 in Committee of the Whole immediately after the morning hour. I raise the question of consideration against any other bill.

The SPEAKER. The special orders if pressed will have to be laid aside before the order indicated by the gentleman from New York can be reached.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I suggest to the Chair that the order for the consideration of the refunding bill excludes all prior orders.

The SPEAKER. But we are now in the House. The refunding bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOSTETLER. The bill reported from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service was made a special order on the 10th day of December for the 7th of January in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes that fact and recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill. And the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] raises the question of consideration against it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The motion I desire to submit is that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the refunding bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. HOOKER. If the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] should prevail and the House should resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, would not the first bill considered be the first bill on the Calendar, being the one to which I have referred, reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs for the ascertainment of the amount due the Choctaw Nation?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The Committee of the Whole will determine that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the order in reference to the refunding bill. The bill to which the gentleman from Mississippi alludes would be the bill first considered unless the words of the special order in reference to the refunding bill should give priority to the latter bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

February 18. A bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt. Made a special order, immediately after the morning hour, on the first Tuesday in March, and from day to day until disposed of, to the exclusion of all existing orders, but not to interfere with the appropriation bills.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to inquire of the Chair what question of consideration the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] can raise in the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York raises the question of consideration against the bill in reference to political assessments reported by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER.]

Mr. FINLEY. But the bill to which the gentleman from New York alludes is not in the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] against which the gentleman from New York raises the question of consideration is in the House.

Mr. FINLEY. But the point I make is that the bill to which the gentleman from New York alludes is in Committee of the Whole. He cannot raise the question of consideration against a bill that is in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not done so. He raises the question of consideration against the bill made a special order in the House, the title of which has been read. The Clerk will read it again.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill the title of which has been just read is a special order in the House, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ask a question for information.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WHITE. Suppose the House votes against considering the bill of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER]?

The SPEAKER. Then the question will come up in regard to the next special order in the House.

Mr. WHITE. What is the next special order—the refunding bill?

The SPEAKER. The refunding bill is a special order in Committee of the Whole, not in the House. The House will have to set aside the special orders in the House before it can proceed to consider any special order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. What will be the next special order in the House?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2273) to provide office-rooms for the National Board of Health, and for the publication of its reports and papers, and for other purposes.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. That bill can be laid upon the table, as the object of it has been accomplished by another bill.

The SPEAKER. Then the Clerk will report the next special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 1370) giving to all religious denominations equal rights and privileges in the Indian reservations.

Mr. CARLISLE. I would like to inquire—

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3013) to provide for regulating the manner of increasing service and expediting schedules on mail-routes.

Mr. CARLISLE. The inquiry I was about to make is this: what has become of the bill to regulate the mode of ascertaining and declaring the result of presidential elections?

The SPEAKER. That is a still later special order. The Clerk will report the two remaining special orders now pending in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 1029) concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels.

A bill (H. R. No. 2023) to amend sundry provisions of chapter 1, title 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to presidential elections, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks these special orders—the titles of which have been read by the Clerk—are the special orders which will properly come up in the House, in their order of date. They were all made special orders under a practical suspension of the rules. If a majority of the House desires to lay them aside, the Chair thinks the proper mode to do so is by raising the question of consideration upon each one as it is reached. Rule 104 reads:

The House may, at any time, by a vote of the majority of the members present, suspend the rules and orders for the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, &c.

That rule would seem to indicate that a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union would be in order at any time, and could be decided by a majority vote. But, in fixing these several special orders in the House, Rule 104 with other rules was suspended. The Chair, therefore, thinks it is his duty to give an opportunity to the House to determine whether they will consider any of these special orders in the House, which, by a suspension of the rules, were made such special orders; otherwise a special order is without force of execution.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Has not the refunding bill—a bill of such great magnitude—some status outside of these other bills?

The SPEAKER. The status which the House intended the refunding bill should have is that in Committee of the Whole it shall be considered to the exclusion of all other business, except appropriation bills in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is it not now in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the public Calendar, without reference to any particular bill?

The SPEAKER. That is an equivalent motion to the motion made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD.]

Mr. REAGAN. And the bill of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] stands as the first special order in the House, unless displaced by a vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. It does, and if displaced now it would not lose its special advantages, for it is a continuing order. If the House now refuses to consider it, it will only say that it does not desire to consider it at this time.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] indicate his purpose to move to go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states in way of debate that his object in raising the question of consideration upon the first special order in the House is that he may submit a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in case the House shall refuse to consider that special order in the House.

Mr. HOOKER. The bill to which I refer, for the ascertainment of the amount due the Choctaw Nation, was made a special order for the second Tuesday in January, 1880, and that order was made by the House during the last session.

The SPEAKER. It is usual for the Committee of the Whole to determine what business it will consider. The bill to which the gentleman refers is first in order on the Calendar in the Committee of the Whole, and it is not usual for the House to determine what order the Committee of the Whole shall adopt in taking up bills.

Mr. HOOKER. It seems to me that these modern special orders ought not to supersede these old ones.

The SPEAKER. They do supersede them in committee; they are special orders in the House, not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand that; but when they get into Committee of the Whole—

The SPEAKER. Then the same question of consideration can be raised there under the existing rules.

Mr. COX. The question of consideration is raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] between his bill and the bills made special orders in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with the Committee of the Whole; it is for the Committee of the Whole to determine its order of procedure.

Mr. COX. Can a motion be now made to go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Not until the special orders in the House which are contended for shall have been disposed of, for they were made special under suspension of the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. On all of them, or only one?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks on five or six of them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I think if the Chair will examine the record he will find that the rules were suspended in regard to only one of them.

The SPEAKER. Some were made special orders by unanimous consent, which is one manner of suspending the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I understand that they were simply set down for a certain day.

The SPEAKER. The Journal shows they were all made continuing orders.

Mr. COX. Does the Chair decide that we cannot now go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. If a majority of the House wants to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it can do so very readily. But the Chair holds that he is bound to recognize first the special orders in the House. A majority can control the matter. The question now is the question of consideration raised by the gentleman from New York, which is, Will the House now consider the bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes? which is the first special order in the House.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 88, noes 84.

Mr. CONGER and Mr. FERNANDO WOOD called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FERNANDO WOOD and Mr. HOSTETLER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 100.

Mr. McLANE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Before the vote is taken, I would like to know the status of the bill of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER.]

The SPEAKER. This vote tests the question whether that bill shall be considered now.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I understand that; but I wish to know whether the previous question is operating upon that bill—whether there is to be any more discussion upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised that the previous question is prevailing upon the bill. On the contrary, he thinks there was an understanding that there should be debate.

Mr. REAGAN. It was understood there was to be no discussion on it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If this bill is not considered at the present time, will it lose its place on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What will be its position?

The SPEAKER. It will come up whenever a majority of the House may be willing to consider it.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 127, not voting 62, as follows:

So the House refused to consider House bill No. 2266.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. NEWBERRY.

Mr. ELLIS. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HARMER.

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. McKINLEY.

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague, Mr. SIMONTON, is paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. McCoid.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED.

Mr. MORTON. I am paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. GIBSON.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. LORING. I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman from New York, Mr. STARIN, is paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY.

Mr. WILBER. I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. SMITH. If he were here, I should vote "no;" I presume he would vote "ay."

Mr. SAPP. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. CONVERSE. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. MILES. I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SINGLETON. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "no."

Mr. HERR. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WISE.

Mr. FISHER. The gentleman from Iowa, Mr. THOMPSON, is paired with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. DAVIS. My colleague, Mr. HARMER, is paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER, is paired with the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. BELFORD.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that vote decisive; but the Clerk will read the next special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of House Report No. 14, first session Forty-sixth Congress, be printed for the use of the House; reported from the Committee on Printing by Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, with an amendment.

Mr. WHITE. I understand that is not pressed at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] states that he does not press the consideration of this special order at this time.

The resolution was laid aside.

EQUAL RIGHTS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The next special order was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 1370) giving to all religious denominations equal rights and privileges in the Indian reservations; reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs by Mr. SCALES, made the special order on June 25, 1879, for the third Thursday in the following January after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. GARFIELD. The vote recently taken indicates the state of the mind of the House, and I therefore ask by unanimous consent—I agree with the Chair that the vote was decisive—that we reach the order sought to be reached by the gentleman from New York at once.

The SPEAKER. The pending order in the way of the gentleman from New York may be set aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. SCALES. I do not object if that does not prejudice the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. BICKNELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York raises the question of consideration.

The bill was laid aside.

SCHEDULES ON MAIL-ROUTES.

The next special order was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3013) to provide for regulating the manner of increasing service and expediting schedules on mail-routes; reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads by the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reporting that is not in his seat. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let us have these bills disposed of as we reach them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York raises the question of consideration.

The House refused to consider the bill.

COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION, ETC.

The next special order was a bill (H. R. No. 1029) concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels.

Mr. KENNA. I have no desire to press that bill on to-day or to antagonize the gentleman from New York; but I do not desire it shall lose its place as a special order.

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. KENNA. I do not desire it shall lose any of its rights.

The SPEAKER. The House only says that it does not wish to consider it now.

Mr. KENNA. I have no objection to that.

The bill was laid aside.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS.

The next special order was a bill (H. R. No. 2023) to amend sundry provisions of chapter 1, title 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to presidential elections, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, reported from the select committee on that subject by Mr. BICKNELL.

Mr. BICKNELL. I am ready to take up that bill for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York raises the question of consideration.

Mr. SPARKS. Let us have a division on that.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 93.

So the House refused to consider the bill, and it was laid aside.

REFUNDING BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] who moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask to raise the question of consideration so we may go into the Committee of the Whole House on the public Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The public Calendar is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the new rules do not go into effect until Monday next.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I want to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the general Calendar.

The SPEAKER. When the House goes into the Committee of the Whole on the motion of the gentleman from New York it will be upon the public Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My object is to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the bill in regard to removal of causes from State courts.

Mr. ATKINS. You can raise the question of consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But it is not the same motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion is the same. The gentleman from New York moves to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and in that committee is the public Calendar.

Mr. ATKINS. You can raise the question of consideration on each bill as it comes up.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Very well, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD's motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. COVERT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House bill No. 4592, to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand we are in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider whatever is on the Calendar, and not any particular bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then you have to move to lay aside this bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. The House having on the motion of the gentleman from New York resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the House will take up and consider in the order in which they stand upon the Calendar the various matters referred to the Committee of the Whole. And first upon that Calendar stands a measure which was set so long ago as the 10th of June last for consideration on the second Tuesday in January, 1880, and I hold that takes precedence of every other matter and must be considered before you pass it to consider any other proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause to be read the rule and then the special order of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

114. In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the bills shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar; but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill, a majority of the committee shall decide, without debate, whether it shall be taken up and disposed of, or laid aside: Provided, That general appropriation bills, and, in time of war, bills for raising men or money, and bills concerning a treaty of peace, shall be preferred to all other bills, at the discretion of the committee; and when demanded by any member, the question shall first be put in regard to them; and all debates on special orders shall be confined strictly to the measure under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the order of the House. The Clerk read as follows:

House bill No. 4592, to facilitate the refunding of the national debt. February 18—

Mr. HOOKER. I make the point of order that is not the special order of the committee, but the special order of the House in reference to that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state to the gentleman from Mississippi that it will be proper first to have read the rule and then the order adopted by the House in this matter. The rule has been read, and the Clerk is now proceeding to read the order of the House which controls the action of the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. But that is not the order in the Committee of the Whole. That is the order of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman from Mississippi will allow me, I will say that what the Clerk is about to read in terms suspends all pre-existing special orders. If the gentleman allows the order to be read it will show for itself.

Mr. HOOKER. If the gentleman from Ohio will excuse me, I raise the point of order that that order cannot be raised now, and cannot be raised until you reach that bill on the Calendar. I make the point that until you do reach that bill on the Calendar you cannot consider it in Committee of the Whole, if any gentleman shall object and demand the consideration of prior orders.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask for the reading of the order of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. You must take up cases in the order in which they stand upon the Calendar.

Mr. GARFIELD. The later necessarily revokes the former order of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. It does not. It does when it is reached, but it does not until it is reached. That is the true order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will overrule the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi, and ask the Clerk to read the special order, after which he will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi again.

Mr. CONGER. If the order in regard to the bill of the gentleman from New York is read, it will be seen the decision of the Chair is all right. This bill is made the order in Committee of the Whole by order of the House, to the exclusion of all other special orders.

The Clerk read as follows:

February 18, 1880.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Made the special order therein after the morning hour, March 2, 1880, and from day to day until disposed of, to the exclusion of all existing orders.

Mr. FINLEY. That was made in the House.

Mr. HOOKER. I say, the House having on the motion of the gentleman from New York resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Calendar, we necessarily take up the cases in the order in which they stand upon the Calendar. That, I presume, neither the gentleman from New York nor any other gentleman, not even the gentleman from Ohio, will combat. It is very true, when the House by a very recent order—as late as January—agreed to consider the case of the gentleman from New York it agreed to consider it in the order in which it stands upon the Calendar; and until it is reached on the Calendar it cannot be considered at all. Therefore the committee would naturally take up for consideration the case which stands first on the Calendar. And I insist this case, set on the 10th of June last for consideration in last January, shall not be superseded by the action of the committee for the consideration of any other question. And more particularly is this the case, Mr. Chairman, because by order of the House, three-fourths voting for it, every other rule was suspended in order to give this case a hearing—one which has been protracted and procrastinated from year to year. I say, being in Committee of the Whole, we must take up the cases in the order in which they stand upon the Calendar.

Mr. GARFIELD. The logic of the gentleman from Mississippi is this: that whatever order the House of Representatives may make as to the order of business in the Committee of the Whole, the Committee of the Whole is at perfect liberty to disregard it if it sees fit; and whenever the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole, the Committee of the Whole can do what it pleases, notwithstanding the order of the House has placed a certain business that is in the Committee of the Whole ahead of all other orders, revoking all other orders to the extent of putting this ahead of them. He says when the Committee of the Whole meets it can disregard this order of the House and proceed to consider, and must consider, the first that happens to be printed upon the Calendar, without regard to this absolute order of the House.

Now, the statement of the case argues it, and to my mind settles it. Here we are acting under the order of the House, and the order of the House says that the funding bill shall have precedence of all existing orders, however long ago they were made, or however long ago they were set for hearing. In other words, the House has changed its order about the bill which the gentleman from Mississippi wants to call up, and says that bill and every other bill shall be put off until after the funding bill has been considered. The committee is bound to obey that order, and the presiding officer is bound to obey it in his ruling. He is acting under the orders of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. In answer to what has fallen from the gentleman from Ohio, I beg to say that his argument is a begging of the question, and he has not yet answered the position taken by myself in reference to the fact that when the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of cases on the Calendar, it must take up those cases in the order in which they stand. I presume the gentleman from Ohio, who is familiar with the rules, is very well aware you can never reach the bill of the gentleman from New York until by a vote of the committee you have set aside every preceding case upon the Calendar. Was the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of one case on the Calendar? No, sir. But the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union generally, for the consideration of the whole Calendar, and each case must be called in the order in which it stands and they must be disposed of before we can reach the bill of the gentleman from New York. I concede that when you reach the bill of the gentleman from New York, the refunding bill, he would have a right to have it considered in preference to any other order. But you must consider each bill on the Calendar and, by vote of the committee, postpone the consideration of each bill before you can take up a subsequent one. And more especially is that the case when we consider that the action of the House in ordering the consideration of the specific matter reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs was adopted by a suspension of the rules requiring a two-thirds vote. The other order was made by no higher grade of vote, and, therefore, you must consider them in the order in which they stand on the Calendar. Otherwise the motion of my friend from New York is tantamount to this, that you go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of his bill alone—a motion which is not permitted by the rules. I hope that the bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs will not be postponed, but that it will be considered and that the bill of the gentleman from New York will be allowed to wait its turn on the Calendar.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to say a single word. I wish simply to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the order of the House making the funding bill a special order made it a special order for March 2. But it was sent to the Committee of the Whole. Now we come into the Committee of the Whole. And what do we find? We find Rule 114 provides that when we are in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the bills on the Calendar shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar. Now, I say that the order of the House making the funding bill a special order did not set aside Rule 114, and the only way that we can get rid of bills upon the public Calendar is by a motion to lay them aside. That is to say, we take up the first bill on the public Calendar; some one can make a motion to lay it aside; and that is the only way in which the gentleman from New York can, under the rule, reach his bill. The order of the House has not set aside Rule 114.

Mr. CONGER. If the reasoning of the gentleman from Ohio be correct a special order is of no earthly consequence whatever in furthering the consideration of a bill; because, though a bill may be made a special order to the exclusion of all other orders, if the reasoning be correct, the moment a bill is sent to the Committee of the Whole it has lost all the power that the special order gives it; which is absurd. The special order runs with the bill whether it is in the House or in the committee, and gives it the same privilege and the same right in either.

This order, as has appeared from the reading of it, excludes all existing previous orders. There is no order prior to that and no order after it on the Calendar which does the same. The object of the House was to make this bill take precedence of all existing orders. The order says it shall not apply to appropriation bills; and appropriation bills even without that excluding order would come in ahead of this bill. Now, that language must either have its natural force, or, if the argument on the other side is right, the moment a bill is sent from the House to the Committee of the Whole it loses any privilege which a special order of the House may have given it.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a question of order. The Chair has ruled on the point of order, and I demand the regular order. Debate is not in order on any question of priority of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled, but was about to make a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. HOOKER. The Chair has not yet made a ruling, and I desire before he makes a ruling on the point of order that Rule 114 be read.

The CHAIRMAN. That rule has already been read. The Chair will further say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] he is not in order in raising a question of order when a question of order already raised by another gentleman is pending. The Chair was about to state that, in his judgment, the phraseology occurring in the special order relative to the bill in charge of the gentleman from New York, making that bill a special order to the exclusion of all existing orders, has the effect to suspend the operation of all prior orders, to supplant them, and to bring the committee to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been read. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi. [Mr. HOOKER.]

Mr. HOOKER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I hope I will be sustained in that appeal by the committee, so that we may go on with the business in the order in which it stands on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 106, noes 17.

So (further count not being called for) the decision of the Chair stood as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand the decision of the Chair to go to this point, that you can pass over every other bill on the Calendar and take up this one?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the decision of the Chair, and the Chair will state that that appears to be the deliberate judgment of the committee, as evidenced by this vote. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

Be it enacted, &c., That all existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum which may hereafter become redeemable: Provided, That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, and the certificates authorized by the act of February 26, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount of not exceeding $500,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after twenty years, and payable forty years from the date of issue, and also notes in the amount of $300,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue; but not more than $40,000,000 of said notes shall be redeemed in any one fiscal year, and the particular notes to be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. The bonds and notes shall be, in all other respects, of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an increase of the public debt.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in the process of refunding the national debt, to exchange at not less than par any of the bonds or notes herein authorized for any of the bonds of the United States outstanding and uncalled bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum, and on the bonds so redeemed the Secretary of the Treasury may allow to the holders the difference between the interest on such bonds from the date of exchange to the time of their maturity and the interest for a like period on the bonds or notes issued, but none of the provisions of this act shall apply to the redemption or exchange of any of the bonds issued to the Pacific railway companies, and the bonds so received and exchanged in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall be canceled and destroyed.

SEC. 3. Authority to issue bonds and notes to the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby granted.

SEC. 4. The act approved February 26, 1879, authorizing the issue of certificates of deposit, is hereby amended so as to continue and limit the amount of certificates to be issued to $50,000,000 to be outstanding at any one time, and fixing the rate of interest to be allowed thereon at 3½ per cent. per annum for one year, after which interest shall cease; and the said certificates shall be convertible, at the option of the holders, when presented in sums of $50 or multiples thereof, into the coupon or registered bonds authorized by this act; and whenever any of the said certificates shall be converted into bonds, the same shall be canceled and destroyed; but the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, issue new certificates in place of those so converted up to the limit of $50,000,000, until the aggregate amount of the bonds authorized by this act and of the said certificates combined then outstanding shall equal the amount of bonds hereby authorized. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to form combinations by which to procure said certificates of deposit authorized under this act, for purposes of sale to others or for acting as agents of others, and any person so offending shall be liable, on conviction, to be fined $1,000 or imprisoned not to exceed one year. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make suitable regulations in compliance with this act, providing that the expense for the disposing of the certificates and bonds authorized to be issued shall not exceed ½ of 1 per cent.: Provided, That said certificates shall not be sold or converted at less than par.

SEC. 5. From and after the 1st day of July, 1880, the 3½ per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation.

SEC. 6. This act shall be known as "the funding act of 1880," and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to lay aside this bill, in order that the committee may proceed to the consideration of other business on the public Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] is not in order.

Mr. HOOKER. Then do I understand the Chair to decide that the Committee of the Whole House has no right to set aside any bill on the Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only refer the gentleman from Mississippi to the order of the House which has been read, and to the ruling of the Chair, which has been sustained by the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. Then the whole committee, with the exception of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] cannot postpone the consideration of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair again repeats that the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi is not in order.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to make an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. Why is it that this bill is not to be had in printed form?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the bill has been printed.

Mr. BAYNE. It is not on our files.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumes that the ordinary number was printed.

Mr. BAYNE. We cannot find them on our files.

Mr. GILLETTE. I desire at the proper time to offer a substitute for this bill; and I ask unanimous consent that it be now submitted, in order that it may be printed for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole has no power to order the printing of any document.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I thought the Chair had recognized me as entitled to the floor; if so, I desire to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, the total of the debts of all nations is computed at about $24,000,000,000. The largest debt-owing nations in the world are France, Great Britain and Ireland, the United States, Russia, Italy, and Austria-Hungary.

France.....	$3,972,407,312
Great Britain and Ireland.....	3,888,907,980
United States, (February 1, 1880).....	2,188,199,391
Russia.....	1,875,000,000
Italy.....	1,804,037,035
Austria-Hungary.....	1,734,634,530

For the purposes of this discussion it is not necessary to state the nature and character of the obligations of these nations, or to give the history of their liabilities. It is gratifying to know that with three times the actual wealth and capacity of production of either of them, the United States stands the third in the extent of its obligations. The debt of England is two centuries old; ours less than twenty years. The first national obligation created in England was in 1664; but in about eight years she defaulted in meeting the principal and interest of a liability so small as £1,321,000, and it was not until 1684, twelve years afterward, that the interest was paid. In 1699 an act was passed by Parliament funding the principal of this sum into three percents, and it is a singular fact that this was the beginning of the present national debt, and remains a portion of it to this day.

Every reign from Charles II down has added to it until that of the present sovereign. The total debt in 1859, twenty years ago, was $4,045,511,410. In 1878 it was $3,888,907,980. Like other nations, wars have produced her public debt. The wars with other nations of Europe in the middle of the eighteenth century raised her debt from £52,092,238 to £138,865,450. The war of the American Revolution cost her £121,267,993; the war with Napoleon cost her £601,500,343, and the Crimean war about £100,000,000. In times of peace she has invariably slightly decreased her debt. These heavy obligations have, however, been made light in consequence of the low rate of interest they bore. Her good faith and abundant resources have kept her credit unimpaired. But in neither of these regards is she our superior. We have not defaulted upon our national obligations, but have met them in the most trying emergencies promptly and easily. The people have endured the necessary taxation by which this has been accomplished.

The financial policy of England has beyond question been a wise one. She has been conservative and honest in the management of her debts, and, with the exception of the single instance cited, which occurred over two hundred years ago, at the beginning of the funding operations, and before any well-settled policy had been adopted, she has been prompt and reliable in meeting every obligation on the day of its maturity. The interest upon her debt has rarely been over 3 per cent., and, although she has never made a large reduction of its volume, her credit has stood the first in Europe. It is evident that the United States has far greater resources to meet its obligations than Great Britain or any other nation. She stands even now, in the beginning of her national existence, as the creditor nation of the world. All that is necessary to maintain supremacy is wisdom, caution, and good faith. Why should she invite distrust by submitting any longer to a rate of interest so much higher than that of England?

And a more pertinent and prominent consideration arises, the question why we should not reduce taxation by making an effort to reduce the cost of carrying so large an obligation to something like that of England. To show more clearly the difference between our policy and that of England with reference to the interest charge upon the public debt, I refer to the following facts: England, with a total debt in 1878 of $3,888,907,980, has only the interest charge of 3 per cent., (see Whitaker's Almanac for 1879, page 118,) while the interest-bearing debt of the United States in the same year was only $1,780,725,650, (Comptroller of Currency's Report 1879, page 12,) and yet the interest charge was $102,500,874.65, or about an average of 5½ per cent., (Secretary of Treasury's Report for 1878,) which was increased in 1879 to $105,327,949 (Secretary of Treasury's Report 1879) on an increased debt of $1,887,716,110, (Comptroller of Currency's Report for 1879.)

Comment upon these suggestive facts is quite unnecessary. They speak for themselves. It is our duty to relieve the people of such an enormous and unnecessary load at the earliest practicable moment. In my judgment that time has actually arrived, and it will be a criminal dereliction of duty not to avail ourselves of it.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The debt of the United States is of recent origin, and was of very sudden creation. Before the late civil war it may be said that we were without a debt of sufficient magnitude to be worthy of the name of a "national debt" in the general meaning of the term. In 1835 it was at its minimum—it was almost nothing. The war with Mexico, in 1846, caused its commencement. In January, 1861, it had reached only $66,243,721. But at the beginning of the war in that year it increased at the rate of about four millions a month, reaching in July, 1861, $90,580,873. In 1862 it increased more than thirty-six millions per month, reaching at the close of the fiscal year, July 1, 1862, to the sum of $524,176,412. During the next fiscal year it was more than doubled, being on July 1, 1863, $1,119,772,138. At the same period in 1864 it was $1,315,784,370; from that time until the close of the war in April, 1865, it increased at the rate of about two millions a day, and for the succeeding five months the increase was about three millions a day until it reached its maximum, August 31, 1865, of $2,845,007,626.

Thus it will be seen that this enormous debt was created between January 1, 1861, and August 31, 1865, or within four years and seven months. Of this sum there were at that time but \$1,109,568,191.80 funded, the balance being made up of various items of temporary obligations, some of which were subject to interest. The Finance Report of 1865 states that the average interest on \$1,725,000,000 of the debt was 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The management of the public debt from that period has not been the best that could have been devised. There has not been a stable policy founded on principles of enlightened statesmanship. For the purpose of strengthening the public credit at the commencement of the war and giving confidence to those who were disposed to become Government creditors, a so-called "sinking fund" was established, which was immediately disregarded even by those who had created it, and which has been irregularly complied with since.

The anxiety to dispose of our bonds by employing the bankers of other countries, as evinced in the proposition to make the interest payable in London and other European capitals, the sending of agents abroad to open American Government offices authorized to "auction" the bonds in those markets, and the payment of large commissions for effecting their sale, altogether had for some time a depreciating effect upon our credit.

These and other short-sighted methods, hereafter to be referred to, showing anxiety to effect negotiation, served for some time to make refunding an exceedingly difficult task at such rates as our bonds were really worth. Recently, however, in spite of such mistakes, our claim to a high financial standing has been universally conceded. Our credit is firmly established on the best basis. It is recognized and admitted by timid and conservative investors in public funds, who hazard nothing at any time and under no inducements.

THE PRESENT FISCAL MANAGEMENT.

It is said that the policy of the present Secretary of the Treasury has produced this confidence. I have no wish to depreciate the wisdom he has displayed in some of his suggestions. Personally I have much respect for his astuteness and tact, but I am compelled to withhold approval of the many serious blunders he has made as the custodian of the financial interests of the Government.

Before making direct reference to the immediate question involved in the refunding of the maturing bonds, I will refer to some of these errors.

It is the general opinion that the outstanding funded debt has been decreased within the past five years. According to the table furnished by the Comptroller of the Currency (see report for 1879, p. 12) there has been an increase since 1873, when it was but $1,695,805,000; whereas it was, at the beginning of this fiscal year, $1,877,716,000. The Comptroller's table and the annual interest charge is as follows; the interest charge is taken from the several annual reports of the Secretary of the Treasury during that period:

Table showing the amount of unmatured interest-bearing bonds outstanding.

Year.	Bonded debt.	Interest charge.
1868.....	$2,063,110,200	$140,424,045 71
1869.....	2,107,930,600	130,694,242 80
1870.....	1,986,321,600	129,235,408 00
1871.....	1,888,133,750	125,576,565 93
1872.....	1,739,451,100	117,357,839 72
1873.....	1,695,805,000	104,750,688 44
1874.....	1,734,252,750	107,119,815 21
1875.....	1,707,998,300	103,093,544 57
1876.....	1,696,685,450	100,243,271 23
1877.....	1,697,888,500	97,124,511 58
1878.....	1,720,735,650	102,500,874 65
1879.....	1,887,716,110	105,327,949 00

The total debt, less cash in the Treasury, on January 1, 1880, was $2,011,793,504.

It will be seen that there has been no reduction in the debt in the past five years, both the debt and the interest charge having been increased; this has not been caused by any extraordinary demands upon the Treasury. There has been no extraordinary expenditure, nor has there been any corresponding diminution of the revenues. It will be difficult to account for it except upon the supposition that it has been caused by the issue of bonds for resumption and the funding of non-interest-bearing liabilities.

But, on examination of the amount of these liabilities for the years indicated, it appears that they have not been decreased, but remain about the same as they did five years ago. With the continued maintenance of our present rate of taxation, producing average annual receipts of over $300,000,000, it would seem that with an economical administration, followed by less expenditure, there would be a surplus sufficient to have justified a reduction of the debt. But, from erroneous policy or some other cause, the national obligations have been increased, although the rate of taxation has been rigidly adhered to. No effort has been spared in obtaining revenue. Extraordinary vigilance, accompanied by an arbitrary and unrelenting execution, has marked the way in which the revenue laws have been enforced, while looseness has been practiced in the dispensation of patronage, and the opportunity given to those employed to compensate themselves liberally.

This course has been adopted especially in the city of New York, where the spies and detectives, technically called special agents of the Treasury, have been sustained in practices which have caused loss of revenue, infringement upon the rights of the citizen, and unjust accusations of fraud, involving the reputations of merchants of the purest character. There can be little doubt that other motives than public good have prompted this extraordinary zeal.

On January 24, 1879, the Senate adopted a resolution calling upon the Secretary for information as to the expense of issuing and disposing of bonds, &c. In reply to this resolution the Secretary sent a communication to the Senate, dated March 26, 1879, (Senate Document No. 9, first session Forty-sixth Congress.) The following extract from this document (pages 3 and 4) contains matters to which I call the special attention of the House:

On January 29, 1875, the contract of July 24, 1874, was renewed, the contracting parties being Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London; Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London; and Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, on behalf of Seligman Brothers, of London.

The conditions of the contract were so modified that the contracting parties received a commission of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent. on \$122,682,550 bonds sold for refunding purposes, and 1 per cent. on \$15,215,500 bonds sold for purposes of carrying into effect the third section of the act of January 14, 1875, from which commission they defrayed all expenses connected with the issue, including expenses of preparing the bonds.

The next contract was for the negotiation of the 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bonds, and was made by Secretary Morrill, August 24, 1876, the contracting parties being Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, and Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co. for themselves and associates; and Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co.; and Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co. for themselves and associates. Under this contract the contracting parties were to pay accrued interest on the bonds to the date of their application for delivery, and to pay all expenses of the issue, including the preparation of the bonds, and were to receive a commission on the amount negotiated of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent.

When I entered upon my duties of my present office, March, 1877, there had been sold under this contract $90,000,000 of these bonds.

In the following May it became apparent that the condition of the money market had become so favorable that 4 per cent. bonds could be sold at par, and I therefore availed myself of a privilege secured by the contract, and gave notice that the sale of the 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bonds would be limited to \$200,000,000, and of this amount an agreement was made that \$15,000,000 should be applied to resumption purposes.

Sales were rapidly made to the amount of $185,000,000 for refunding purposes and $15,000,000 for resumption purposes. The expenses were paid and the commissions allowed as per the terms of the contract.

At that time there had been issued in redemption of 6 per cent. bonds $486,043,000 of five percents, and $185,000,000 of four and one-half percents, making a saving in the annual interest charge of $7,635,430.

On the 9th day of June following I made a contract with Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, and themselves; Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., of New York, on behalf of J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, and themselves; Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Seligman Brothers, of London, and themselves; Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., of New York, on behalf of Morton, Rose & Co., of London, and themselves; and the First National Bank of New York City, for the sale, at par, in coin, of 4 per cent. bonds. The conditions as to accrued interest and commissions were in substance as in the previous contract, but I reserved the right to open the loan to popular subscriptions for a period of thirty days.

Such subscriptions were opened, and within the period mentioned they reached the amount of $75,496,550, of which I reserved for resumption purposes $25,000,000.

Additional sales of 4 per cent. bonds in small amounts were made during the following winter and spring by popular subscription, but the condition of the money market at that time did not give much encouragement for the further sales at par of bonds bearing so low a rate of interest.

Recognizing the duties imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare for the redemption in coin of United States notes on January 1, 1879, I entered into a contract, April 11, 1878, with the parties of the previous contract for the sale of \$50,000,000 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bonds for resumption purposes at a premium of $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., the parties to defray the expenses of the preparation and issue of the bonds and to receive a commission on $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent. of the amount issued.

The Secretary appears to be somewhat confused in his statement of the amount of bonds sold for resumption purposes. In his annual report of 1878 he fixes the sum at $95,500,000, which is reiterated in an official letter to me dated January 11, 1880. This is nearly $10,000,000 less than the amount as stated by him in his letter to the Senate of March 26, 1879, above quoted, in which he gives in detail the several amounts of bonds sold for this purpose. The following extracts from this document make the total amount of bonds sold for resumption $105,215,500, not including five and a half millions sold for the Halifax award:

1875, January 29, United States five percents, and 1 per cent. commission.....	$15,215,500
1876, August 24, United States four-and-a-half percents, and $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent. commission.....	15,070,000
1877, June 9, United States four percents, and $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. commission.....	25,000,000
1878, April 11, United States four-and-a-half percents, and $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. commission.....	50,000,000
Total.....	105,215,500

The interest charge on these bonds from the date of their issue to January 1, 1880, aggregates $12,806,589, as per the following table:

Interest charge on the bonds sold for resumption:
$15,215,500 from January 29, 1875, to January 1, 1880, 5 per cent.....	$3,747,430
15,000,000 from April 4, 1876, to January 1, 1880, $\frac{4}{5}$ per cent.....	2,524,315
25,000,000 from June 9, 1877, to January 1, 1880, 4 per cent.....	2,561,447
50,000,000 from April 11, 1878, to January 1, 1880, $\frac{4}{5}$ per cent.....	3,977,397
Total.....	12,806,589

The amount paid for commissions is as follows:

$15,215,500 at 1 per cent. commission.....	$152,155 00
15,000,000 at $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. commission.....	75,000 00
25,000,000 at $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. commission.....	125,000 00
50,000,000 at $\frac{1}{8}$ per cent. commission.....	250,000 00
Total commissions.....	602,155 00
Total interest and commission.....	13,408,744 00

I leave out of this account the five and a half million bonds sold to pay the Halifax award, which were sold for resumption.

There has been $6,000,000 of legal-tenders redeemed which has cost $13,408,744 to redeem. This was an expensive operation. There are those who give the Secretary much credit for having, as they say, succeeded in accomplishing resumption. The President had no hesitation, in his annual message, to refer to it as an event of extraordinary national benefit. I concur with him as to the great advantage to the country of having secured it, but doubt whether the little that he and his Secretary had to do with it has not cost the country a hundred times more than their agencies in its accomplishment were worth. They could not have prevented it with all their power over the Treasury; it was the result of influences which undoubtedly compelled and forced it.

I am not to be understood as objecting to resumption, but as objecting to the unnecessary expense in obtaining it. Why should preparations for resumption have begun so long before it was needed? The law providing for resumption to take place on the 1st of January, 1879, was passed January 14, 1875, and yet as early as January 29, 1875, fifteen days after its passage and nearly four years before it was to begin, $15,215,500 of 5 per cent. bonds were sold under this act, and ninety million since, the money placed in the Treasury, where it has remained useless and unproductive of interest, while the Government has been paying from 4 to 5 per cent. interest upon the bonds issued.

But this is not the most serious error of the Secretary, as exposed in the extract above quoted. It will be seen that he states that on the 9th of June, 1877, a contract was made with a syndicate composed of the First National Bank of New York City and others for the sale at par in coin of 4 per cent. bonds. Under this contract \$75,496,550 were sold at par. On the 11th of April, 1878, ten months later, he sold to the same parties \$50,000,000 of $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bonds at $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. premium, less $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent. allowed for commission, which left but \$5,000,000 for premium, thus increasing the rate of interest $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent., making a difference of interest against the Government upon the amount sold of \$2,500,000 per annum for the whole period that the bonds had to run, which, being about fourteen years, made a net loss to the Government of \$30,000,000. Under the funding acts of 1870 and 1871, by which authority to fund is conferred upon the Secretary, it may well be questioned whether, after the minimum interest of 4 per cent. had been reached, any higher bond could be subsequently issued.

Another yet more remarkable fact in connection with this sale of $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bonds is that at that time, April, 1878, these bonds were selling in New York in the open market at 103, being 2 per cent. more than the syndicate procured them for from the Government, making a profit on the transaction of \$10,000,000. The four percents were at the same time over par in the same market. For the prices of these bonds for the year 1878, see table A, in appendix.

It may be said that the fifty million four and a half percents were sold under authority of the resumption act, which expressly gives the Secretary authority to sell any class of bonds authorized under the act of 1870. I deny that this or any other act can be construed to empower that officer to sell bonds for a less price than they are worth on the market, or that he can issue a $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bond at any rate of premium when the lower rate of 4 per cent. can be sold at par. It could not have been intended by Congress that he could fix the rate of premium by which he should dispose of these securities. Such a discretion, if abused, could be made to impose upon the people a high-bearing rate of interest debt for the whole period of time that the law authorizes the bonds to be issued, and there would be no recourse by which the evil could be repaired.

But if the legal power exists to raise the interest upon the bonds from 4 to $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., it does also to 5 per cent.; and thus may that officer of his own individual option increase the national obligations at pleasure.

In the case referred to, the only reason given by the Secretary is that "recognizing the duties imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare for resumption in coin of United States notes on January 1, 1879, I entered into a contract April 11, 1878, with the parties of the previous contract for the sale of \$50,000,000 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bonds for resumption purposes." &c. No reason is given for having raised the rate of interest $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent., it being a matter apparently of not sufficient importance to require explanation. He had sold between June 9 and July 9, 1877, \$75,496,550 (by popular subscription, the syndicate being the contractors) of bonds bearing only 4 per cent. interest, and yet on April 11, 1878, he disposes of \$50,000,000 of bonds bearing $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest to the syndicate without popular subscription. The conditions of popular subscription for thirty days which had been required in the 4 per cent. syndicate contract were omitted in the $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. contract, and the syndicate got the benefit of the more favored and more valuable bond. The Secretary further states in extenuation of this extraordinary issue that this sale to "eminent bankers" "enhanced the value of the 4 per cent. bonds." By reference to tables (Appendix A) it will be seen that this statement is not true. Certainly an extraordinary fact that the sale of $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bonds should "enhance the value" of the 4 per cent. It would have been presumed that the natural effect of the issue of a bond bearing an increased rate of interest would be to depreciate the value of the lower rate of interest bond. Certainly they could not be of equal value. It is said in defense of the Secretary's course that a tight money market had intervened and that he could not, at that time effect the sale of a bond bearing so low a rate of interest as 4 per cent. How could the Secretary know at what price such bonds could be sold? By what authority does he fix the rate of interest upon bonds at pleasure, putting it up or down as he thinks best? From whom did he learn the condition of the money market that induced him to increase the rate of interest? Was it from the gentlemen who deal in securities, and who probably had an interest in obtaining a bond bearing a higher rate of interest? If he has the power of fixing the rate of interest upon bonds which run for fourteen years without change of interest, it should be taken away at the earliest moment, for it is too great an authority to be intrusted to any man, especially when it can reach an amount aggregating \$800,000,000. If he has not this power, the Secretary has exposed himself to criticism, if not to something worse. Andrew Johnson was impeached and came near being removed from the Presidency for alleged offenses not a tenth as great nor so detrimental to the public interests.

Much has been written and said of the success of refunding the high interest-bearing bonds into the 4 per cent. bonds. It is not denied that a very large amount of the lower rate bonds has been successfully negotiated. It cannot be contended, however, that the policy which had increased the debt could have been the one which enhanced its credit. It is contrary to the well-settled principles of finance that as the liabilities increase the credit increases also. The reverse result is the inevitable effect of such a course.

It is certain that circumstances of some kind have not only enabled the Government to obtain loans at 4 per cent. per annum interest, but also to have enabled a few parties to amass enormous fortunes in the operation. I cannot with any approach to accuracy estimate the total profits that have been realized in these transactions. The total amount of 4 per cent. bonds issued is about \$740,000,000. These were sold at par and a half per cent. commission allowed to the purchasers, netting to the Government 99 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon the amount sold.

The account, therefore, stands thus:

Present market value, at 107 per cent., on $740,000,000.....	$851,800,000
\$740,000,000 4 per cent. bonds, netting 99 $\frac{1}{2}$	736,300,000

Making a profit to the holders and loss to the Government of..... 115,500,000

Is it not a proper subject of inquiry as to who has made this profit and what relation the parties bear to the Government? Of course, as these bonds have been distributed in many different quarters, it would be impossible to ascertain the history of each. We must do the best we can. Fortunately we are not left in the dark as to the principal purchaser.

The following statements of the First National Bank of New York will furnish enough data upon which to conjecture the method by which the $740,000,000 bonds have been disposed of.

The following is the official report of the condition of the First National Bank of New York, June 14, 1879:

I, E. Scofield, cashier of the above-named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

E. SCOFIELD, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, June 20, 1879.

By this report it will be seen that on the 14th June, 1879, with a capital of only a half million dollars, this bank owed the Government $128,109,071, and held bonds of the United States for $129,152,740.

These were very large sums of both debits and credits for so small an institution to deal in. I know that it is said that the bonds are not delivered until paid for, and that this apparent mammoth operation is simply a fiction of book-keeping. If this is really so, the fact remains that by some inexplicable advantage a small private banking institution, the property of three men, has obtained facilities for the holding of enormous sums of the Government bonds by which they have acquired immense profits.

The following is the circular of this bank issued to its correspondents on the 7th of October, 1879:

FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
New York, October 7, 1879.

To our correspondents:

DEAR SIR: With much satisfaction we hand you herewith statement, condensed from the report of this bank to the Comptroller of the Currency, under date of October 2, and invite its comparison with our previous reports.

It exhibits the final liquidation of our large transactions with the Treasury Department in the 4 per cent. loan, the last payment upon which was made on September 30:

Our direct subscriptions for the four percents from January 1 to the close of the loan footed $208,500,000, the cost of which was... $209,584,893 82
Add to this the balance at credit of the Department on 1st January. 19,757,948 50

And our payments to the Treasury during the nine months aggregated 229,342,842 32
All of which has been completed without loss or error.

We may add that the total amount of United States bonds of all issues sold and delivered by this bank from January 1 to October 1, inclusive, was 341,732,450 00
Called bonds purchased during same period. 181,300,550 00

Making amount of United States bonds passing through our hands within these dates. 523,033,000 00

The above figures embrace a total of $234,385,600 four percents, of which $208,500,000 were taken directly from the Government and $75,885,600 were purchased by us in the market and represent original subscriptions made by others.

We find, also, going back to the introduction of the loan, that we have sold in all $400,449,050 out of the entire issue of $737,157,050 four percents.

Respectfully,

GEORGE F. BAKER, President.

From this statement it will be seen that this bank boasts that out of the total amount of 4 per cent. bonds issued up to that time ($737,157,050) it had sold $400,449,050, or over one-half, and that the total amount of United States bonds it had handled in nine months amounted to $523,033,000.

There is no instance in the history of this or any other government where anything like this has occurred. Neither the Bank of England nor the Rothschilds have held relations with either or all of the governments of Europe by which they had the privilege and consequent profits of negotiating so large an amount of government bonds within the same time.

It is said that any other bank could have done the same, as this opportunity was open to all. This excuse is too puerile to deceive any one. It is impossible that any other bank could have undertaken such immense transactions, however large its capital, without possessing some unusual and peculiar opportunities. Hundreds of millions of dollars of Government bonds cannot pass through private hands unless the parties are agents of the Government or acting for some persons who are. This bank had passed into the hands of the present holders simultaneously with the incoming of the present Administration. It had been purchased of the then proprietor for a very small sum, and was an institution of obscure and uncertain credit. Within less than three intervening years it has become a mammoth Government bondholder, doing this peculiar business and little else, accumulating many millions of profits and acting as the great regulator of Government credit in New York. I am told that this bank expresses its firm belief that a 3½ per cent. bond cannot be sold, and that this opinion has weight with the Secretary of the Treasury.

For myself I prefer to rely on better authority than this, inasmuch as I have great distrust of the disinterestedness of the advice. I prefer to rely on other sources of information, which if not so much experienced are at least removed from the tempting influences of this character.

I have thus presented a few of the many errors which have been made in the management of the public debt. There are others, as to the time and mode of putting bonds upon the market, to which exception can be taken. It will be observed that I have confined myself altogether to the issuing and management of the bonds of the Government. I have not touched upon the other and almost equally important branch of the Treasury service relating to the collection of the customs revenue, nor have I exhausted the bond question, especially as to the expense attending the preparation and internal handling. Much can be said upon these points, which will be reserved for another and more appropriate opportunity.

The immediate question now is as to the payment or refunding of the bonds maturing in 1880 and 1881. I propose to deal with this in a practical way.

THE FUNDING REQUIREMENTS OF THE TREASURY.

The Government must be prepared to provide for its maturing obligations redeemable 1880 and 1881, which, as stated by the Secretary of the Treasury in his last annual report, is as follows:

	Interest.
Redeemable December, 1880.....	$18,415,000—6 per cent.
Redeemable May 1, 1881.....	508,440,350—5 per cent.
Redeemable June 30, 1881.....	254,392,550—6 per cent.
Redeemable July 1, 1881.....	$23,800—6 per cent.
	782,071,700

This comprises the several classes of bonds which can be paid and the precise periods when the Government can avail itself of the privilege of paying them off or stopping the payment of interest on them.

HOW SHALL THIS BE DONE?

In my judgment, the evident policy to be pursued in meeting these obligations should be such a one as would be adopted by an intelligent individual under like circumstances. He would reason that it was bad policy to be paying interest on an indebtedness if he had available assets to liquidate it altogether or any portion of it. His desire would be to reduce his obligations from his own resources, and not to continue and increase them by borrowing even at a lower rate of interest. What is wise for an individual is wise for a government. Therefore, in considering the proper course to be pursued with reference to these accruing liabilities, we should see whether it is not practicable for us to liquidate at least a part of them.

In the statement of the public debt for January 1, 1880, the cash in the Treasury is stated at $207,983,903.92, and this is treated as the "available cash assets." Against this he states the current liabilities at $49,676,313.06, leaving the net available cash at $158,307,590.86. There is no such amount of current liabilities proper. The item "interest due and unpaid," $3,140,357.99, cannot be fairly classed as a "current liability" for the reason that this amount represents the past-due interest on the debt then unclaimed, and is an item that may be fairly left out of the account, since for the last ten years it has never but once (and then only in May, 1874, by $33,000) fallen below this amount. During the ten years 1870, 1879, the average amount of this unclaimed interest has been $6,367,000, (see table B, appendix,) the highest amount unclaimed at any one time being August 1, 1873, $13,176,085.94, and the lowest May 1, 1874, $3,108,165.74. The items "debt on which interest has ceased," and "interest thereon," are included in the current liabilities in full. These two items combined have not in the last ten years fallen below $1,949,350.80, and since funding operations fairly began, they have not been below $2,475,691.45, and have averaged a much greater sum. The past experience of the Treasury fully justifies the assumption that while the debt remains above $1,000,000,000, the items of "debt on which interest has ceased" and "interest thereon" will always be more than $2,000,000, and that the unclaimed interest will constantly exceed $3,000,000. It therefore follows that in estimating the current liabilities these sums should not be counted. The Secretary on this basis would have available cash January 1, 1880, $163,307,590.86, and on the basis of the bank reserve of 25 per cent. would require $86,670,254 for resumption purposes, leaving him $73,537,748 idle and useless money in the Treasury, that should be applied to the purchase of the maturing five percents and six percents.

This amount is constantly on the increase, as the revenues are in excess of the current requirements for ordinary purposes. For instance, the available cash balance, January 1, 1880, shows an increase of over $3,000,000 in the available cash over the preceding month. But why should the Secretary insist on keeping idle in the Treasury vaults over $15,000,000 of money, representing the matured debt and interest which experience shows will not be called for except in smaller and smaller amounts as time goes on, and two millions of which will probably never be called for? An examination of his own statements will show him the probable monthly rate at which this money must be provided, and with a constantly increasing cash balance the amount needs no consideration. The last calls appear by his recent statements to have matured in July, 1879, and since August 1, 1879, the outstanding "debt on which interest has ceased since maturity," as shown by the official report, has been, in round numbers, as follows:

	Principal.	Decrease each month.
August 1, 1879.....	$78,737,000
September 1, 1879.....	41,140,000	$37,597,000
October 1, 1879.....	29,674,000	11,466,000
November 1, 1879.....	23,079,000	6,595,000
December 1, 1879.....	18,247,000	4,832,000
January 1, 1880.....	14,691,000	3,556,000

Conservative financial management would certainly recognize the fact that as this debt is in the hands of thousands of small holders, and much of it will never be presented for payment, and what is will be presented in a gradually decreasing volume each month, there is no necessity for hoarding money against its day of coming.

But the Secretary says he wishes to keep this cash as a resumption fund for the purpose of maintaining specie payments. He is quite right in keeping faith with the holders of the legal-tender notes. The United States must maintain this position. He deserves credit for the energy and determination he has evinced in executing the law providing for resumption. I would do nothing to interfere with it. Without raising the question whether the accomplishment of resumption has not been the natural result of other influences than his policy, I am willing to aid in maintaining it unimpaired by every possible legitimate means. But has not any danger to its maintenance long since passed? Can there arise any contingency or exigency short of a foreign war that could break it? Even the President and the Secretary himself appear to concede as much. They made reference to it in their last annual communications to Congress, which appear to accept resumption as an accomplished fact. The former says, "I congratulate the country on the successful execution of the resumption act."

The Secretary says in his last report "that actual resumption commenced at the time fixed by law, without any material demand for coin, and without disturbance to public or private business." It is evident that the public confidence in the solvency and credit of the Government was so great that no other security was required to effect resumption or to maintain it afterward. No one wanted coin when he could get its representative, any more than he would want a burdensome, unwieldy, and unsafe property in the place of a secure, portable, and convenient one of equal value.

It is a fact that for a month after resumption commenced nearly twice as much coin was paid into the Treasury as was withdrawn. That was the only period in which the necessary coin was required to maintain it. As soon as it was known that it could be had it was not wanted, and it has been so ever since, as it is certain it will continue to be. And yet the Secretary fears to endanger resumption by reducing the great volume of coin on hand. I think he is unnecessarily overcautious. Resumption cannot be endangered; but if it should be, and circumstances should make it appear as the least probable, he is supplied with ample provision to secure its continuance in the resumption act itself. Section 3 of the act authorizes the Secretary "to use any surplus revenues from time to time in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par in coin, either of the description of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled 'An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt,' with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect, and to use the proceeds thereof for the purposes aforesaid."

It will be seen that he can sell bonds bearing as high a rate of interest as 5 per cent., which would command all the coin required at twenty-four hours' notice. Certainly this is an abundant resource to meet any possible contingency that could arise under any emergency.

The Comptroller of the Currency estimates that the total amount of United States bonds which mature in 1880 and 1881 held by the national banks, State banks, savings-banks, and trust companies on December 5, 1879, for the national banks and at their annual return of the other institutions, was $304,059,909, (see his letter, Appendix C.) The account will therefore stand as follows:

January 1, 1880, amount of bonds to be redeemed.....	$782,000,000 00
Amount since paid off.....	18,000,000 00
	764,000,000 00
Probable amount to be paid from revenues during present fiscal year.....	20,000,000 00
	744,000,000 00
Amount required to replace the redeemable bonds belonging to banking and other institutions.....	304,000,000 00
	440,000,000 00
Amount of notes in anticipation of surplus revenues to be paid off and canceled within ten years.....	200,000,000 00
Balance for general and private investment.....	240,000,000 00

I propose that the only bonds which shall be received from national banks as security for circulation shall be three-and-a-half percents.

Whatever doubt there may be as to the character of other investments, there can be no doubt as to the value of Government bonds to those institutions. The law compels the national banks to hold United States bonds as security for circulation and for Government deposits, and in some of the States similar laws force banking and other institutions of a fiscal character to keep a portion of their assets in these securities. The new $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bonds will be the only United States bonds that will be taken as security for national-bank circulation hereafter, if my views are adopted.

THE GENERAL PROVISIONS OF THE BILL.

The bill is based upon the theory that the existing public debt shall be liquidated at the earliest practicable period, and carried meanwhile at the lowest possible rate of interest. To accomplish these objects the existing rates of 5 per cent. and 6 per cent. interest upon the bonds redeemable in 1881 are to be reduced to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon those which are to be issued with which to redeem them. Of the whole sum to be provided for there were, January 1, 1880, \$508,440,350 of five percents and \$273,631,350 of six percents, which has been slightly reduced in volume by the purchases of the Secretary made since that time, but which amount does not vary the relative proportions of each class. The average rate of interest on both classes is about 5.33 per cent., which, reduced to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., as proposed in the bill, will make a difference of nearly 1.9 per cent. upon the total sum to be funded. This will be a saving of \$14,481,042 per annum.

But the bill goes further. It not only provides for this large annual saving in the interest charged, but in addition it provides for the reduction of the principal of the debt by the utilization of the surplus revenues for that purpose as far as the necessary expenditures will allow. This it proposes to accomplish by the issuance of two hundred million of notes in anticipation of the revenues, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after two years; the money derived from the sale or exchange of these notes at the time of their issue to be devoted to the redemption of the five percents and six percents, making it unnecessary to refund the whole sum becoming due, and the notes issued for this purpose to be paid off and canceled by the surplus revenues, thus reducing the principal of the debt to that extent. But forty millions can be paid off in any one year, the object of this restriction being to prevent any interference with the usual and natural condition of available funds for mercantile uses.

The revenue receipts from all sources for the past eight months, ending March 1, 1880, amounted to $215,429,637.50. The present average receipts are about $30,000,000 per month, which will make a total for the fiscal year of $335,000,000. The estimated expenditures for the fiscal year are $264,000,000, (Report Secretary Treasury, 1879,) which will leave a surplus of $71,000,000. It will be seen, therefore, that there can be no doubt of the cancellation of $40,000,000 per annum of these notes.

The fourth section continues the operation of the ten-dollar-certificate law, with some important changes. The original act was defective in its provisions for the prevention of evasion of the benevolent intention of the law. Immediately upon its passage combinations were formed for the funding of the certificates which were sold at par, while they were at the same time worth a premium in the open market. This evil the present bill will prevent. The Secretary has authority in addition to continue the issuance of the certificates so long as it shall appear advantageous to the classes which it is supposed will take them. As a safe depository for the surplus earnings of the industrial classes this law will be of inestimable value.

Another section makes it compulsory upon the national banks to deposit with the Treasurer no other bond as security for circulation. Thus by a long-needed provision of law we shall have a national-bank bond, and the Government will be spared the trouble and expense of constant changes in this class of securities held for that purpose.

I am aware that the bill will be antagonized from different sources and upon different grounds. It is a subject of grave and vast proportions, which may well cause very opposite opinions from equally intelligent and patriotic thinkers.

I can well understand and appreciate the theories which may be originated on this subject. I have no cause of quarrel with either, however much they may differ from me, or however unreasonable they may appear.

The positions of hostility as thus far shown emanate from—

First. Those who believe no further refunding shall take place; that the Government should utilize its revenues annually for the liquidation of the entire principal of the public debt.

Second. Those who believe that a 3 per cent. consolidated interminable bond should be issued, to be irredeemable, somewhat after the English principle.

Third. Those who propose to pay a high rate of interest for a very short-lived bond, trusting to the future for better times.

Fourth. The 4 per cent. interest party, who seem willing to let things run on in the future as they have in the past, quite willing to incur a large national annual obligation in the interest rather than to assume a bold and decided attitude of financial and commercial strength by dictating the rates of interest we will pay to the lender, instead of allowing him to dictate rates of interest to us.

My position and the terms of this bill present a judicious medium between these extreme views. Without attempting rash experiments, I propose to tread on secure ground. It will not do to deal rashly with a subject of such supreme importance as the public credit, nor to make an effort to force our obligations in a way that will jeopard success to their negotiation.

The rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., which is proposed, is a conservative proposition. As to its feasibility of successful accomplishment I have no doubt.

England has gone through similar efforts to refund her public debt at a reduced rate of interest. Robert Walpole gained much distinction for his success in refunding in 1717 a 6 per cent. bond into a 5 per cent. bond. In 1723, 1750, and 1759 other conversions were effected. England gradually during this period reduced her rate of interest until it reached, in 1759, but 3 per cent., at which it has remained ever since. In this consecutive reduction the volume of the debt was not increased from that cause. Since that period (1759) she has borrowed large sums, but has steadily maintained a 3 per cent. bond and had little difficulty in obtaining money at that price.

CAN $3\frac{1}{2}$ PER CENT. BONDS BE SOLD AT PAR?

It is said by those who have not given the subject mature thought, or who are without knowledge gathered from practical sources, or who have an interest in continuing a system which has enabled them to realize enormous profits, that it is impossible. We have the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury for the statement "that the present is an exceptionally favorable time for refunding," (last annual report,) and the Comptroller of the Currency (page 13, report, December, 1879) states "that the credit of the Government is now such that it is not impossible that long before the maturity of the four the present debt may be refunded into 3½ per cent. bonds, which is ½ of 1 per cent. more than the rate of the English consols, thereby saving a large additional amount of interest."

These are cautiously expressed opinions, but mean much more than they appear to import. I do not, however, rely upon the opinions of even these high authorities for the belief that it can be done. To look carefully into the causes for this belief will render it apparent to those less acquainted with the subject. The causes may be stated briefly thus:

First. The large surplus capital acquired within the past five years now seeks a secure depository, even at an unusually low rate of interest, rather than to trust to the instability and hazards of trade or the less safe investments of incorporations or other private enterprises.

Second. The increasing moneyed institutions cause an increased demand for Government bonds, not only as a reliable reserve, but as offering an interest-bearing security convertible at pleasure into coin or cash to meet any sudden or unexpected necessity.

Third. Nearly the whole amount of the outstanding bonds is already absorbed and out of the market. They have been taken by those who seek permanent and safe investments not liable to be paid off for a long period, and which meanwhile cannot be defaulted in payment of interest.

Fourth. The four percents, having twenty-seven years to run, have been selling for several months at from 4½ per cent. to 7½ per cent. premium, and are now difficult to obtain even at these rates. Certainly a 3½ per cent. bond can be negotiated at par, (especially when the law allows the Secretary of the Treasury to pay ½ per cent. commission for doing so,) the four percents being so much above par.

Fifth. For certain investment purposes a 4 per cent. bond, having twenty-seven years to run, is not worth as much as a 3½ per cent. bond having fifty years to run. For estates, annuities, and surplus wealth, as well as for the purposes of those who live on their incomes and wish to secure their fortunes to their descendants, such a bond has a value beyond any other security to be found in this country.

Sixth. Because, like the bonds they replace, they will be exempt from national, State, or municipal taxation. One of the elements of value in a Government bond is that it possesses such advantages, which with its safety constitute its value more than the rate of interest it bears. A 3½ per cent. bond will have in this regard as much merit as a 6 per cent. bond.

Seventh. The national banks require now as security for circulation about $370,000,000, and this source of investments for Government bonds is constantly increasing as business increases. The rate of increase in banking circulation is about $2,000,000 a month, so that it may be fairly estimated that the total on deposit for that purpose alone will be about $400,000,000 by the commencement of 1881, which, with those held as security for deposits and as investments, will need from present indications about $100,000,000 more. The reasonable probability is that they will avail themselves of the opportunity to sell all the United States bonds on hand at the premium offered, and replace them with the new three-and-a-half percents to be obtained at par. This will sink full three-fifths of the whole amount of the three-and-a-half bonds to be issued, leaving but a comparatively small amount for other investments.

Eighth. If, as many suppose, the present balance of trade with foreign countries shall be reversed and turned against us, a foreign demand for our bonds will be sure to take place, and thus a new market be open for them which does not now exist. Whether any such trade changes should occur or not, it is a fact that European capitalists already are seeking our Government bonds as the safest and cheapest in the world, and as offering greater security than that of any European government, in view of the doubt existing as to their future political stability.

The same doubt as to the feasibility of negotiating a sale of the proposed three-and-a-half percents was held as to the feasibility of selling the four percents when that then low rate of interest was first suggested. In 1876 the Committee of Ways and Means had lengthy examinations of leading bankers from New York and other large moneyed centers as to the probability of negotiating such a bond, and but few of them thought that bonds of 4 per cent. interest could be negotiated. The result has proven to the contrary. That bond has become the favorite of the market. It was rapidly taken when offered by the Government, and already $740,000,000 have been issued. These bonds have gradually advanced in market value until they are now at a high premium. There is no instance in the history of funding where so large an amount of Government bonds at so low a rate of interest has been taken within the same period, and what is more surprising is the fact that they were taken almost exclusively by American investors. This fact, though remarkable to those who are familiar only with high interest, is easily accounted for by those who study more closely the policy which governs shrewd investors of large amounts, and the present condition of the times. The four percent is the only United States bond that possesses a life long enough to render it available for permanent investment, or to the least extent answers the purpose of the English interminables.

The United States has four classes of bonds outstanding, namely: Six percents all payable within eighteen months; the five percents all payable within seventeen months; the four-and-a-half percents all payable within eleven years and five months, while the four percents cannot be redeemed in less than twenty-seven years and a half. Hence their superior investment value.

Within two years the only remaining bonds in existence will be the four-and-a-half percents, with only nine years to run, the four percents, with about twenty-five years to run, and those yet to be issued to replace the six percents and five percents about maturing. If the total bonded debt shall amount to $1,700,000,000 on January 1, 1881, it will be distributed, if my suggestions as to the three-and-a-half percents are adopted, as follows: $250,000,000 four-and-a-half percents payable in eleven years; $740,755,000 four percents payable in twenty-seven years; the balance in three-and-a-half percents payable in fifty years; or, as the bill proposes, in forty years, with right of redemption in twenty years.

This classification of the debt into three different rates of interest-bearing bonds would be similar to the French system, as per the following table. (See letter from Consul-General Fairchild to the State Department, December 13, 1879.)

NATIONAL DEBT OF FRANCE, JANUARY 1, 1879.

The consolidated debt of France on January 1, 1879, amounted to $3,972,407,312.44, and was bonded as follows:

5 per cent. bonds	$1,383,494,048 00
4½ per cent. bonds	166,413,351 11
4 per cent. bonds	2,230,480 00
3 per cent. bonds	2,420,270,433 33
Total	3,972,407,312 44

Upon a careful examination it will be found that the market value of the bonds will depend more upon the duration of their lives than upon the fractional difference of interest. What the three-and-a-half percents may lack in the rate of interest should be made up by the permanency of their character.

Since the passage of the funding acts of 1870, authorizing the funding of $1,500,000,000, the Government has readily disposed of $1,400,000,000 without submitting to a price less than par. The interest has been gradually reduced from 6 to 4 per cent., a decrease of 33½ per cent., without any delay or sacrifice in disposing of the lower bonds offered.

The banks and syndicates who, with intelligent appreciation of the value of the security, have been prompt to avail themselves of the opportunity, have realized large profits by the speedy sale of every bond they subscribed for, and it is now well known that they have none remaining. They are now anxiously awaiting Congress to give new authority to the Secretary to "go on and do likewise" with the seven hundred and eighty million remaining to be redeemed that they may again repeat the operation. If during the past few years through times of depression there has been developed such a demand for four percents, it may be supposed that now with our greatly increased financial strength there will be as ready a market for three-and-a-half percents. There has been an enormous increase in the surplus capital of this country, which is now seeking some safe deposit-place. The balance of trade in our favor within four years has amounted to about $1,000,000,000, a large part of which has fallen into the hands of those who seek Government securities as the only unquestionably safe depository.

The recent large receipts of foreign gold, the enormous amount of values extinguished—the depreciation of all other securities—the losses by the failure of savings-banks, trust companies, and other institutions—the immense losses by bankruptcies and general depression, have produced a widespread distrust of every representative of value except the issues of the Government. Thus a combination of influences is operating to give our bonds a strength of position which defies competition from any other source. And why should not this be?

There are so many causes for the superiority of the Government securities over any other security that it is difficult to state them all. The leading ones may be classed as follows:

- First. Their absolute safety.
- Second. Their ready convertibility.
- Third. Their being free of taxation, either national, State, municipal, or local.
- Fourth. The permanent character of the investment.
- Fifth. Their security (when registered) from fire, burglary, or loss from any other cause.

Sixth. Their universal acceptability in any part of the world with an established value regulated by their price in New York and London.

Seventh. Their exemption from fluctuation in marketable value, being removed from the influences of trade, which affects all other securities.

Eighth. Because they are the only representative of value which combines both security and profit, being absolutely secured beyond any contingency that can affect either.

For these reasons our bonds have a use which imparts to them a character other than their ostensible face value. They possess attributes above and outside of any other representative of value known to capitalists, traders, and others.

In consequence of these especial characteristics, they are sought for by very many classes of persons in the United States and in Europe, in preference to other sources of investments. Some of these may be stated as those who, acting as trustees of estates, will risk no loss; as the courts and others who have the custody of funds depending upon the results of judicial determinations; as the disposition of funds held in trust for minors, widows, lunatics, and absentees from the country; those who have surplus wealth which they wish to secure against loss; merchants who hold reserves to meet mercantile contingencies available at any moment. The large amount of registered bonds, amounting in the aggregate, on the 1st of January last, to $1,147,734,650, being about two-thirds of the funded debt, represents but a portion of the total sum that is thus locked up. As the country grows richer, which it is now doing to an unparalleled extent, the demand for registered bonds will become so great that the total remaining debt will not be large enough to meet the requirements for this purpose alone.

The tendency to a lower rate of interest even for business purposes is manifest. Unlike the past, an actual business demand for money does not appear to enhance its value or make it dearer. In this country this fact is exceptionally the case at this time. The State of New York has just lowered its legal rate of interest from 7 per cent. to 6 per cent. per annum, and loans on bond and mortgage are now made in that State on 5 per cent. interest. Georgia has recently negotiated a loan at 4 per cent. per annum, and other States have effected loans at less than 6 per cent.

In Europe the present low rate of interest is noticeable. The following are the current rates of discount at the principal foreign centers:

Cities.	Bank rate.	Open market.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
London	2½	2½ to 2¾
Paris	3	2½ to 3
Brussels	3	2½ to 3
Amsterdam	3	3
Berlin	4	3½ to 3¾
Hamburg	4	3 to 3½
Frankfort	4	3 to 3½
Genoa	4	4
Geneva	3½	3½
St. Petersburg	6	5 to 6
Vienna	4	3½ to 4½
Lisbon and Oporto	6	5 to 6
Madrid, Cadiz, and Barcelona	4	4 to 5
Calcutta	4	4
Copenhagen	3½ to 4	3½ to 4

CONCLUSION.

Has not the time arrived when the United States can say to the lenders of money how much interest it will pay, instead of saying, as heretofore, What rate of interest will you accept? I think that instead of being dictated to by the syndicates we should dictate to them. The time is past when this great people should humbly ask the lenders of money to fix the rate of interest at which they will lend us money. It is a mistaken as well as a humiliating policy for the Secretary of the Treasury to assume that we cannot negotiate a 3½ per cent. bond because the interest is too low. This is discrediting our Government in advance, and must not be tolerated by Congress, which has the determination of the question. It is quite apparent that our anxiety to effect loans heretofore has not only kept our credit down, but has served to make large fortunes for some banking institutions and bankers.

On the 12th of January, 1880, the Metropolitan Bank of New York took from the Treasurer $2,450,000 United States 4 per cent. bonds held as security for circulation, and surrendered their circulation, stating that as they could make $90,000 by the sale of the bonds, they sold them simply as a business transaction. (See Appendix D.)

I could present many additional reasons for the conclusion reached that this Government should establish permanently a maximum rate of interest beyond which it will not pay. At present I think 3½ per cent. necessary, though I have no doubt that when the next bonds shall mature and we wish to refund again, it may be done at 3 per cent. I am not of opinion that this generation either can or should be made to liquidate the total public debt. We have endured the bloodshed and borne the taxation incident to the war. We must yet for a while still suffer from this taxation, but is it not the duty of Congress to reduce the burden to the lowest possible weight consistent with administration? It is for this purpose I have proposed a reduction of interest on the public debt, which is now consuming one-third of the entire revenues of the Government.

APPENDIX C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, December 9, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, asking what amount of United States bonds, sixes and fives maturing in 1880 and 1881, are held by the national banks, State banks, savings-banks, and trust companies, and in reply transmit herewith a statement giving the total amount of bonds held by these institutions at the date of their last reports. The amount held by the national banks is for date December 5, of the present month. The amount held by other banks is for the year 1879, at the date of their last returns to the State officers of the different States, and is obtained from the aggregates contained on pages 112, 113, and 115 in the appendix of my last report, which are herewith inclosed. These amounts are compiled from returns made from the States named in the report, which are also inclosed, consisting of State banks of twenty States, trust companies of six States, and savings-banks of fourteen States. No returns can be obtained from the other States.

It will be seen by reference to these tables that of all of the bonds held by the national banks as security for circulation, nearly one-half are bonds maturing in 1880 and 1881; and that of the bonds held as deposits, a little more than one-third are of the same class of bonds.

If one-half of the bonds held by banks, other than national, are of those maturing in 1881, then the total amount of such bonds would be $304,059,909. If of these bonds only one-third are of this issue, then the total amount would be $264,881,606. I know of no other basis on which to form an estimate.

A copy of the report with the appendix will be sent to you as soon as received from the Public Printer.

Very respectfully,

Hon. FERNANDO WOOD,

Chairman of Committee of Ways and Means,
House of Representatives.

JNO. J. KNOX, Comptroller.

APPENDIX D.

Extract from the financial article of the New York Evening Post, January 13, 1880.

On inquiry we find that the Metropolitan National Bank of this city, which had on deposit at Washington $2,450,000 United States 4 per cent. bonds to secure $2,205,000 note circulation, has taken up the bonds and for the time given up its note circulation. The operation is merely a business one, as the bank clears a profit by it of over $90,000. The bank has a capital of $3,000,000, and occupies a leading position. Mr. Seney, the president, gives it as his opinion that if Congress would reduce the tax on note circulation one-half, it now being 1 per cent., the banks generally would freely take a bond bearing 3.65 per cent. and would largely increase their circulation; and that, all restrictions removed, the Metropolitan alone would take $5,000,000 of such bonds. There is no doubt that if the only legal tender were coin, and taxes on circulation were reduced, bank-note circulation would be largely increased and a place would be made for hundreds of millions of 3½ or 3.65 per cent. bonds. The volume of the currency would then adjust itself precisely to the much-talked-of "wants of trade." Banking would be, as now, free to all; every bank would issue as many notes as there was a demand for; the notes would be perfectly secured by the deposit of bonds, and when the demand for the notes ceased they would be returned to the bank for redemption in coin. Such a currency system would be as nearly perfect as it could be made, and if thoroughly understood it is not seen how any class could object to it.

Mr. FELTON obtained the floor.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COVERT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIDSON, for this evening;

To Mr. NEWBERRY, for two days, on account of important business;

To Mr. KNOTT, for this evening; and

To Mr. CASWELL, for ten days, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GUNTER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks upon the bill (H. R. No. 4219) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875. [See Appendix.]

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILBER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3462) to amend section 3020 of the Revised Statutes; and

An act (H. R. No. 4432) making additional appropriations for the support of certain Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1880.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Public Printer, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information as to the delay in the publication of the memorial addresses upon Hon. T. J. Quinn and Hon. A. S. Williams; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

J. C. BATES AND J. A. YECKLEY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation to satisfy certain judgments rendered against Captain J. C. Bates, Twentieth Infantry, and First Lieutenant J. A. Yeckley, retired; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HURLEY & CO.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in the case of Hurley & Co.; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

Mr. HATCH. By direction of the Committee on Agriculture I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury relative to pleuro-pneumonia in neat cattle be ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

REFUNDING OF THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. GILLETTE. I wish to submit a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt. I ask unanimous consent that this substitute may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole, and a substitute for it cannot be offered in the House. The gentleman can give notice of his intention to offer the substitute.

Mr. GILLETTE. Can it not be printed in the RECORD by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. I object to the printing of the substitute in the RECORD; it may be printed for information in bill form.

The SPEAKER. The substitute which the gentleman desires to offer will be printed in the usual form. The Clerk will read the title of the substitute:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4910) to provide for the payment of the public debt of the United States.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. LADD, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 230) for the appointment of General Charles W. Roberts, of Maine, a manager of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, for reference to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the bill (S. No. 1157) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional lots of ground adjoining the new Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Objection was made.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the House now take a recess until half-past seven o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that at the evening session the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] will occupy the chair.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Chair be kind enough to state the business assigned for the session of this evening?

The SPEAKER. The session of this evening is for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and of pension bills on the Calendar, no other business to be transacted.

Mr. CONGER. The order does not include public bills relating to pensions.

The SPEAKER. It does not.

The motion of Mr. COFFROTH that the House take a recess was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-seven minutes p. m.) the House took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m. the House resumed its session, Mr. HAWLEY in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution of the House under which the session this evening is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday evening, at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., March 4, and Wednesday evening, at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., March 10, be set apart to receiving reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and to consideration and action on pension bills in their order pending in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, no other business to be transacted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HUMPHREY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the evening.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. BURROWS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. In the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, by order of the House, business is restricted to the consideration of pension cases.

WILLIAM R. WEIMER.

The first pension business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3076) granting a pension to William R. Weimer.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of William R. Weimer, private in Company I, One hundred and forty-ninth regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, afterward transferred to Company D, Twelfth Regiment of Veteran Reserve Corps, and that said William R. Weimer be allowed a pension at the rate of $4 per month, commencing from the 12th day of June, 1865, the date of his discharge from the Army of the United States, on account of wounds received while in the service during the late war of the rebellion and in line of duty.

Mr. COFFROTH. The report in this case has already been read, and I do not suppose gentlemen want to hear it again. It has already been published in the RECORD.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object to printing the report in the RECORD if not read for the consideration of the House. It will do us no good.

Mr. COFFROTH. The gentleman has misunderstood me. I merely said the report was read on a former occasion, and has already been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DUNNELL. Then there is no necessity of its being printed in the RECORD again.

Mr. HAWLEY. How do we know we ought to pass the bill?

Mr. COFFROTH. Because it is right.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN H. BLACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2862) granting an increase of pension to John H. Black.

The bill, which was read, provides that John H. Black, late first lieutenant Company G, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, be granted and allowed, from June 4, 1878, a pension at the rate of $50 per month; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to place the name of said John H. Black on the pension-roll at said rate (in lieu of the pension now paid him) from the above date, deducting therefrom the amount of pension paid him for said period of time.

Mr. COFFROTH. The report in this case was also read on a former occasion.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELLEN GILLESPIE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1890) granting a pension to Ellen Gillespie.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellen Gillespie, widow of John W. Gillespie, late private in Company F, Twenty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension for herself and her six children under sixteen years of age, from the date of the death of her husband, the 9th of July, A. D. 1878, at the rate of pensions for widows of deceased privates in the late war of the rebellion, her said husband, John W. Gillespie, having died from the effect of wounds received while in the military service of the United States and in the line of duty during the late war of the rebellion.

Mr. COFFROTH. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the report has been once read.

Mr. HAWLEY. When?

Mr. COFFROTH. On objection day, February 6. This lady's husband was a pensioner, but died some years after having been placed upon the pension-roll.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HERMAN BALDWIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2861) to grant an increase of pension to Herman Baldwin.

Mr. DUNNELL. I should like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania state on what grounds the committee recommend an increase in this case. I can see how we are justly acting on cases which the Pension Office could not consider, and where it could not grant a pension, but I fail to see that where a pension has been once allowed the pensioner cannot secure the increase without coming here. There seems to be adopted here a new rule for granting an increase of pension. I simply want to know the basis upon which the committee have acted.

Mr. COFFROTH. The Commissioner of Pensions has adopted certain rules. In this case, after repeated examinations, the pensioner was allowed a pension for total disability which would be $13 a month. He was pensioned at $8, but under the rule, after the passage of the act fixing the pensions at $13 per month, the Commissioner reduced this $2. It is a meritorious case. The committee have fixed it at $10. It is not what is allowed by the statute. It seems he can hear with one ear a little. He is a silversmith and entirely deaf in one ear.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is this substantially an appeal from the Pension Bureau in the case of arrears of pensions?

Mr. COFFROTH. No, sir; this is granting a pension from the time he was reduced. It is an appeal to Congress to do justice to a man who is suffering and whose case is not covered by the law.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS H. VAUGHN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2860) granting a pension to Thomas H. Vaughn.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas H. Vaughn, of Company C, Seventy-sixth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that the said Thomas H. Vaughn be allowed a pension at the rate of $4 per month, commencing from the date of his honorable discharge, to wit, September, 1865, from the Army of the United States, on account of disease contracted by him while in the service and line of duty during the late war of the rebellion.

Mr. COFFROTH. The report in this case was read on a former occasion.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COFFROTH. It is the wish of some gentlemen not to proceed regularly with the Calendar, and I have no objection to going to cases which they desire to have considered.

The CHAIRMAN. That cannot be done.

Mr. HAZELTON. Are we compelled to take this Calendar in its order?

The CHAIRMAN. You must take the Calendar in the order. The Committee of the Whole House cannot change the order of the House.

JOHN L. WILLIAMS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3077) granting a pension to John L. Williams.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of John L. Williams, private in Company H, One hundred and ninety-second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $6 per month, commencing on the 24th day of August, A. D. 1865, that being the date of his discharge from the Army of the United States in the late war of the rebellion, on account of disease contracted by him while in the service and in line of duty.

Mr. COFFROTH. The report in that case was also read on a former occasion.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am in favor of pensions and I am in favor of the soldier, but it strikes me that we have started out on rather a new career. I notice all these bills grant the pension back to the time of discharge. I think prior to this Congress no bill was ever passed dating back to the date of the discharge. A, B, C, and D, all the men pensioned by Congress in the Forty-second, Forty-third, Forty-fourth, and Forty-fifth Congresses, drew their pensions from the date of the passage of the act. All this little army of men justly pensioned from the close of the war up to the present time, had their pensions simply from the date of the passage of the act. If it be proposed to go back to the date of the discharge for disability, in reference to which I do not propose to make an argument, we do manifest injustice to those who have heretofore been pensioned in the past in reference to whom the same provision has not been made.

Mr. COFFROTH. This House at the extra session of Congress passed unanimously a resolution to grant arrears to every pensioner put on the rolls by a special bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. That act is now in the Senate.

Mr. COFFROTH. But it is the action of the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. It may be the action of the House but it is not the action of Congress, and if the Senate acts as the House acts these soldiers we are pensioning here to-night will be provided for; but if it does not act we are doing better by these pensioners now than we have done for pensioners in the past.

Mr. COFFROTH. There is a proposition now pending between the House and the Senate for a sub-committee of each of the pension committees to fix this matter. If they grant arrears these bills will go through just as they are; if not, they will be fixed in the Senate.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Why is not the soldier just as much entitled to arrears of pensions because he is pensioned by a special act of Congress as if he was pensioned directly from the Pension Office?

Mr. DUNNELL. I think he is. I stated that I did not propose to make any argument against this. I voted for the act to which the gentleman refers as a member of the House.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will state to the gentleman that the committee is only carrying out the provisions of the joint resolution which passed this House unanimously.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. And that is right.

Mr. DUNNELL. One word more. I admit that it may be right, but at the same time, Mr. Chairman, it is not a just thing to do now when we consider what we have done for those who have been pensioned in the past.

Mr. HAZELTON and Mr. BAILEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. HAZELTON. I believe I have the floor under the rules.

Mr. BAILEY. No, sir.

Mr. HAZELTON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania one question.

Mr. BAILEY. Who is the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HAZELTON. I am the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman represent New York?

Mr. HAZELTON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota this question. If a case pending in the Department should come up here on an appeal, rejected there because of some point which the technicality of the law did not cover, is there a reason why that claimant should not have arrearage of pension given to him just as well as those who receive pensions by act of Congress?

Mr. DUNNELL. That has been asked once before.

Mr. HAZELTON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether it is doing an act of injustice to those who have been granted pensions heretofore to refuse to do right to those we are pensioning now? Those pensioned in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses have been taken care of in a supplemental bill. There is no reason why we should refuse to do what is right to these pensioners although we may not have done what is right in reference to those other pensioners. Does the gentleman understand? [Laughter.]

Mr. FARR. I ask to have the report read in this case.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether all the bills reported at this session contain the provision referred to?

Mr. COFFROTH. I think in every bill I have reported that rule is laid down, that wherever the disease was contracted in the service the pension is granted from the date of the discharge; but where it is charity, where the case has not been clearly made out, and may be considered in the nature of a gratuity from the Government, the pension is granted from the date of the passage of the act.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then the gentleman will not object to an amendment to bills which do not come within the rule laid down.

Mr. COFFROTH. Of course not.

Mr. BREWER. I wish to call attention to one fact which may have been overlooked. The act passed at the last session of Congress granting arrears of pensions did not grant it upon the same ratio or at the same rate per month that the pensioners were receiving at the time the act was passed. In other words, there are some cases where the disability is increasing. If the committee undertake to grant a pension and fix the rate, then they fix it on the basis of the disability existing at the present time, whereas under the former act by which we granted arrears of pensions we left it to the Commissioner of Pensions to average it. For instance, in many instances the disability when the party was discharged was slight; so slight perhaps he did not apply for a pension at all, or until some years afterward. Now the Commissioner of Pensions (I believe that is the rule of the department) fixes the pension by averaging it up. We passed a supplemental bill giving him that power; and I remember one case in my district where a man was getting $24 per month, and he supposed he was going to get under the arrears bill $1,600; but when he received his back pension it amounted to only one-half of that amount. If the committee undertake to fix the rate of pension on the basis established here, fixing it upon the disability as it exists, we shall have to go back by and by and average it up for all those in reference to whom we passed the arrears bill at the last Congress. It strikes me that the better way would be for the committee to have the name placed on the pension-roll and leave it for the Commissioner of Pensions to fix the rate from the proof that is already in his department, with the additional proof that the committee may have. Then we do equal justice to all parties. I think that is the better course if we fix the pension at all now; not to go back, but to leave that for the general act, such as we passed in the last Congress, the Commissioner of Pensions fixing the rate.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will state to the gentleman from New York—

Mr. BREWER. Not exactly; we are not all from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. COFFROTH. I will state to the gentleman from Michigan the committee has reported $4 and $6; and those are exactly the amounts recommended by the examining surgeon.

Mr. HAWK. I submit to the committee whether or not this provision contained in each special bill which we pass will not cover the point discussed by my friend from Michigan—that the pensioner shall be placed on the pension-roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. That will cover it, it seems to me. If under the general law other soldiers are granted arrears, then of course under a special act of this kind this soldier would be entitled to arrears.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the report is called for. The Clerk will read it.

The report was read, as follows:

John L. Williams, the applicant, enlisted on the 27th day of February, 1865, in Company H, One hundred and ninety-second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was honorably discharged on the 24th day of August, 1865. He applied for a pension on the 1st day of April, 1869, alleging that on or about the 20th of June, 1865, he took cold from exposure and sleeping on the ground; that it settled in his left hip and thigh, and resulted in rheumatism, and that it has been getting worse every year; and at first there were gatherings in his hip, which broke open, and are now a running sore. His claim was rejected on the 19th day of October, 1870, because there was "no record evidence of the disability, no treatment in the hospital or by a regimental surgeon, and only the testimony of one private to the disability."

Abraham A. Makin, who was a private in said company, testifies that "he was acquainted with the said John L. Williams about eight years before his enlistment, and at the time of his enlistment he was a sound, hale, hearty young man, without the least symptoms of disease; that some time in June, 1865, the regiment marched from Summit Point to Staunton, Virginia, which marching occupied five or six days, it being very warm, and the nights cold, damp, and chilly; that the said John L. Williams, with this deponent and others had to sleep on the ground without tents or blankets; that the said John L. Williams complained, during said march, of having caught cold, and after arriving at Staunton got worse, but did not ask to be relieved from duty, and was not put in the hospital; that the said John L. Williams was discharged with the company, and came home; that he frequently complained at and before the time of his discharge that he was not well and did not feel right." He also testifies "that the claimant is in such a crippled and lame condition that he is unable to labor for his support."

The claimant was treated, after his return, by Dr. A. H. Allison, who swears "that he commenced treating the said John L. Williams for scrofula or white swelling; and, taking his own statement and my own judgment, I could not nor would not say but what he contracted the disease in the Army; and I would further say, to the best of my knowledge he will never be able to do any hard work."

The committee think the conclusion is irresistible that the claimant's disease resulted from his exposure on the march from Summit Point to Staunton. Examining Surgeon D. W. Evans reports that it is his belief that the claimant's disability was contracted in the Army in the line of duty, and in his present condition could do but little manual labor.

The committee think this to be a meritorious case, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

LEVI LEEDOM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1465) granting a pension to Levi Ludam; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Levi Ludam, private in Company E, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $4 per month, commencing on the 18th day of May, 1863, that being the date of his discharge from the Army of the United States in the late war of the rebellion, on account of injury received and disease contracted while in said military service and in line of duty.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The claimant, Levi Leedom, enlisted on the 6th day of August, 1862, in Company E, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was honorably discharged from the service on the 18th day of May, 1863.

He received on the 5th day of May, 1863, at Chancellorsville, Virginia, while in discharge of his duty in line of battle, a shell wound, causing a ruptured vein on the leg above the right knee. From the evidence filed in the claim, the conclusion is irresistible that the enlarged varicose veins resulted therefrom, and that the claimant is entitled to one-half pension.

The Commissioner of Pensions decided against the claimant because of "no record of varicose veins, and claimant unable to furnish evidence of origin from his officers, or treatment in service by regimental surgeon." The claimant had proven by his captain, before the rejection of his claim, the injury received at Chancellorsville, fully describing it, and had proven by a number of reputable citizens, who knew him well, that when he went into the service he was clear of varicose veins, and also had proven by several that at the time of his discharge the varicose veins existed, and have continually existed since.

The case is clearly and unquestionably made out, and your committee, therefore, report back the bill to the House, and recommend its passage.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to offer an amendment. The name appears as "Ludam;" it should be "Leedom."

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the bill be also amended by inserting the clause "subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension law."

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask for a vote on my amendment to change the name of "Ludam" to "Leedom."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether this bill is one of those which establish pensions from the date of discharge?

Mr. COFFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. At what rate?

Mr. COFFROTH. At the rate of $4 per month.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is that to be the rate hereafter?

Mr. COFFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill establishes that as the rate hereafter and gives this soldier $4 per month from the time of discharge from the service?

Mr. COFFROTH. Yes, sir. That is what the United States examining surgeon recommends. He examined this soldier lately and recommends $4, and says his disability has been such that he should have received $4 from the first.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Does this bill allow arrears?

Mr. COFFROTH. It does give the arrears.

The bill as amended was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ISAIAH W. BUNKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2864) granting a pension to Isaiah W. Bunker; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Isaiah W. Bunker, late private of Company C, in the Eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, be, and he hereby is, granted and allowed, from August 7, 1879, a pension at the rate of $24 per month; and the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of said Isaiah W. Bunker on the pension-roll at said rate, in lieu of the pension now paid him.

Mr. DUNNELL. What is the rate given now in that case?

Mr. COFFROTH. The report will show. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The applicant, Isaiah W. Bunker, was a private in Company D, Eighty-fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers. He is now a pensioner at the rate of $3 per month, being the highest rate he is entitled to under the law as it now stands.

He asks Congress to increase his pension to $24 per month, because of his helpless condition.

The claimant, while in the military service of the United States, was kicked by a horse, destroying, partially, the membranes of both knees, and the evidence shows that from said injury he has become so helpless that he is only able to walk by and with the use of two crutches; and that he is not able to put on his clothing without the aid of an assistant; and that he must have an assistant to dress him and help him about; and that the claimant is poor and unable to pay an assistant.

Hon. John Dean, president judge, Joseph Baldrige, Major William Williams, and C. D. Bowers, neighbors of the claimant, testify to his helpless condition and total disability. The testimony of Hon. John A. Lemon, State senator, Joseph G. Barr, and J. C. Akers fully corroborates this statement.

The committee, after considering all the evidence presented to them, are of opinion that this is a meritorious claim, and that the pension of the claimant should be increased to $24 per month, and they therefore report back the accompanying bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

PAUL WALKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2859) granting a pension to Paul Walker; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Paul Walker, of Company E, Twentieth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and that the said Paul Walker be allowed a pension at the rate of $4 per month, commencing at the date of his honorable discharge, namely, on the 16th of September, 1863, from the Army of the United States, on account of disease contracted by him while in the service and line of duty during the late war of the rebellion.

Mr. WARNER. Let the report be read.

Mr. COFFROTH. The report in this case was read on a former occasion.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let us hear it again.

The report was read, as follows:

The claimant, Paul Walker, is now an old man and very poor. Prompted by patriotism, he entered the Union Army while the roar of the cannonading at the battle of Gettysburg was firing the northern heart. He enlisted on the 1st day of July, 1863, and, as the evidence shows, was then thoroughly and carefully examined by the surgeon, because he was an old man, and was pronounced sound, hale, and hearty, and mustered in Company E, Twentieth Pennsylvania Cavalry. At Clear Springs, Maryland, late in July, 1863, he was ruptured by being thrown from his horse, and after this he was attacked with chronic diarrhea and rheumatism. Lieutenant A. W. Decker testifies that after this time he was no longer fit for duty, and was put under medical treatment in the regiment. He was treated for rupture, rheumatism, and dysentery, and it soon became apparent that the claimant would not be able to do further duty, and he was discharged on the 16th of September, 1863. Dr. C. H. Haesler, the senior medical officer of the regiment, says that he contracted his disease, which he does not now recollect, in the service, but thinks it was hernia, rheumatism, and dysentery. The testimony clearly shows that at the time the claimant went into the service he was a sound, healthy, hearty man, and that when he came out he was ruptured, had the rheumatism, and was suffering from diarrhea.

The claimant filed an application for pension, but his claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions, because there was "no record of rupture, and inability to furnish necessary testimony." This brave and patriotic old man's claim for pension was rejected on technical objections.

Examining surgeons Drs. G. W. Smith and S. Hays, in their report of the examination of the claimant, say that his disability is one-half, or $1 per month; and they further report that, from the evidence before them, it is their belief that the disability originated in the service in the line of duty.

The committee are of the opinion that this is a meritorious claim, and that the accompanying bill should pass.

Mr. WARNER. I ask if this bill carries arrears with it?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes; from 1863.

Mr. WARNER. I ask further if these bills are before the committee for consideration, or does a single objection stop them?

The CHAIRMAN. They are before the committee for consideration. The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MICHAEL LINGENFELTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1806) granting a pension to Michael Lingenfelter; reported by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Michael Lingenfelter, a private in Company I, Sixteenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Veteran Reserves, formerly of Company L, Nineteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, at the rate of $4 per month, commencing November 25, 1865, that being the time of his discharge from the Army of the United States, up to the 3d of April, 1878, and at the rate of $6 per month from that time on; being for injury received and disease contracted while in the military service of the United States, and in line of duty.

Mr. FORNEY. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1806) granting a pension to Michael Lingenfelter, late of Company L, Nineteenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

The claimant, Michael Lingenfelter, who enlisted in Company L, Nineteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, on the 12th of October, 1862, and who was discharged honorably on the 23d of November, 1865, made application for pension, but his application for pension was not favorably considered by the Commissioner of Pensions, for want of testimony of comrades who were present when the claimant was injured.

The claimant, while in the military service of the United States, on the 18th day of December, 1863, near Union City, in the State of Tennessee, while in the line of duty as a scout, his horse fell and threw him across the pommel of the saddle, thereby causing a rupture to the left side, which disabled him from doing any further military duty, and he was sent to the hospital at Memphis and thence transferred to the Veteran Reserve Corps, Company I, Sixteenth Regiment. He, with another comrade, Joseph Walter, had been selected from his company to form a scouting party; that the said Joseph Walter was the only person present when he received the injury, and that he died before claimant's application for pension was filed.

John J. Hoover and George W. Zeth, members of the same company, testify, on the 1st of April, 1878, that they knew Michael Lingenfelter when he entered the service; that he was well, and they knew of him going on a scout, and that at that time he was well and doing military duty, and that when he returned to the regiment he was disabled by a rupture from the horse falling, and that he was sent to the hospital at Memphis, and that they have known him ever since, and he is yet disabled by said rupture.

Other witnesses testify to the claimant's being free from hernia when he went into the service, and that he was ruptured at the time of his discharge and ever since. Dr. L. F. Butler, claimant's family physician before he went into the service and since his discharge, is dead.

From the medical evidence before the committee, they fix the rate of claimant's pension at $4 per month from the date of his discharge to the 3d of April, 1878, and from that time on $6 per month.

The evidence clearly makes out the right of the claimant to a pension. The committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon laying the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to inquire at what rate it is proposed to grant a pension in this case?

Mr. COFFROTH. At $4 a month.

Mr. WARNER. At $4 a month or $6 a month?

Mr. COFFROTH. Six dollars a month from April, 1878.

Mr. WARNER. Upon whose certificate is this rating made?

Mr. COFFROTH. The examining surgeon of the United States.

Mr. WARNER. Examining surgeon of the United States at the Pension Office here?

Mr. COFFROTH. Examining surgeons are appointed all over the country. This rating in this case is made by the examining surgeon of the district where this pensioner lives, not at the Pension Bureau in this city.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I do feel that by this method of procedure we are doing injustice to thousands and tens of thousands of meritorious claimants all over the country. We are passing bills here granting pensions which are rated by no established principle, perhaps by no two surgeons alike. They are not rated in the same way that pensions are rated in those cases that go regularly through the Pension Bureau. We are granting increases of pensions to applicants who may be deserving; it may be their due; that I am not questioning. I do say, however, that to single out one man here and another there all over the country, who chance to be fortunate enough to have their claims reported and brought up here, and leaving out others equally deserving, equally entitled to an increase of pension, is not the proper way to deal with this question. I do not wish to make an objection in this case or any other special case; but I do propose to interpose all reasonable objection to this method of procedure until this House will consent to take some action that will lead to a more equitable, speedy, and proper method of disposing of pension claims. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether this is the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. COFFROTH. It is a unanimous report. The case was referred to me as a sub-committee and by me submitted to the committee, or to a quorum of the committee, and adopted without objection. In short, it is a unanimous report.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to ask further, for my own information, whether these reports as they come back from the sub-committees to the full committee are considered by that full committee, whether the reports are read and considered in the full committee or not?

Mr. COFFROTH. They are not, unless some member of the committee has doubts about the case, or calls for the reading of the report. There are so many bills referred to that committee that we have adopted the plan of referring them to sub-committees. When those sub-committees present reports, unless they are challenged for some reason, the reports are accepted, believing, as that committee does, that every member to whom a case is referred will examine it carefully, and only report it favorably if it proves to be a meritorious case.

Mr. HERR. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. COFFROTH. All right.

Mr. HERR. How is it that in the pension cases, so far as we have struck them, all come from Pennsylvania? Are there no members on the Committee on Invalid Pensions from other States?

Mr. COFFROTH. Yes. I will explain to the gentleman how it is. All pension bills presented by members of the House from Pennsylvania, Maryland, and West Virginia are referred to me as a sub-committee. I remained here during the holidays and spent three weeks in examining those cases and preparing the reports to accompany them; and I presented those reports at the first meeting of the committee that was called after the holiday recess.

Mr. HERR. Were there no other cases passed upon except those from Pennsylvania, so that we might have it a little mixed?

Mr. COFFROTH. Yes; there were other cases examined and reported to the House, and they are upon the Calendar. The cases, as I have said, from Pennsylvania, Maryland, and West Virginia were referred to me as a sub-committee, reported by me to the full committee, and as chairman of the committee I reported those cases to the House.

Mr. WARNER. Then it amounts to this: these cases have been before the Commissioner of Pensions and there rejected, whether for want of proof of disability or for other reasons I know not. It appears from the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that these cases are then referred to a single member of that committee, perhaps to the clerk of the committee.

Mr. COFFROTH. There is no "perhaps" about it.

Mr. WARNER. And the cases are in that way made up and presented to this House as a court of appeal from the Pension Office. I want to see a special commission established, with power to review all cases of this kind, in order that more speed and better justice can be done than it is possible to do in this way.

Mr. HATCH. Upon what authority does the gentleman state that these reports are made up by the clerk of the committee?

Mr. WARNER. I said perhaps. I have been told that is done, and asked for information.

Mr. HATCH. Upon what authority does the gentleman state that any member of the Pension Committee reports a bill to this House accompanied by a report which was drawn up by the clerk of the committee?

Mr. WARNER. I am asking for information; I wish to know how it is done.

Mr. HATCH. I understood the gentleman to state that as a fact. Mr. WARNER. I did not state it as a fact, but stated that perhaps it might be so.

Mr. COFFROTH. There is no "might be" about it; it is not so.

Mr. HERR. Is it customary for the committee to refer all cases from a certain district to the man who represents that district?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. HUBBELL. It seems to me that in this rating of pensions a great injustice may be done. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Pensions that this rating is done by the local examining surgeon—that is, by the man who happens to be appointed the examining surgeon for a particular locality.

Now, if the rate of pension is fixed by the different examining surgeons, without any particular rules governing them in their determination, without their acting in harmony and under the same rules, it is easy to see that in some cases a pensioner might be rated at say $10 a month, while in another case, with the same degree of disability, the pensioner might be rated by another surgeon, who is perhaps more competent, at another rate.

It seems to me that we may do great injustice by attempting to fix the rate of pension which a pensioner is to draw simply upon a statement of an examining surgeon who gets the immense sum of a dollar and fifty cents a case.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman if the objection he interposes against these bills would not lie against a general pension law?

Mr. HUBBELL. In all those cases where the pension is fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions, the testimony of the examining surgeon and all the other testimony is presented here in Washington, is here examined in every respect, and the rate of disability is fixed by another and perhaps more competent board, which takes everything into consideration. Now it does seem to me that to grant pensions in this way, allowing an examining surgeon in Michigan to fix the rate of disability in the cases which he examines, and another in Pennsylvania to fix another rate of disability—in other words, allowing the various physicians throughout the country, who get a little fee for examining these pension cases, to fix the rate of pensions for those cases—is doing great injustice not only to other pensioners but perhaps to the public Treasury.

Another thing: I think we ought to bear in mind the suggestion of the gentleman from Minnesota that it is a great departure from previous precedents for us to attempt now to grant pensions from the date of the disability or discharge. As a friend, not an enemy of the soldier, I say that when we take into consideration the way in which these reports are made up upon the examination of examining surgeons throughout the country, we are liable, in granting pensions from the date of discharge, to do great injustice unwittingly to the Government. We ought not to allow these pensions to date back to the date of discharge unless by some general provision of law.

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to say for the benefit of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] and other gentlemen on this floor, that the Committee on Invalid Pensions, when a bill is referred to them, send to the Pension Office for all the papers in the case. They examine those papers, and if on the evidence therein contained they believe that injustice has been done to the soldier, that his application for pension has been disallowed perhaps on some little technicality, they consider the case favorably. It is notorious in this country that the Pension Office is killing meritorious claims by the thousand every day. Nobody under the sun is responsible for the flood of pension bills coming into Congress except the Pension Office. It is not the fault of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] who I believe belongs to the committee that had the silver bill under consideration, that we did not ask how his committee considered that bill; and neither he nor any other man on this floor has any right to ask us how we decide upon bills in our committee; and we do not intend to tell him.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that this trouble has arisen here. It is a notorious fact that in this House less consideration is paid to the Committee on Invalid Pensions than to any other committee. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] It is also a notorious fact that notwithstanding the large amount of labor performed by this committee it is more difficult for it to have a day or an hour fixed for the consideration of its business than it is for any other committee. When I began my service in this House it was my high honor to be a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I can testify to the laborious and important duties imposed upon that committee. I had hoped that it would be the pleasure of this House to-night to pass upon the merit of every claim here without the technical pleading which my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has been pleased to interject. I had hoped that no gentleman on this floor—certainly not a member on the democratic side of the House who bore arms under the old flag—would raise his voice against granting pensions to these gallant men who fought for their country, her liberty, and her laws.

Gentlemen do not seem to understand how these claims get before the Pension Committee. As I have had some experience on that committee I propose to say a word on this subject. The Commissioner of Pensions is not to blame for these claims coming here. His duties are inflexibly prescribed by law. He is required to demand of the party applying for a pension proof from some officer. Very often the soldier who has been wounded is unable to obtain the evidence of any officer because the officers who could give the requisite testimony may have fallen in battle. The Commissioner must reject the claim. The party comes before Congress and offers proof from his comrades in arms—men who are as much entitled to credit and as fully conversant with all the facts as any officer could be. Their testimony is entitled to credit equally with that of an officer.

The Commissioner of Pensions being unable to allow the claim, the applicant appeals to the equitable consideration of Congress upon submitting competent proof that he was wounded, that he was disabled, or that he contracted disease. It will be remembered that in the last Congress we passed claims of this character upon the Private Calendar by a single vote; and I had hoped to-night that by unanimous consent we might take similar action, ratifying in this way the action of the committee who have diligently, faithfully, and honestly performed their duty. I, for one, am prepared to give my vote to report to the House for favorable recommendation every pension claim upon this Calendar.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has been pleased to interpose his objection here, and to say that these unfortunate men whose applications have been denied at the Pension Office shall not receive pensions at our hands because Congress has not passed some act by which claims of this character may be disposed of in some other tribunal. Why, sir, the poor soldier who lost his arm in the service of his country, or contracted disease that will follow him to the grave, is not to be blamed for the dereliction of Congress. He has rapped at the door of the Pension Office for years. He has gone there covered with glory, his empty sleeve testifying to his gallantry on the field of battle; but under the technical ruling of the Commissioner of Pensions—a ruling which you have required him to make under the law—the claim, though full of merit, is rejected. Now he appeals to the sense of justice of this House; he appeals to the law-making power; he appeals to us, who have the right to take an equitable view. If the facts are established by competent proof we are not hampered by any technicality. If the party was wounded, or if he contracted disease in the service, it is within our province, and it is our duty, to award him a pension. I hope, Mr. Chairman, it will be the pleasure of the House to-night, by one general order, to approve of the action of this Committee on Pensions, and recommend favorably to the House all these bills.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I claim that the Committee on Invalid Pensions is not under discussion—not under investigation; and I demand that the House give attention to the consideration of bills as they are reported. I make the point of order that members must confine themselves to the bills under consideration, and not indulge in the discussion of general pension laws or the duties of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. WARNER. I claim this day—

Mr. WILSON. I make the motion that the bills be all laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that they do pass.

Mr. WARNER. Before that motion is put I desire to say a word. I recognize the right of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] to withhold any information as to the method of investigating these cases in the Pensions Committee. I will not press for information or presume anything; but I do say that when information as to the investigation these cases receive is withheld it is a little too much to demand that we should come here and as mere machines, without objection and without question, vote through each and all of these claims. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not yield to my friend from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] nor to any other member here in my advocacy of the just rights of the soldier. I do not apply the remark I shall make to my friend from West Virginia.

Mr. COFFROTH. I rise to a question of order. My point is that the gentleman is not discussing the bill.

Mr. WARNER. The nearer a man was to the Canada border during the war the more likely he is to slop over now when any questions come up touching the soldier. I propose to stand by the law; and I want to see some method adopted whereby the soldier who has wounds or scars or other actual disability to show for it, and who is entitled under the law as it existed when he enlisted to his pension, can have it without waiting till he is about to die; on the other hand, to keep out claims put in by mere pretenders, by men who never were in battle or near a battle-field, or performed any other arduous military duty. But such a claim I fear is quite as likely to be presented here and pressed to its passage as any other. We should know what we are doing, and not open the gate wide to every one whose name is on a muster-roll. That would amount to a debt, if capitalized, of something like two thousand millions of dollars.

I agree with my friend from Michigan, [Mr. HUBBELL,] that where the ratings are done by a surgeon here and another there all over the country they must necessarily be very unequal, while when they go to the Pension Bureau they are referred to a board, which, I understand, passes upon every case, and there is some equality, some justice. My friend from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] says soldiers cannot get their pensions at the Pension Office. Well, I reply to him, we have not time here, as I said the other day, if we sit daily during the rest of this year, to properly consider and pass on these cases. Let us, then, at once establish a commission and give to it authority to examine and determine all claims that may be appealed to it.

Mr. WILSON. Let us pass all we can to-night, or until there is a general law.

Mr. WARNER. Ah, but, when you select one man from your district, or another district, or twenty or thirty, as seems to be the case now, from one State, and give them a preference, injustice is done to those who are denied. There may be five hundred or a thousand cases equally meritorious passed over. In this way we give to one man an increase for some special disability, while there probably are five hundred equally deserving. If we give the increase to one I say give it to all of the same class. Bring in an enabling act to cover all such cases—not confine the bounty to one.

Mr. WILSON. Let us do the best we can until such an enabling act is brought in.

Mr. WARNER. We cannot make this House a mere appendage to the Pension Bureau; and the sooner that is understood some other method will be provided, and the sooner justice will be done to the meritorious soldier and the better the Treasury will be guarded against false claims.

Mr. HATCH. In the time which the gentleman from Ohio has occupied to-night we could have passed half a dozen meritorious cases. [Applause.]

Mr. WARNER. Oh yes, if you mean to open wide the doors and let everything in; if you propose to add five or ten thousand names to the pension-roll and let my friend from Missouri fill in the names, we could pass not only ten thousand but a hundred thousand in ten minutes. I would as quickly do that—I would as quickly authorize the addition of ten thousand names to the rolls and let the Pension Committee fill them in as to vote without question as fast as names can be called, as is proposed.

Mr. HATCH. I have no disposition to add the name of any soldier to the pension-roll who is not fairly and honorably entitled by the testimony coming before that committee to receive a pension. I say, as a member of that committee, that more than one-half of the time I have spent in this Congress has been spent in the labors of that committee-room. For myself, and I can say the same for every member of the committee, we have been urgent and diligent in searching into the testimony placed before us.

Mr. WARNER. If you keep on this way for ten years you cannot go through with all claims that are now here and that will come here if the doors of the Treasury are opened to all that come, without question by members of the House when they are on their passage. I want to let those who are entitled to pensions have them without delay, but no others.

Mr. HAZELTON. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds—

Mr. HAZELTON. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. He took my time before and I want to take his now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. HAZELTON. I will yield to the gentleman when I get through.

Mr. BAILEY. Yield to me now; now is the accepted time.

Mr. HAZELTON. But it is not the day of salvation.

Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Invalid Committee. [Laughter.] I am a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and I have the undoubted right now, as a member of that glorious committee, to say a word on this occasion notwithstanding the desire of my honorable friend from New York to take my place. "I am no orator as Brutus is," but my rights are higher than his here. Now, I am very sorry that the gentleman from Ohio, who draws a pension himself, should denounce all those claimants here, amounting perhaps to two hundred, as "hospital pimps." He denounces this system of pensioning soldiers by acts of Congress upon the ground that we do not know the character of the claimants with whom we are dealing and that they are "hospital pimps." The great body of these claimants are men who were wounded in the war in the service of their country. Many of these claimants for pensions are the widows of soldiers who died from diseases contracted or wounds received in the service of their country. Any man is welcome to all the glory he may receive in this Republic by denouncing this class of soldiers in such terms. [Cries of "Question."] One word more, Mr. Chairman; please do not be uneasy. I think a good point has been made here by my friend from Michigan—we have discussed it in the committee—in regard to this question of ratings. In the old bills that were introduced was contained this clause: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws." The bills we have been considering here are nearly if not all minus this provision. If any gentleman is desirous—and for my part I want to consult the wishes of this House, and would like to act in accordance with their judgment—if they think best that this clause should be contained in all our bills, it will then throw the responsibility upon the Pension Office, on the board of surgeons there, of rating every one of these claims according to existing laws, and as they have been all rated according to the law of arrearages of pensions, I think the suggestion made by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] a good one. If this clause is in all of these pensions—and I presume the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, would accept it—if it was the will of the House, it could go into all of the cases and the objection made here is obviated.

Mr. COFFROTH. I think it is in all of them now.

Mr. HAZELTON. No, it is not in all; it is in some, but it is not in all.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel like entering upon this general discussion. It is time we were at work if we intend to do anything. I desire, however, to make this suggestion for the gentlemen of the Committee on Pensions: During the Forty-fifth Congress we passed a number of pension bills, each of which fixed the amount of the pension. They went to the Senate, and in every instance the bills were amended by the Senate and sent back to the House with an amendment striking out that provision. If the Senate stands by that position now, the result of sending these bills to that body would probably be to have them amended by the Senate and sent back here again at a day so late in the session as to preclude the possibility of action upon them by this body. I believe it would facilitate the disposition of these cases and relieve the House of this discussion as well as of a great deal of difficulty if they would consent to put these persons upon the pension-rolls generally subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin, who has referred to myself in a personal way.

Mr. WILSON. I demand the regular order.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the gentleman from Ohio ought to be allowed to reply. It is a personal matter.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the pension granted to me was granted immediately upon the close of the war, and when I was upon crutches, and granted on the record alone, and granted, too, for wounds received in battle in defense of the Union, and at the time when I understand my friend from Wisconsin was hugging the Canada border, trembling at the approach of the draft.

Mr. HAZELTON. That is about as true as all the rest of your statements.

Mr. WARNER. At any rate he was at a safe distance from any battle-field. I have not asked, nor do I propose to ask, nor does any soldier who helped to fight the battles of the Union ask gratuities from Congress. He asks only for the fulfillment of the contract made with him and that he is entitled to. Under the terms of his enlistment, and as a part of the consideration, in case of disability, he became entitled to a pension.

I repeat that I yield to no member here in my advocacy of the rights of the soldier and his right to a pension in case of actual disability, and that speedily—more speedily than it can possibly be done here. But, at the same time, I do believe there are thousands of claims that come to the Pension Office and hundreds from the Pension Office here from persons who are not entitled to receive pensions. I believe I understand and reflect the spirit of the soldier when I say he is not in favor of promiscuously pensioning every man whose name may be found upon a muster-roll. There are on the muster-rolls of the Army some two million two hundred thousand names, from 1861 to 1865. Soldiers know what is real and deserving and what are shams. They know, too, what is demagogism and what is not. When a pension is due a soldier, it is a right he may demand, and not a gratuity. Let the committee stand there, and I am with them.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a point of order. I have not done so until the gentleman has had an opportunity of vindicating himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will state his point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. My point of order is that the gentleman from Ohio has spoken on this subject once before and is not entitled to speak again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio stated he rose to a personal explanation.

Mr. BAYNE. I submit that that is not in order in Committee of the Whole. A personal explanation is a matter that belongs to the House. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOUK. I do not belong to the Invalid Pensions Committee, but I want to say a word or two. And the first word I desire to say is to enter my protest against consuming this session of the House set apart for the purpose of passing claims for the benefit of pensioners in a personal wrangling over pensions already granted. It is an outrage on the claimants who are knocking at our doors for justice to take up time in this way.

I want to say further, in justice to this committee, if we are going to pass laws for any purpose, under the organization of this House, with its committees constructed as they are, we have to repose some sort of confidence in the committees when they bring forward their reports recommending the passage of this, that, and the other bill. For one, when the Pension Committee, sitting as a high court of equity, as it should, has recommended in a bill that a pension should be granted, I am willing to vote for it, trusting to their integrity and honesty in regard to it.

This evening was set apart for the purpose of acting upon these pension claims. But when we see the RECORD in the morning it will appear that more or less of us have soldier constituencies and were making speeches to stick in the RECORD to help us to come back to Congress. Let us vote on these bills and pass them at this time and all soldiers will then vote for us without our making buncombe speeches.

Mr. STONE. The gentleman from Tennessee having got his speech in, I move we proceed to pass the bill.

Mr. HUBBELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, as follows:

After the words "pension-roll," in the fourth line, insert these words: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. As I understand, that amendment cuts off all arrears. That is unjust. If this party is entitled to a pension at all, he is entitled to that pension during the existence of his disability. There can be no controversy about that. It is true that Congress heretofore has not in these special cases allowed arrears; but it has by a general law allowed arrears of pensions to every soldier who obtained a pension under the general pension law. And because Congress has denied justice heretofore in a few special cases it does not follow that we ought to persist in that course.

But I agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUBBELL] that it is not wise for us to fix the rate of disability; and for this reason: If you incorporate into a law the rate of disability it remains unchangeable, however the disease may vary. The party may become well and yet your act allows him a pension for all time. Or he may improve in health so that the rate of disability may be less. But in that case there ought to be some authority to determine the rate of disability. It may become greater, and in that case the party ought to be allowed more. It ought to be left in the discretion of the Department to determine the rate of disability. The committee cannot with safety fix the rate of disability; and I will tell you why.

Mr. HUBBELL. If the gentleman from Kansas will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that I wish to modify my amendment so as to cover his objection. I modify it so that it will read as follows:

Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, including the general law granting arrears.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. That is right.

Mr. COFFROTH. Let me state that the pension is to commence from the date of the soldier's honorable discharge from the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] has the floor.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I stated that I did not think the committee could with safety fix the rate of disability, for this reason: Almost every applicant for a pension naturally goes before some examining surgeon specially friendly to him and the rate of the disability is usually fixed by an examining surgeon in sympathy at least with the applicant. It may be his family physician, and we do not know exactly, and the committee cannot well know, except by inference, the character of that physician. Now, if it be left with the Department, the Department may refer the applicant to some other examining surgeon or may direct him to go before a board of examining surgeons.

Mr. WILSON. They may do so in these cases.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. No, for in these cases if we pass these bills as they are reported to the House, the rate will be fixed by law and it will be an invariable rule in each particular case. Hence I say it is the safer and wiser course to leave the rate of disability to be fixed by the Department.

Mr. HUBBELL. I want to say a word or two upon my amendment. I have not offered it with any design to interpose any objection whatever to an honest applicant for a pension. A man who is entitled to a pension has a right to demand it. I simply want to have some amendment adopted which shall prevent this system of rating by local individual surgeons.

I think my amendment meets the whole case. Under that amendment the pensioner would be entitled not only to his pension but to all arrears of pensions, and his case would be governed by the provisions of the pension law. His pension may be increased or lowered under the provisions of the law, as circumstances may require; and that is all that any pensioner can properly ask.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. In my judgment we may as well lay this bill on the table as to adopt the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HUBBELL.] By adopting that amendment you merely send this man back to the Pension Bureau. Do we not all know from past experience, and from our knowledge of the immense number of applications before that office, that by adopting this amendment we will be merely compelling this man to dance attendance upon that bureau for years? You may as well drive this man away at once and tell him that there is no hope for him as to torture him with the delays in the Pension Office. My experience satisfies me that meritorious cases have been rejected by the Pension Office. If the claimants in those cases cannot look to Congress for relief they are remediless.

All on this floor have witnessed the magnanimity and liberality of Southern democrats toward Northern soldiers. The principal obstruction to these pension bills does not come from them to-night, but from the other side of this House. I do not ask for the soldier anything more than is justly due him. I would not see a fraudulent claim allowed; I would be the last to let down the bars so as to open the way to fraudulent or improper claims. But when a claimant comes before a committee of this House, and his case is carefully examined there—all the facts being presented and considered—and it then solemnly reports to this House that the man is equitably entitled to a pension, my judgment is that this House should promptly pass upon the equities of the case, and not send him back to the place where he has once met with a denial. This amendment will do but little more than refer his case back to the Pension Office.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. It does not send him back to the Pension Office, except to have the rate of his disability determined.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And the Pension Office may put it down to the minimum figure per month, or delay its consideration indefinitely. His claim has already been rejected by that office, because in the opinion of the officers there he is not entitled to relief. What advantage will result to him of any practical value to send him back to such a forum?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. He has not been put on the pension-roll at all because of some technical reason.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My honest judgment is that there will be no substantial justice granted to these claimants for pensions unless this House shall at once pass the bills according to the terms in which they are reported from the committee. If any error has been committed by the committee it is on the side of humanity and in favor of one who sacrificed the peace and comfort of home and imperiled his health and life in defense of the Government. The proof shows that he lost his health in the service of his country. Let us demonstrate our gratitude and magnanimity by granting him, without further delay, the small pittance recommended by our committee.

Mr. WARNER. I think this is a very important amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. Allow me one word in regard to the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HUBBELL.] I think that proposition should commend itself to this entire House, and for this reason: Take the case of any soldier who may be pensioned by special act of Congress. If this provision should be inserted in that act, then when the soldier applies to be rated for a pension he will be directed to go before a board of examining surgeons, who will determine his condition. If that board of examiners find his condition to be such as to entitle him to a pension, if it finds that he is laboring under a disability, it will so report to the Commissioner of Pensions, who will grant him pension commensurate with that disability. But if the man be found perfectly healthy and strong, without the least scintilla of an ailment in his body, then the Commissioner of Pensions, upon such a report made by the board of examining surgeons, will refuse to rate him and give him nothing. It seems to me that if the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan be inserted in each particular bill presented here granting a pension, in such event we will be doing equal and exact justice to every man to whom we grant a pension by special act.

You will have an examination made; you will preclude the possibility of imposition; you will surmount the difficulties that originally stood in the way of having pensions granted by the Commissioner of Pensions. The want of technical proof will be supplied by the direction of Congress to place the name of the man on the pension-roll. Now let us adopt that rule and apply it to every one of these cases. It will place the name of the soldier upon the pension-roll; it will subject him to the examination of a board who will report to the Commissioner of Pensions, and every pensioner under every special act will get a pension precisely commensurate to his disability, and will stand upon an equality with those who come under the general provisions of the pension law.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TAYLOR. In every case that the Committee on Invalid Pensions examine they send to the Pension Office and get the papers; those papers contain the certificate of examination by the examining surgeon; upon that certificate we rate the pension.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, the case now before the Committee of the Whole is the case of Michael Lingenfelter. This bill proposes to give him a pension of $4 a month. The amendment proposes to send him back to the office of the Commissioner of Pensions to wait a year or more, hiring in the mean while a lawyer to present his case. By the time the case is disposed of in the Pension Office this poor Dutchman may be dead, and his wife in the poor-house, so that neither will get the pittance which the law proposes to grant. In my judgment this amendment will kill all these small cases. These men cannot hire lawyers; they cannot wait two years to get their cases through the Pension Office. They have been there once, and we have the opinion of the Pension Office that they are not entitled to a pension. The committee here say that they are. I believe that the committee are right. I will trust the judgment of any member of that committee as quickly as that of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] or the Commissioner of Pensions. If one man is to pass on all these cases, give me one man from this committee. Do not turn these poor fellows over again to the Commissioner of Pensions, in whose office they have struggled so long.

Mr. WARNER. "The gentleman from Ohio" expresses no opinion as to the merits of any of these cases.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. If the gentleman from Ohio, who is now getting his pension, and is not willing that anybody else should receive a pension, can state any reason why this poor German should not have a pension, I would like to hear it.

Mr. WARNER. I know of no reason why he should not have a pension.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then let us vote him a pension.

Mr. WARNER. If he is entitled to a pension he should have it at once, and not wait for years.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The committee say that he is entitled to a pension; I believe the committee tell the truth. I believe he ought to have a pension, and I am ready to vote for it.

Mr. HOSTETLER. It seems to me there is a great waste of time on this matter. The question is simply whether arrears should be carried with the bill. The amendment, as has been already said, simply sends the applicant for a pension back to the Pension Office, where the decision has already been against him. Does not every member on this floor know that when we send one of these applications back to the Pension Office it will meet the same response it has already met? In my judgment we should, as a uniform policy, date all these pensions back to the time of the disability or the death of the soldier, if he died in the service. We have already, by the unanimous voice of this House, sent to the Senate a resolution declaring as the judgment of this House that these pensions should thus date back. Why, then, should we not express the same judgment in passing upon these bills? Let us not wrangle over them, but pass such as are meritorious.

Mr. HAZELTON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether all the special pension acts of the Forty-fifth Congress did not contain this clause: "Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws." [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HOSTETLER. I wish to occupy a few moments in response to some remarks or insinuations made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] in reference to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The insinuation is made that the committee have transacted their business in a very loose manner; that we did not give these bills proper consideration. Now, how are applications of this kind examined in the Pension Office?

Mr. WARNER. I do not know.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Very well; I will tell the gentleman exactly how they are examined. They are placed by the Commissioner in the hands of a clerk, who examines the case and reports his judgment under the direction of the Commissioner; and that judgment proceeds upon the presumption that every man presenting a claim is attempting to defraud the Government, unless he can support his application by ten times the amount of evidence that would be required to convict a man of murder.

Mr. WARNER. Let the gentleman explain how the committee examine these cases.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I will do that. The committee take up these bills under the general understanding as to the points on which they are to pass. A sub-committee examines each bill to determine whether the objection made by the Commissioner or his clerk is based on a mere technicality. We find that of the cases favorably reported by our committee nine out of ten have been rejected at the Pension Office on mere technicalities. If the evidence against a man indicted for murder were one-fourth as strong as the evidence in numbers of these cases, conviction would be certain.

Mr. O'NEILL. Let us pass the bills.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let us have a chance to vote; we will pass the bills if you give us a chance.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I would like to say more; but as the Committee of the Whole seem impatient for a vote, I yield the floor.

The question recurred on Mr. HUBBELL's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NOAH CATON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2854) granting a pension to Noah Caton.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Noah Caton, of Company H, Eighty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that the said Noah Caton be allowed a pension at the rate of $4 per month, commencing from the date of his honorable discharge, to wit, September 25, 1862, from the Army of the United States on account of injuries and disease received and contracted by him while in the service and line of duty during the late war of the rebellion.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have an amendment to offer which I think will obviate some of the objections to the last amendment. Where it says "at the rate of $4," add so it will read, "at the rate of $4 a month, but as to arrears and any increase of his pension hereafter, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws including general laws granting arrears." If the House will be patient with me for a moment—

Mr. WILSON. Will that give the arrears now?

Mr. HAWLEY. If the committee will be patient with me I will advocate it, and much more briefly if not interrupted by questions.

Mr. WHITE. Let the report be first read.

The report was read, at follows:

The claimant, Noah Caton, enlisted on the 27th of September, 1861, in Company H, Eighty-fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was honorably discharged on the 25th September, 1862, by surgeon's certificate of disability, (partial paralysis.) He filed an application for a pension, alleging that, in line of duty at Yorktown, Virginia, in May, 1862, he received a shell injury, resulting in a large tumor in the right side, which disables him from manual labor. His application was rejected on the 24th of October, 1879, because "no record of alleged injury or result, and the claimant states he is unable to furnish medical testimony to show that the disability existed in service."

The commissioned officers of the company of which the applicant was a private are all dead, and the whereabouts of the surgeon the applicant is unable to find, although he has made diligent search to ascertain his residence.

The applicant produces Aaron Wicklow and John W. Dial, who testified, on the 8th of April, 1879, that "they were privates in Company H, Eighty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that Noah Caton was of the same company and regiment, and that while the company was at the battle of Yorktown, Virginia, on the 15th day of May, 1862, he was hit with a piece of shell in his right side, and from the effects there formed a gathering and originated a large tumor."

Other evidence in this claim fully sustains this statement, and shows the claimant's disability.

Examining Surgeon Dr. S. S. Good, who on the 1st day of February, 1879, examined the claimant, reports "that, in his opinion, the disability did originate in the service, and that he finds a large fatty tumor in the claimant's right side; measures eight inches in length and half as much in width;" and also says, "the claimant feels partial paralysis of the entire right side." He further says, "I recommend one-half—$4 per month."

In view of the evidence, the committee are of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I offer the following amendment, to come in at its proper place, leaving the rate to stand at $4. It is a four-dollar case, I believe:

After the words "at the rate of $4 a month" insert "but as to arrears and any increase of his pension hereafter subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, including the general laws granting arrears."

Mr. Chairman, I take it for granted there is no man in this committee or House who is not willing to do justice to the soldier. There is no use of criminations or recriminations on that subject. I shall begin to think by and by, although I served five years, I shall have to vindicate myself. I scorn to do it. I scorn to do anything as if the soldier was a baby who wanted to take all the money the country wanted to give. The soldier is as patriotic as anybody else, and there is not a gathering of honest soldiers in the country which does not wish you to be careful in granting pensions. [Applause.] They do not want you to grant sham pensions. I would give a pension to every man who ever had been wounded, but there is no use of paying too much. There will be some men who will not attend faithfully to their duties and who will play sham, and some who will cheat if they get a chance. They are like all the rest of the world and they know it. Those who were good soldiers know it, and they do not want any humbug. [Applause.] You cannot fool them a bit by any speeches made here.

We have passed a law giving soldiers their arrears. I am frank to say if I had been here, I would have voted against it. [Applause.] I will say before or after what I believe on any bill, anywhere. I have no reserve on any question in the world. I would have voted against that bill because my opinion is the theory of pensions is to grant a man enough to go and live on, but never to go back to see what excuse there can be got to prevent paying it. I will do it fairly and justly. There have been many cases which granted soldiers pensions from time to time as a relief from the severity of the law. No general law you can draw up will fail to do injustice in many cases. There will be a little gap in the evidence where you are morally convinced the man ought to have a pension. I know of some cases; I know there are some on my list. I have among my acquaintances many soldiers who have to come to Congress as a court of equity, to get relief.

But I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] we are doing this thing in an imperfect and crude way. We have to establish some court of equity, some court of claims, outside of this House, because we are swamped with the number of them. We cannot do justice. There may be a commission of six or seven or nine honorable and thoroughly honest men—of course they will be friendly to the soldiers; every one is that—who will report on them as fast as they can; to sit as a court of equity, and give that relief which the severity and uniformity of the law in particular cases cannot give.

Now we have passed many special acts. The men relieved under those special acts do not get their arrears, but there is a law pending to give them those arrears. When they go to the bureau to get them, they get rated fairly under the law and the general provision of the pension act. Sometimes a man was not entitled to anything for some time after he left the service. He was perfectly able-bodied, able to get his living as anybody else, but some disability developed itself, unquestionably owing to his service in the war, and he became totally disabled or partially disabled. These all should be pensioned, but the pensioner would not ask you to go back over the three or four years when he was able-bodied, able to earn his living. He would not pretend it. I say nine out of ten soldiers would say it is not just to claim that. At any rate the Pension Office grades these things. Sometimes for two years he was entitled to a couple of dollars, and then disability gave him eight or ten. I do not like the passage of bills to grade these arrears back to the date of discharge, because it is not just to those soldiers who have not that sort of privilege. I ask you to put all fairly entitled at least to a pension upon some sort of equality.

This man in this case is entitled to $4 a month. I wish by this amendment to put him at $4 a month. If he is entitled to that he should have that. I would put him as to arrears where you put hundreds and thousands of pensioners; go fairly into the examination and see how he should be rated. That I would do. As to increase, perhaps he may have grown more disabled. It happens often, very often. I would say as to that increase he should stand as all his comrades who got pensions under the pension laws or by special acts. This is the time to put the faithful soldiers on an equality; that is all. I submit to all lawyers as well as to the members of the Pension Committee whether it does or not. That is what I seek.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a single question. I understand him to say that there is now pending a bill to grant to all of those who have been allowed a pension by special act their arrears of pension.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am so told. It passed this Congress at the extra-session and is now pending in the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was going to say, I know very well that all the acts passed during the Forty-fifth Congress, especially after the passage of the arrears act, were expressly limited and confined to the passage of the act, and could not be construed by any possibility to allow arrears of pensions.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Connecticut whether he thinks the amendment he has offered will give to the soldiers pensioned by these bills their arrears unless that pending bill does become the law?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; I think not.

Mr. STONE. I so understood the gentleman, and therefore I see no object in including it at all, for unless the bill which passed the House at the extra session does become the law they will not be entitled to arrearages of pensions, because the law officer of the Pension Office has decided that pensioners pensioned by special act are not entitled to these arrears.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rather take it for granted that act will be passed.

Mr. STONE. So, "subject to the provisions of the pension laws, including arrears," means nothing? The general law, including arrears, means nothing, because the law officer has decided that under that law granting arrears of pension persons are not entitled to arrears who were pensioned by special act?

Mr. BAYNE. This act does provide for it.

Mr. STONE. Therefore it means nothing, unless the arrears law does pass?

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. COFFROTH. I believe the Committee on Invalid Pensions would accept that amendment as read by the Clerk.

Mr. LAPHAM. Before the vote is taken on this question I desire to say a word. It seems to me there is a misapprehension in the minds of many gentlemen here as to the effect of the action of the Pension Office in refusing a pension. It is not a decision that a person was not disabled in the service. It is not a decision that a person is not entitled to two or four or six or eight dollars a month by reason of his disability, but it is a decision that the proofs offered do not bring his case within the law so as to entitle him to consideration at all.

What is the object of an act of Congress granting a pension? It is to place the name of the applicant upon the pension-roll as a person entitled to a pension. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan completely covered the case in that view of it; and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut in part covers it. The effect of it is we direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of this applicant upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws. And what has the Pension Office then to do? To rate his disability according to the pension laws; to increase the rate if his malady increases, to diminish it if he recovers. We do him complete justice when we take away the bar that now exists, and entitle him to consideration in the Pension Office. And that ought to be the effect of every bill that passes here. That was the effect of every bill that passed in the preceding Congresses. I have never known a bill till now that fixed the rate of allowance. I deem it unjust and unsafe; and we ought not to pass bills of that character.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

The question being put, there were—ayes 44, noes 38.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HAZELTON. I suggest that if this amendment is to be put upon this bill it should be put upon the others that preceded it.

Mr. HAWLEY. It occurs to me that this amendment which has just been adopted really dispenses with the three or four lines at the close of the bill and they ought to be dropped. What follows in regard to the date of discharge, &c., becomes immaterial. I will ask the Clerk to read the bill as it is now amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Noah Caton, of Company H, Eighty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that the said Noah Caton be allowed a pension at the rate of $4 a month, but as to arrears and any increase of his pension hereafter, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, including the general laws granting arrears, commencing from the date of his honorable discharge, to wit, September 25, 1862, from the Army of the United States on account of injuries and disease received and contracted by him while in the service and line of duty during the late war of the rebellion.

Mr. DUNNELL. Do I understand that the bill as now amended still contains the rating that it originally contained?

Mr. HAWLEY. As a compromise that may be retained. The bill now starts this soldier at $4 a month; but as to the past he will get what he may receive under the general law as to arrears. It is surplusage to state when he was discharged. That will be established when he goes to ask for his arrears.

Mr. TAYLOR. I may state that the Commissioner of Pensions holds that no soldier who receives a pension by a special act is entitled to arrears. This amendment just adopted therefore cuts off this soldier.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I ask whether it is intended by that amendment that the pensioner shall have arrears of pension?

Mr. HAWLEY. I believe pensioners should have arrears, and the bill has passed the House unanimously to that effect. That it will pass the Senate I have no doubt. And Congress should put all these men on an equality.

Mr. HOUK. The gentleman from Connecticut said a while ago that if he had been here he would have voted against the bill granting arrears.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would; but the bill having been passed, I think now all ought to have the same treatment.

The bill as amended was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JACOB J. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2039) granting a pension to Jacob J. Smith; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jacob J. Smith, first Lieutenant of Company H, Twelfth Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry, at the rate of $6 per month from the 20th of July, 1863, that being the date of his discharge from the Army of the United States in the late war of the rebellion, on account of injury received and disease contracted while in said military service in line of duty.

A MEMBER. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The complainant, Jacob J. Smith, late first Lieutenant of Company H, Twelfth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, was in the Army of the United States from the 20th of January, 1862, to the 20th of July, 1863, when he was honorably discharged. He applied for a pension on the 3d day of August, 1876, alleging that he "contracted bleeding piles, near Winchester, Virginia, in July, 1863." On the 19th of April, 1879, his claim was rejected, because the "disability alleged not in a degree pensionable."

There appears to be no controversy about the disease being contracted while in the Army of the United States and in line of duty.

Examining Surgeon William Findley says: "It is my belief that the said disability did really originate in the service aforesaid in line of duty," and he rates the disability at "five and two-thirds dollars per month."

Dr. T. M. Bulick, who has made a recent examination, swears he "found prolapse of the rectum and a varicose condition of the hemorrhoidal veins with relaxation of mucous membrane of the part, causing a number of pile tumors of various sizes, some quite large, presenting quite a congested and inflamed appearance, sufficient to render him at least partially unfit for manual labor."

The evidence of persons who knew the claimant well, says he is unable to perform manual labor, on account of the piles, which they believe he contracted while in the Army.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to a question of order. There has been so much disorder that I have not heard the reading of the report. I have not yet heard what disease that man had.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. It will be necessary for the Clerk to re-read the report.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to offer the same amendment to this bill as was adopted to the previous bill.

Mr. WARNER. I desire also to offer an amendment, to come in after the word "cavalry."

Mr. HOUSE. I submitted a question of order a moment or two ago. I want to hear the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report has been read.

Mr. HOUSE. I could not hear it.

I simply want to say a word, not about these amendments, but on the nature of the evidence on which we are granting these pensions. I do this with very great reluctance, but I do wish to get the attention of the House to the character of evidence on which it is voting money out of the Treasury. Take the case which has just been passed; and what is the evidence? It is the ex parte testimony of two witnesses, who say they were in the Army with the man, and a shell burst and hurt his side, and they believed he had partial paralysis. He did not apply for a pension until 1876. He says he verily believes he contracted a disease in the Army. What disease it was I did not hear.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me a question right here?

Mr. HOUSE. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman if every pension granted by the Government is not decided upon ex parte evidence, and is not the evidence of two witnesses to any particular fact generally considered sufficient?

Mr. HOUSE. I do not know how that is; but I will say this, that I can get a pension in that way for any man in the United States. If I were disposed to act fraudulently I could get the affidavits of two men to pension any man, and so can any other member of this House.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can you get it before the present Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. HOUSE. Get what?

Mr. TAYLOR. Can you get a pension fraudulently before Mr. Bentley, the present Commissioner?

Mr. HOUSE. I do not know how that is; but I say that if you take the ex parte testimony of any two witnesses to any fact you can establish anything.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. How about pensions to soldiers of the Mexican war?

Mr. HOUSE. I do not know about the soldiers of the Mexican war. But I state a fact which every man on this floor knows. If you vote money out of the Treasury on the ex parte testimony of two witnesses whom you know nothing about—and I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. COFFROTH] what he knows about the witnesses in the last case which we have passed?

Mr. COFFROTH. I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. HOUSE. Those witnesses were subjected to no cross-examination. The Government has not been heard. You can vote millions out of the Treasury if you go on in that way.

Mr. COFFROTH. I can tell the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] that the doctrine which he has laid down is a most marvelous doctrine. I have seen many cases tried in a court of justice on the ex parte affidavits of two witnesses; cases which involved thousands of dollars.

Mr. HOUSE. Where was that?

Mr. COFFROTH. In my own State, and nobody appeared to cross-examine the witnesses.

Mr. HOUSE. That was where the party had notice. Has the Government had notice to cross-examine these witnesses?

Mr. COFFROTH. All this evidence has been before the department for years, and it had the right to cross-examine the witnesses.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. One word in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE.] Let me say that every pension granted by the Pension Office from the foundation of the Government to this day, all pensions granted for services rendered in the revolutionary war, for services in the war of 1812, in the Indian wars, in the Mexican war, in every war in which this Government has been engaged—have been granted on ex parte affidavits. If you should get rid of all pensions that are supported by ex parte testimony, you would practically repeal the pension laws, and nullify every pension in existence.

Mr. HOUSE. And we do not know how many of those pensions are fraudulent. It only shows the necessity of our creating some tribunal where a judicial investigation of these claims can take place.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that perhaps there is a little misapprehension on the part of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND.] Although there may be ex parte testimony in these cases, yet in the Pension Office that testimony is submitted to the test of comparison with the official records in the War Department, in the Adjutant-General's Bureau, and the Surgeon-General's Office, in order to ascertain if it is in accord with the record of the soldier. There is a double test applied to the evidence by the Pension Bureau.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let me say, when the records of the War Department are taken, the bureau is taking records which are not supported by oath; simply the certificates of Army officers without oath. And often these unsworn certificates do injustice to the soldier by the neglect or ignorance of the officer in giving his actual physical condition.

Mr. ROBINSON. The theory is, that as the record was made at the time of the transaction it is a part of the res gesta, as we lawyers say. The facts are stated in the records at a time when there is no object on the part of any one to falsify the record. The United States has the right to rely upon those records, and to say that they are more likely to be true than the ex parte testimony of interested parties given years afterward. I do not apply these remarks to this bill, or to the policy which has been adopted by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in these cases. I make them to correct an evident misapprehension on the part of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CRAVENS. And the Commissioner of Pensions will not receive the statement of an officer not made under oath.

Mr. ROBINSON. He will not, after the officer has retired from the service.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. In answer to that let me say that the records of the War Department simply show the military history of the soldier.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. My point of order is that the subject before us is not the manner of taking testimony, but it is the bill which has been read.

Mr. HOUSE. I call for the reading of the report again, and I ask members to listen to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The report has been read.

Mr. HOUSE. Nobody has heard it; I ask that it be read again.

Mr. TAYLOR. I object to the report being read again.

Mr. HAWLEY. I offer the same amendment to this bill that I offered to the last bill.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After the word "month," in line 7 of the bill, insert "but as to arrears and any increase of his pension hereafter subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, including the general laws granting arrears."

Mr. TALBOTT. The gentleman from Tennessee asked for the reading of the report so that we could ascertain—

The CHAIRMAN. Objection was made. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. That amendment relates to a different part of the bill from my amendment, and had better be withheld till mine is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the amendment offered as an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. WARNER. It is in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "cavalry," in line 6, and insert "at a rate proportionate to his disability, as determined under the pension laws, including the act granting arrears."

Mr. WARNER. This amendment will correct any defect in the evidence which the claimant may be unable to supply and will place him upon an exact equality with all other claimants for pensions as to rating. That is simple justice; it is treating all alike.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman says that his amendment is a substitute for mine. So it is in some respects. But I was willing to compromise on one point; that is, to put the man on the list now at some rate, and not require him to wait for six months or a year before any rate is adjusted for him.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WARNER, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 20, noes 45.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. HAWLEY.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] also cuts off all arrears.

Mr. BAYNE. No, it does not.

Mr. TAYLOR. It does.

The amendment was not agreed to, there being—ayes 30, noes 42.

Mr. HOUSE. I want to hear this report read. In making this demand I am not acting captiously. I have not heard the report. I want to hear the evidence on which I am to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that objection having been made to reading the report a second time, it cannot be again read.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw the objection.

The report was again read.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question being taken on laying the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 40, noes 25.

JOSEPH SHOWMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2857) granting a pension to Joseph Showman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph Showman, of Company C, Eighty-fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $6 per month, commencing on the 2d day of June, 1865, that being the date of his final discharge from the Army of the United States, in the late war of the rebellion, on account of injury received and disease contracted while in the military service and in line of duty.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2857) granting a pension to Joseph Showman, late a private in Company C, Eighty-fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to make the following report:

The claimant, Joseph Showman, enlisted on the 22d day of August, 1862, in Company C, Eighty-fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was honorably discharged on the 22d of December, 1862, by surgeon's certificate of disability. He applied for pension on the 20th of October, 1876, alleging that at Camp Curtin, Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, and in line of duty, on the 1st day of October, 1862, he fell into a ditch and a cart-wheel ran over his breast, injuring his breast internally on the left side, depressing it, and that he discharges matter and blood from his breast, and has ever since the injury. This claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions on the 10th of May, 1878, because there was no record of alleged injury, and inability to furnish medical evidence, and that the disability existed prior to enlistment.

The claimant alleges that after the injury he was taken to the hospital, was not treated by the surgeon of the regiment, and that he cannot ascertain the name of the surgeon of the hospital and his place of residence if now alive.

William W. Brown, on the 19th of January, 1877, swears that the claimant lived at his house for twelve months before he enlisted, and that prior to and at the date of his enlistment he was a sound, able-bodied man, and especially free from all disease of breast or side.

Jacob Enos, Jacob Croner, and Daniel Kuhns, on the 12th day of October, 1876, testified that the claimant was a sound, able-bodied man, and free from disease of breast at date of enlistment.

William Logan, captain of the company, testifies that at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, about October 1, 1862, claimant fell across a ditch or gutter, and a cart-wheel passed over his breast, and that he was taken to the hospital and afterward discharged. Daniel Kuhns and Samuel Kunkle, comrades, testify to the injury, and say the claimant was internally injured on the left side, and that they helped to carry him away.

Jonathan Shawly and Henry Nedrow say that the claimant was not treated by the regimental surgeon, but was taken to the hospital immediately after being hurt.

Dr. Henry Brubaker testifies that he had the claimant under treatment after December, 1862, until in September, 1864, for pulmonary hemorrhage.

Dr. A. G. Miller testified that he treated claimant since June, 1872, for disease of breast and side, which he thinks originated from some injury. He says the claimant is always expectorating mucus and blood in large quantities, with soreness and constant pain in left side.

William W. Brown, Jacob Croner, Jacob Enos, Abraham Shaulus, Hon. Noah M. Marker, and Dr. Moses Hartman, and other reputable witnesses testify to the disability of the claimant after his discharge; that he had "a sore breast and side;" that he "laid in bed much of the time spitting blood;" sometimes "blood ran out of his mouth;" that "he is in delicate health;" and that his "disability has been continuous." Examining Surgeon W. B. Lawman, in his report of the examination of the claimant made on the 6th of August, 1877, says the disability is permanent, and that it is his belief that it originated in the service in line of duty, and rates the disability at three-fourths, or $6 per month.

The evidence, in the opinion of the committee, is overwhelming in support of the claimant's right to a pension. The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. This soldier seems to have been in the service only two or three months.

The motion was not agreed to, there being—ayes 4, noes 40.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "volunteer," in line 6, and inserting the following:

At a rate proportionate to his disability, to be determined under the general pension laws, including the arrears act.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

WILLIAM T. MCCOY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2856) granting a pension to William T. McCoy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William T. McCoy, of Company B, One hundred and tenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and that said William T. McCoy be allowed a pension at the rate of $4 per month, commencing from the date of his honorable discharge, namely, October 24, 1864, from the Army of the United States, on account of injuries and disease incurred and contracted by him while in the service and line of duty during the late war of the rebellion.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2856) granting a pension to William T. McCoy, late private in Company B, One hundred and tenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to make the following report:

The claimant enlisted in the military service of the United States on the 1st day of September, 1861, in Company B, One hundred and tenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was honorably discharged on the 24th day of October, 1864. He filed an application for pension, setting forth in it that while in action at the battle of Fredericksburg, Virginia, on the 13th of December, 1862, he received a gunshot wound on the top of his head, and also while on the march to Chancellorsville, Virginia, about May, 1863, he sustained an injury to his left side, causing palpitation of the heart, &c. His application was rejected because of "no disability since discharge."

There is no dispute about the gunshot wound and injury being received by the claimant while in the Army and line of duty.

Examining Surgeon Dr. William C. Findley says in his report of the examination of the claimant on the 27th of November, 1878, that "by reason of alleged disability resulting from gunshot wound on top of head, and injury to left side causing heart disease, the claimant is one-half incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor."

Examining Surgeon Dr. G. W. Smith says in his report of the examination of the claimant, made July 16, 1879, "by reason of the gunshot wound of the head, the applicant is not incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor."

All the other evidence, both medical and that of persons who know the claimant, sustain the report of Examining Surgeon Findley, and it will be seen that Examining Surgeon Smith only examined the claimant for the gunshot wound, entirely overlooking the injury that caused heart disease.

After reviewing and considering all the evidence the committee are of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to a pension at half rate, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "infantry," in line 6, and inserting "at a rate proportionate to his disability, to be determined under the general pension laws, including the arrears act."

I wish to say, in reply to a remark which has been made here, that the matter of rating is speedily done in the Pension Office. It is not delayed by any accumulation of business. It is a question of fact readily determined, and determined in almost all these cases upon the papers already on file. There need not be delay in determining the rating. There are surgeons' certificates attached to all these claims. The rating can be determined at the Pension Office speedily, and thus we put all upon an equality.

The amendment of Mr. WARNER was not agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to amend by inserting the following:

But as to arrears and any increase of his pension hereafter subject to the provisions and limitation of the pension laws, including the general laws granting arrears.

I call attention to what I fear the committee is overlooking—the injustice they are doing to a large class of soldiers by establishing the rate of this pension from the date of discharge. There is not another pensioner in the United States except those to whom you have applied it who can get that privilege.

Mr. COFFROTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. They all get it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand that. That is where the arrear comes in. Where they get it in the general arrears act they come and show some bad disability two or three years; some slight at first, and it increased afterward; fairly granted as near as human laws and our wisdom can get at it. But there is a large class of cases which had special relief by acts of Congress. They get nothing; they never had anything, and there is no provision in law giving them anything previous to the date of the passage of the bill. A bill is pending in the Senate which has passed this House giving them arrears, and undoubtedly it will pass the Senate. It will put them on an equality with their brothers who had arrears granted to them. I want to put this man and the others on an equality with them; that is, that they may be graded as to past pensions and not fixed by a uniform grade from the beginning to the end. That is all I want. I believe it is fair.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. On that amendment I desire to say this, that the gentleman does not put this pensioner on an equality with those who received arrears under the general arrearage act. He deprives this man of all arrearages.

Several MEMBERS. Let us know what the amendment is?

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HAZELTON. If I understand the first amendment, he is inconsistent with himself. His other amendment, as I understood him, included arrearages. The first amendment, he alleged to the House, would give to the soldier his arrearages.

Mr. HAWLEY. We are to have a bill to give them to these and all others.

Mr. HAZELTON. Did not I understand the first amendment of the gentleman to give arrearages?

Mr. HAWLEY. Subject to the laws granting arrearages.

Mr. HAZELTON. The gentleman from Connecticut took the position it would give him arrears of pension. The gentleman from Kansas took the position it would not, and antagonized the gentleman from Connecticut on that. Am I not right?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Yes, sir; I wish to call the gentleman's attention—

Mr. HAZELTON. The gentleman from Connecticut proposes one system for one bill and another system for another bill. It is impossible for us as a committee to do any solid, substantial work under this kind of amendment. We want to have all soldiers or classes of soldiers under uniform legislation.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I wish to say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Connecticut is consistent. The other amendment he offered cut off all arrears.

Mr. HAZELTON. He did not so understand it.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. He did so understand it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I must beg the attention of the committee when two intelligent gentlemen persist in misunderstanding me, if I may be allowed that sort of contradictory expression. I said I hoped now as Congress had given arrears to all pensioners on the rolls that the rule of giving arrears would be applied in all cases. That I said. That I am in favor of. I said, then, I would not on this bill go back and say a man should have $4 or $6 of arrears to the date of his discharge. Why? Because that is not said about anybody else. It is not said about hundreds and thousands already on the rolls. They get adjusted arrears. And the amendment I offered before said as to arrearages they should be subject to law—that is, subject to adjusted arrearages. Then came in the point that men benefited under special acts had no arrears. I answer that by saying they ought to have them, and I have no doubt they will have them because we have passed a bill to that effect. All those men under my first amendment would have that—

Mr. HAZELTON. What does the gentlemen mean by "adjusted arrears," if he does not give any?

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, dear! [Laughter.]

The question recurred on Mr. HAWLEY's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 39.

So the amendment was rejected.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HAWK. I move that the committee now rise. It seems we have gone far enough.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 36.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HAWLEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BURROWS reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had the pension cases on the Private Calendar under consideration and had directed him to report sundry bills, some with and some without amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bills reported without amendment will first be read.

Mr. BROWNE. I hope the House will indulge me for a moment. Near the close of the Calendar is the name of Abram F. Farrar who has been for seven years totally paralyzed. It is a most pitiable case—

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There are many in the same condition.

Mr. HAYES. I have one of the same sort.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I have a case worse than that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 382 for the purpose of putting it on its passage.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is that a pension case?

Mr. TAYLOR. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that nothing is in order except the consideration of the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I move the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 40.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that all the bills reported to the House be now passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will require unanimous consent. There was objection.

PENSION BILL PASSED.

The Clerk read the first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3076) granting a pension to William R. Weimer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill, as read, will be taken as having been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill; and the Speaker pro tempore announced it carried.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a parliamentary question. How can the question be raised that no quorum has voted when there has been no count?

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I call for a division.

Mr. COFFROTH. I make the point of order that it is too late to call for a division as the bill has been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is right to allow the gentleman the privilege of a division. It was upon that vote that he raised the question that no quorum had voted.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 5.

So the bill was passed.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2862) granting an increase of pension to John H. Black;

A bill (H. R. No. 1890) granting a pension to Ellen Gillespie;

A bill (H. R. No. 2861) granting an increase of pension to Herman Baldwin;

A bill (H. R. No. 2860) granting a pension to Thomas H. Vaughn;

A bill (H. R. No. 3077) granting a pension to John L. Williams;

A bill (H. R. No. 2864) granting a pension to Isaiah W. Bunker;

A bill (H. R. No. 2859) granting a pension to Paul Walker;

A bill (H. R. No. 1806) granting a pension to Michael Lingenfelter;

A bill (H. R. No. 2039) granting a pension to Jacob J. Smith;

A bill (H. R. No. 2857) granting a pension to Joseph Showman; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2856) granting a pension to William T. McCoy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the titles of the bills which have been reported with amendments.

The first bill reported with amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 1465) granting a pension to Levi Ludam.

The amendments were as follows:

Strike out the word "Ludam" and insert "Leedom," and amend the title so as to conform to the bill.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The next bill reported with an amendment was the bill (H. R. No. 2854) granting a pension to Noah Caton.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "month," in the seventh line, the following:

But as to arrears and any increase of his pension hereafter, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, including the general laws granting arrears.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Let us vote that down.

The question being put on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 25, noes 38.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COFFROTH moved to reconsider the votes passing the several bills; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COFFROTH. I hope not; we have still a number of reports to present from the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can only reach his object by voting down the motion.

The question being put on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 33, noes 31.

Mr. McKENZIE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COFFROTH. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. ALDRICH, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. COFFROTH.

Mr. WHITE. I make the point of order that on a motion to adjourn there cannot be a call for tellers on the ground that a quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will proceed with their duty.

Mr. WHITE. I insist on my point of order that the Chair cannot order tellers on the ground that a quorum did not vote.

Mr. BURROWS. The House is dividing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum voted on the vote preceding that on the motion to adjourn. The Chair has decided that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] had a right to call for tellers, and the tellers have been appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 22, noes 30.

Mr. TALBOTT and Mr. WHITE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TALBOTT. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 27, nays 42, not voting 223; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following proceedings took place:

When the Clerk had called the first two names,

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, said: I understood the gentleman who called for the yeas and nays withdrew the call.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman misunderstood. I did not withdraw the call.

The Clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. COFFROTH, (interrupting the roll-call.) I ask unanimous consent that the call of the roll be dispensed with and that we adjourn.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, and Mr. BAYNE objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair begs leave to state that he made that suggestion because it is evident the call of the roll will disclose there is no quorum and without a quorum no business can be transacted if the point is made. The call of the roll is simply a waste of time.

Mr. BAYNE. It may disclose who are here attending to business.

The following announcements were made:

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. SAMFORD. I am paired with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. MILES. I am paired with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois.

Mr. FARR. Mr. FRYE, of Maine, and Mr. BLACKBURN, of Kentucky, are paired.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I am paired on political questions with Mr. CHALMERS, of Mississippi. I think the question whether a disabled soldier should receive a pension is a political question, and, being paired, I do not vote.

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague, Mr. PIERCE, is paired with my colleague, Mr. LOUNSBERRY.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am paired with Mr. HERBERT, of Alabama. My colleague, Mr. FIELD, is paired with Mr. McMILLIN, of Tennessee.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I desire to state that Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, is paired with Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa.

Mr. HERR. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. WISE, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SAPP. I am paired with Mr. DUNN, of Arkansas; if he were here, I should vote "ay." I desire also to state that my colleague, Mr. PRICE, is absent on account of sickness in his family, and my colleagues, Mr. MCCOY and Mr. THOMPSON, are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. My colleague, Mr. MITCHELL, is paired with Mr. GUNTER, of Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. LORING, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. SPRINGER, is paired with Mr. BELFORD, of Colorado.

Mr. CALDWELL. I desire to announce that Mr. BOUCK, of Wisconsin, is paired with Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio.

Mr. CULBERSON. My colleague, Mr. UPSON, is detained at home on account of sickness.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to announce that Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague, Mr. SIMONTON, is paired with Mr. MCCOY, of Iowa.

Mr. KENNA. My colleague from West Virginia, Mr. MARTIN, was in the House when the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole were acted upon; but then left, being unwell, supposing that no further business would be transacted to-night.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table—

Mr. WHITE. I make the point of order that the last vote disclosed the fact that no quorum is present; and therefore no business is now in order except a call of the House or a motion to adjourn.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 42, noes 6.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. AIKEN: The petitions of the publishers of the Newberry (South Carolina) News; of the Pickens (South Carolina) Sentinel, and of the Southern Presbyterian, and Southern Presbyterian Review, Columbia, South Carolina, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILLIAM ALDRICH: The petitions of M. J. Cahill & Co., publishers of the Pilot, and of the publishers of the Mining Review, Chicago, Illinois, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Henry Bonn and 60 other firms and individuals engaged in the manufacture and sale of cigars in the first district of Illinois, for a reduction of the tax on cigars to $4 per thousand—to the same committee.

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of citizens of Marshall County, Kansas, that Congress enact such laws as will alleviate the oppressions imposed upon the people by the transportation monopolies that now control the interstate commerce of the country—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of citizens of Marshall County, Kansas, that the patent laws be so amended as to make the manufacturer or vendor of patented articles alone responsible for infringement—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. ATHERTON: The petitions of E. J. Fristoe, of Hebron, and of McKenna & Co., of Junction City, Ohio, for the repeal of the stamp-tax on medicines, &c.—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of John Kirkpatrick, publisher of the Jeffersonian, Cambridge, Ohio, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the same committee.

By Mr. ATKINS: The petitions of E. V. Turner and J. H. Broach, for the repeal of the stamp-tax on medicines, &c.—to the same committee.

By Mr. BEALE: Three petitions of citizens of Accomac County, Virginia, for an appropriation to clean out a channel at Chincoteague Island—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BERRY: The petition of the publishers of the Mendocino (California) Beacon, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOUCK: The petitions of G. W. Palchen, publisher of the Times, New London, and of Ed. Van De Castelle and J. B. Heyman, publishers of De Pere Standard, De Pere, Wisconsin, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of ex-soldiers and sailors, for the passage of the Weaver soldier bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of citizens of Ahnapee, Wisconsin, for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at that place—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BRIGGS: The petition of John Gage and 30 others, citizens of Merrimack County, New Hampshire, that the patent laws be so amended as to make the manufacturer or vendor of patented articles alone responsible for infringement—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of the same parties, that Congress enact such laws as will alleviate the oppressions imposed upon the people by the transportation monopolies that now control the interstate commerce of the country—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BROWNE: The petition of the Richmond (Indiana) Telegram Company, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. BURROWS: The petition of citizens of Michigan and Indiana, for certain legislation relating to the management and treatment of the Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: The petition of Andrew Richie and other members of the board of directors of the Western Tract Society, that section 25 of the postal law of March 3, 1879, be so amended as to make the postage on all weekly newspapers and periodicals not exceeding two ounces in weight uniform—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CALKINS: The petition of the publishers of the Notre Dame (Indiana) Scholastic, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. J. G. CANNON: The petition of George Gilman and 120 others, of Macon County, Illinois, that Congress enact such laws as will alleviate the oppressions imposed upon the people by the transportation monopolies that now control the interstate commerce of the country—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of George Gilman and 100 others, of Macon County, Illinois, that the patent laws be so amended as to make the manufacturer or vendor of patented articles alone responsible for infringement—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CARPENTER: The petition of H. C. Wood, publisher of the Index, Pattersonville, Iowa, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CLAFLIN: The petition of Cook & Sons, of Milford, Mass., that materials used in making paper be placed on the free list, for a reduction of the duty on printing-paper, and for the abolition of the duty on type—to the same committee.

By Mr. COLERICK: The petition of J. D. Goodwin and 66 others, citizens of Wells County, Indiana, that the patent laws be so amended as to make the manufacturer or vendor of patented articles alone responsible for infringement—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. COOK: The petition of M. Calloway, publisher, of Georgia, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. COVERT: The petition of Edward H. Jones and others, citizens of Suffolk County, New York, for the abolition of compulsory pilotage—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COWGILL: The petition of William H. Mattingly and 49 other soldiers of the late war, for the equalization of bounties—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CRAVENS: The petitions of P. H. Rice, publisher of the Hot Springs Telegraph, and of M. M. McGuire, publisher of the Independent Arkansian, Dardanelle, Arkansas, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. DE LA MATYR: The petitions of Abel Fisher and 473 others; of Perry Booker and 19 others; of William Hubbard and 34 others; of John W. Blades and 31 others; of Jeremiah Collier and 46 others; of James Russell and 94 others; of E. R. Miller and 18 others; and of James S. Ryan and 25 others, soldiers of the United States Army, engaged in the late war, for the early passage of a law providing for the payment of the difference between the value of greenbacks, in which they were paid for their services, and the value of gold at the time of payment—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of J. H. Cole and 46 others, for the passage of the Reagan interstate-commerce bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 5, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

STAR-ROUTE POSTAL CONTRACTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of the Treasury; which was read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 4, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of Senate resolution of March 1, requesting information of amounts paid for star postal service.

The resolution was referred on the same day to the Sixth Auditor, with request that he prepare the information called for by the resolution, and on the 3d instant he returned it with the following indorsement:

"The information called for by this resolution was furnished Hon. J. C. S. BLACKBURN, of the House of Representatives, on the 2d instant, and, being of a voluminous character and requiring much time on its preparation, Hon. JAMES B. BECK, the mover of the within resolution, was, previous to the receipt of this paper, provided with a condensed summary of the information already furnished to Mr. BLACKBURN, and has accepted the same as sufficient."

If this should prove a sufficient answer to the resolution the Department will be relieved of much labor; and unless further advised I shall deem the information called for as already furnished.

Very respectfully,

Hon. WILLIAM A. WHEELER,
President United States Senate.

JOHN B. HAWLEY,
Acting Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will lie upon the table, in the absence of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It might be well for me to remark that I heard the Senator from Kentucky say that he thought the communication sent to the House of Representatives would answer his purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication in any event would lie on the table, subject to his call if he desires to call it up.

Mr. BECK subsequently said: The Secretary of the Treasury this morning sent an answer to the Senate to the resolution submitted by me, which was passed on the 1st of March, relative to the expenditures for the star postal service, in which he says:

If this should prove a sufficient answer to the resolution the Department will be relieved of much labor; and, unless further advised, I shall deem the information called for as already furnished.

I desire to say that the next morning after the passage of the resolution by the Senate the Secretary sent a communication to the Committee on Appropriations, or rather it was addressed to myself for their benefit, which was entirely satisfactory, and we regard the answer as full.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky where the information can be found that is said to have been furnished?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was sent to the House of Representatives, and printed.

Mr. BECK. A detailed statement of the star service by routes was sent to the House of Representatives. It was so voluminous that we did not require it in that form; but an abstract, a recapitulation of the whole of it, and everything the Senator would like to see, is in the room of the Committee on Appropriations, and we will furnish him with a copy of it in a few minutes.

Mr. TELLER. Will it be printed?

Mr. BECK. It was printed for the use of the committee and of the Senate, and will be laid on the tables of Senators.

AFFAIRS IN ALASKA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 26th ultimo, copies of reports from Commander L. A. Beardslee, commanding the United States ship Jamestown, stationed in the waters of Alaska, containing information in relation to the present condition of affairs in Alaska; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

He also presented the petition of William D. Griffith and others, citizens of Victoria County, Texas, praying for such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WINDOM presented the petition of the Minnesota State Editorial Association, praying Congress to pass a bill placing wood and straw-pulp, soda-ash, and other chemicals used in the manufacture of paper on the free list, and reducing the duty on printing-paper used for books, pamphlets, and magazines at least to 5 per cent. ad valorem; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Robert Barton, formerly Captain of Company C, Eighty-sixth New York Veteran Volunteers, and 37 others, citizens, soldiers, and sailors of Ada, Polk County, Minnesota, and the petition of A. McAlister and 88 others, citizens and ex-soldiers of Winona, Minnesota, praying the passage of what is known as the Weaver bill; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a memorial of citizens of Saint Cloud, Stearns County, Minnesota, in favor of an appropriation by Congress of $100,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River opposite Saint Cloud, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ROLLINS presented the petition of Daniel Clark, United States district judge, and others, citizens of New Hampshire, praying for the removal of the United States circuit and district courts from Exeter to Concord, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of the Pioneer Farmers' Club, of Westerly, Rhode Island, praying for the establishment of a department of agriculture at Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of citizens of Centre County, Pennsylvania, praying for such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Centre County, Pennsylvania, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petitions of citizens of Centre County, Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a department of agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented the memorial of James Rollins and 9 others, soldiers in the late war and citizens of Buffalo Mills, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BOOTH presented the petition of the Cigarmakers' Association of the Pacific Coast, praying for legislation to prevent the manufacture of cigars in tenement houses; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of the Memphis Cotton Exchange and 50 of the leading commercial firms of Tennessee, praying that the mail service shall not be reduced, but maintained by proper appropriations; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of Thomas F. Greneker, of Newberry, South Carolina, publisher of the Newberry Herald, praying for the abolition of the tariff duty upon printing-type; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, presented the petition of Charles A. Foster, master United States Navy, praying to be restored to his proper place on the masters' list of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yesterday morning I reported from the Committee on Appropriations a joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes." I have received a letter addressed to me from Mr. Clarence King, the Director of the United States Geological Survey, giving information upon the subject-matter of the joint resolution, which I ask to have printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1209) to designate, classify, and fix the salaries of persons in the railway mail service, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on Territories, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate of January 12, 1880, to inquire into the expediency of providing a territorial government for the Territory of Alaska, and to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1391) authorizing the appointment of justices of the peace and constables in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. No. 1426) for the organization of the Territory of Alaska, and providing for the establishment of a civil government therefor; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FARLEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of P. J. Reuss, M. D., of New York, praying that the pension paid him under special act approved in June, 1878, be increased from one-half to a full pension, and that he be paid arrears of pension under the act of January 25, 1879, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 358) granting a pension to Nelson Roosevelt, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1235) granting a pension to Susan Smallwood, widow of William J. Smallwood, first lieutenant Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Anne R. Voorhees, widow of Philip R. Voorhees, late a captain in the United States Navy, praying for the passage of an act granting her a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1360) granting a pension to Aaron Hatcher, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BALDWIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2006) to amend sections 2493 and 2494 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the importation of neat cattle into the United States for breeding purposes, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 886) to repeal certain laws relating to permanent and indefinite appropriations, submitted a report thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. No. 1424) to repeal certain laws relating to permanent and indefinite appropriations; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1113) granting a pension to Peter K. Morgan, private in the war of 1812, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 748) granting a pension to Thomas E. Brawner, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report a bill prepared by that committee to appropriate money for the continuance of improvement of the Susquehanna River. I wish to remark that the object of separating this from other items in the river and harbor bill is that the Fish Commissioner may have preparation made in the Susquehanna River for a much larger development of fish culture. When the bill comes up I will explain further in reference to the matter.

The bill (S. No. 1425) to appropriate money for the continuance of improvement in the Susquehanna River was read twice by its title.

Mr. GORDON. If there is no objection, I should like to have the bill immediately considered. If there is any objection, I will let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be reported and objections asked for.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it a bill just reported?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has just been reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 602) for the relief of Thomas W. McAffrey, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1166) granting a pension to James H. Stevens, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

KIMBERLY BROTHERS.

Mr. FERRY. By direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I reported on Wednesday last the bill (S. No. 953) for the relief of Kimberly Brothers adversely, and it was postponed indefinitely. The Senator who had charge of the bill [Mr. McPHERSON] was not then present, but is now here. By direction of the committee I ask that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely will be regarded as reconsidered. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EATON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1427) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Shay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENDLETON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1428) for the relief of Hugh McGlincey; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1429) for the relief of Sarah McDonald; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the erection of a public building in the city of Greenville, South Carolina, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

TITLES AT HOT SPRINGS.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask unanimous consent to introduce at this time a joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 89) touching the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc. That the time allowed the Secretary of the Interior to instruct the United States land officers at Little Rock, Arkansas, under section 10 of the act of March 3, 1877, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas," be extended until the 15th day of April next; and all further proceedings under said act be suspended until that time.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution, and with the permission of the Senate I will give my reasons for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the reasons.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, you are aware that several efforts have been made to get up what is called the Hot Springs bill, and under the joint resolution heretofore passed the time for action expires on the 14th of this month. I think it is very evident from the state of the business of the Senate and the different orders that stand before that bill, and the fact that whatever is done here will have to go to the House for action there, that there will not be time to complete action before the 14th of the month. A number of Senators have suggested to me that they desire to look into it closely; and this resolution, by extending for thirty days the suspension heretofore ordered, will give them an opportunity to examine it. In the mean time every effort will be made to get up the bill and have it acted on before the expiration of that time. I ask the Senate to consider the resolution now to pass it.

Mr. CONKLING. It seems to me there should be no objection to this resolution. I feel bound to say so because I was one of those who objected to the consideration in the morning hour of the Hot Springs bill. The whole purpose I understand is to guard against any estoppel either way, by postponing the expiration of the time when this action may be taken, and the object of the Senator is that all may have an opportunity to look into the bill reported, and be prepared to act upon it deliberately and intelligently. It seems to me that must be in the interest of everybody who wishes a fair consideration of the subject. Therefore I should hope there would be no objection.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was read three times, and passed.

CHAPLAINS IN THE NAVY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the Calendar, commencing at the point reached on yesterday.

Mr. FERRY. The bill (S. No. 48) for promoting the efficiency of the corps of chaplains of the United States Navy was reached yesterday on the call of the Calendar, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] made an objection to its consideration; but I think he will no longer object.

Mr. CARPENTER. I objected to the bill under a misapprehension, and now withdraw my objection.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the bill be taken up for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us go on with the Calendar.

Mr. FERRY. The bill is on the Calendar.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is on the Calendar. It was the last bill reached yesterday. The Senator from Wisconsin inadvertently objected, and he now withdraws the objection. It is a bill that has once or twice passed the Senate precisely in its present form.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 48) for promoting the efficiency of the corps of chaplains of the United States Navy.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. FERRY February 5, 1880:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 48) for promoting the efficiency of the corps of chaplains of the United States Navy, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

A similar bill to the one now under consideration passed the Senate at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, (S. No. 1446 of that session.)

The same bill, in terms, having thus been favorably considered in the Senate, your committee accept the conclusions set forth in the report, No. 626, which then accompanied it, and which is herewith appended, and do therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report, (to accompany bill S. No. 1446):

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 146, to promote the efficiency of the corps of chaplains of the United States Navy, after consideration thereof, beg leave to report back the same with a substitute therefor, and recommend the passage of the latter.

"SECTION 1.

"The first sentence changes the limits of age at the time of appointment. The present limits are twenty-one and thirty-five years. It needs no argument to show that no man is fit for a position of so much responsibility unless he is at least twenty-five years of age. The second sentence provides for reasonable limitations upon the appointment of chaplains. It is an exact rescript of the statute with reference to Army chaplains. As amended it cannot possibly be distorted into excluding any one on account of creed. It simply provides that any man who is appointed to the position must be of good standing and reputation among his own people. The requirement of at least one year's previous experience will commend itself to the judgment of all.

"SECTION 2.

"The first part of this section introduces no innovation and provides no new rank. It simply corrects an error in the act of March 3, 1871. Previously to that all chaplains entered the service with the relative rank of lieutenant-commander, and, after twelve years of service, were promoted to the relative rank of commander—the highest rank then held in the staff of the Navy. The act of March 3, 1871, provided higher rank for the staff, and, without their solicitation, four chaplains were granted the relative rank of captain. Seven were also ranked as commanders, but the next lower grade was limited to seven, making the total number granted relative rank only eighteen, while the statutes allow twenty-four chaplains. Thus six chaplains were entirely unprovided for, and have for nearly eight years occupied an entirely anomalous position, causing great inconvenience to themselves and great trouble to the Navy Department. The circumstances which make relative rank necessary for the eighteen who have it make it equally necessary for the six who do not have it. Chaplains have no desire for rank at all, per se, but in a military organization the thousand and one questions of precedence can be settled in no other way.

"The second part of this section is inserted to insure a just proportion of sea duty to each one. The relative rank of captain carries with it the privilege of continuous shore duty, and no one ought to have that unless he has done his share of disagreeable duty. If any chaplain does not wish to go to sea, let him find a work that suits him better.

"SECTION 3.

"This section increases the pay of chaplains, placing them on an equality in this respect with surgeons or paymasters and chief engineers. No professional man can be expected to leave civil life and subject himself to long absences from his family unless he has the inducement of such preferment and increased pay as his talents and constantly enlarging experience would give him in civil life. This is recognized in every corps except that of chaplains. All other staff officers, after certain grades, have their pay increased up to fifteen and twenty years of service. Chaplains have now only one increase, at the end of five years, so that a chaplain who has served five years gets as much pay as one who has served forty years. The natural tendency of this is to drive out the men we need to keep, and keep men we could well spare. Such has been the fact, except in the case of a few worthy men who have remained from conscientious principles. Of the twenty-four chaplains now in the service, only two have served sixteen years, and fifteen have not served ten years. This shows a rapidity of change which is not healthy. Other things being equal, the longer a man is in the service the more efficient he can be, especially in dealing religiously with sailors, who form a class so distinctly sui generis. Chaplains simply ask to be put on the same footing with officers whose equals they are expected to be in every respect, and with whom they share equally all expenses, including heavy mess bills and fees for official entertainments, which last are provided for in other navies at the national expense. Chaplains have the entire charge of the religious and educational instruction of men and boys, including the hundreds of apprentices under the new system. They have no subordinates or clerks to assist them as other officers have. Abundant testimony can be brought to the fact that no other officer can be so efficient in securing comfort, good order, and good discipline among the men. The question then comes down to this: 'How shall we secure an efficient, worthy corps?' Only by making it an object for good men to come in and stay in. If chaplains are to accomplish any good, it must be evident that the power which creates them intends them to be respectable and respected.

"SECTION 4.

"As an offset to the increased expenditure involved in section 3, this amendment proposes to reduce the number of chaplains to twenty. In the opinion of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, and of the chaplains themselves, this can be done without impairing the efficiency of the corps."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know what changes in the present law are to be effected by this bill.

Mr. FERRY. It reduces the number of chaplains from twenty-four to twenty.

Mr. COCKRELL. And how much does it increase their pay?

Mr. FERRY. It increases their pay after they have been in the service about ten years. Prior to that time it does not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. What is the present pay of chaplains in the Navy, and to what is it proposed to increase it?

Mr. FERRY. The bill increases it about $400.

Mr. SAULSBURY. What is the present pay?

Mr. FERRY. It varies according to rank, $1,800, $2,200, and $2,400.
Mr. COCKRELL. I think the salary is sufficient now, and I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will bear in mind that the chaplains incur the expense of sharing entertainments abroad, which is required of the Navy, they being officers on shipboard, which expense in the Army is provided for by the Government. In the Navy the officers have to share. They also are required to wear uniforms, which cost them about $100 a year. These exactions—

Mr. COCKRELL. We can dispense with the uniform. I do not think that adds anything to their efficiency.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator thinks the salary that is given by the bill for that grade of professional men is too much, of course we can submit to any amendment he may offer.

Mr. COCKRELL. There has been no clear explanation given of the exact effect of this bill. It is due to the Senate that we should know precisely all the changes that are to be made by any proposed legislation. The report does not show what is the present salary and allowance of these chaplains and what it will be under this proposed law. The Senate has a right to know that, and it is the peculiar province of the committee to investigate and report to the Senate the information.

Mr. FERRY. That has been done, if the Senator will allow me. It is marked on the printed bill before me in each case, as the Secretary can read so as to show the Senator the changes in each case.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is useless. The bill has been read; it is before us all. We are presumed to have read it. I say that the report does not show precisely what is the present salary and what changes are made by the bill. It shows what the salary will be when the bill becomes a law.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will allow me I will state that the salary of each grade is marked in blue pencil, precisely what the existing salary is by the present law. It can be read in the hearing of the Senator, and then he will see what difference there is between the salary now paid and that proposed by the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know why that information was not put before us in the report. I have had the report before me and have examined it. I presumed the report of the committee embraced the facts upon which it proposed to stand before the Senate. Now, entirely different facts come before us. I have not time to examine and investigate those matters.

Mr. FERRY. I answer the Senator by saying that the report was made when a similar bill was passed in the last Congress. If the Senator had observed the reading of the report he would have seen that the present committee accepted the former report. I will state to the Senator that the report did not then embody precisely the difference of salary now proposed; but I have marked on the present bill the changes in each grade. I ask the Secretary to read the printed bill as marked, so that the Senator will see in each case what the salary is under existing law. The printed bill now before him, which I have sent to the desk, will show the increase proposed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I saw very clearly that the committee had followed a report made at a former Congress. The report so states on its face. I did not think the bill reported fitted the report, and I do not think so yet.

Mr. FERRY. The committee cannot help that. The report is before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the memoranda read and spread upon the record, that we can see it in print.

Mr. FERRY. Let the Secretary report the changes in each case noted in blue pencil.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

Surgeons, paymasters, chief engineers, and chaplains, who have the same rank with paymasters, during the first five years after date of commission, when at sea, $2,800, (formerly $2,500;) on shore duty, $2,400; on leave or waiting orders, $2,000, (formerly $1,600;) during the second five years—

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand, in regard to that particular point—

Mr. McMILLAN. Let us hear this statement read. I want to know myself something about the difference in these salaries.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose I have a right to ask a question of a member of the committee who has made the report when the report and the statement of facts which the Secretary is reading do not explain anything. There are two grades of salary given, and the memorandum says "formerly $1,600." Did $1,600 apply to each of those grades?

Mr. FERRY. In one case where the present law gives $1,600 the bill increases it to $2,000. In the case of $2,200 the present salary is $1,800. The Secretary is reading that precisely, if the Senator will observe the bill as he reads it.

Mr. COCKRELL. But I observe that the statement gives one sum for two former salaries.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As this is a subject on which we are all at sea, I should like to sail a little myself. I see by the Navy Register of 1877, since which I believe the law of pay has not been changed, that a pay table is inserted, stating:

Chaplains: First five years after date of commission, at sea, $2,500; on shore duty, $2,000; on waiting orders or leave, $1,600; after five years from date of commission, at sea, $2,800; on shore duty, $2,300; on leave or waiting orders, $1,900.

That undoubtedly shows what the present pay is.

Mr. WHYTE. That is the exact pay at the present time, according to the statutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there amendments in committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the reading of the explanation been finished?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will conclude the reading.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

During the second five years after such date, when at sea, $3,300, (formerly $2,800;) on shore duty, $2,800, (formerly $2,300;) on leave or waiting orders, $2,400, (formerly $1,900.)

Sec. 4. * * * There shall be in the Navy not exceeding twenty chaplains, (formerly twenty-four chaplains.)

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill be laid over, without losing its place on the Calendar, in order that we may examine those data and compare them.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let it lie over without losing its place.

Mr. COCKRELL. I asked that it go over without losing its place. I do not want it to lose its place, but I want to examine into the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION.

Mr. PADDOCK. Before the Senate proceeds to consider any other bill, I desire to call attention to the fact that yesterday on my request the bill (S. No. 753) to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouri tribes of Indians, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes, went over without prejudice on the statement by myself that the Senator from Vermont desired to communicate with the Secretary of the Interior with regard to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the fact.

Mr. PADDOCK. Therefore the bill naturally would be the first bill on the Calendar this morning. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont if he has been able to obtain the information he desired in order that the bill may be considered this morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, I have not. I have taken the necessary steps, but the time has been so short that the Secretary of the Interior has not been able to respond to my inquiry. Therefore I propose that it go over until to-morrow again.

Mr. PADDOCK. I renew the request of yesterday that it go over without prejudice until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

WEST VIRGINIA SOLDIERS' UNION.

The bill (H. R. No. 2771) to construe an act entitled "An act granting condemned bronze cannon to the Soldiers' Union, of West Virginia," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that bill mean, Mr. President? I look to the guardian of the Treasury for an explanation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I thank the Senator. When it happens to be the cannon, the guardian should be the other side. [Laughter.] In 1878 a bill passed both Houses of Congress, donating certain condemned cannon to the Soldiers' Union of West Virginia. The wording of it, however, was such that the cannon were not delivered or the demand was not supplied owing to the requirement of some form. I cannot explain fully what was the reason. I understand the cannon were at Pittsburgh and were directed by the Secretary of War to be delivered; but owing to some peculiar form that was required the governor of the State did not feel authorized to sign for them. The House has passed a second bill at this session and sent it over to us, construing the act somewhat differently; and the cannon are now waiting, as I understand, to be delivered. They are on hand, in other words. The committee of the Senate has added to the bill "that are now or may hereafter be condemned."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just where the rub comes in.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No, not exactly. A letter that I have here shows that the cannon are now on hand. The officer in charge of the arsenal and the Secretary of War both concede that.

Mr. MORRILL. I think if the Senator from West Virginia will look at the date of his letter from the Secretary of War, he will see that they were on hand in 1878, and if he will look at the later report he will find that there are not sufficient condemned cannon on hand now to meet the resolutions donating condemned cannon that have already passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This grant was made before that, and it has not been repealed. The letter to which I refer is dated "Allegheny Arsenal, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, December 1, 1879."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the letter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I send both letters to the desk to be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the reading let me suggest that if there are not any condemned cannon now, we might put a provision in the bill requiring the Secretary of War to condemn a sufficient number to accomplish the object! [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will state to the Senator that my object is to strike out the amendment adding "that are now or may hereafter be condemned." I hope the bill will be passed without that provision in it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ALLEGHENY ARSENAL,
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, December 1, 1879.

Sir: Your letter of 28th ultimo, relative to "one or more condemned bronze cannon," authorized under act of Congress approved June 20, 1878, to be furnished to the governor of West Virginia for the Soldiers' Union of that State," received.

In reply, would state that under date of August 15, 1878, I was instructed by the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, "to make the issue on proper requisition." On receipt of Governor Matthews's requisition I will cause the guns to be sent to such place as may be designated. The issue is to be made without cost to the United States on account of transportation, but I will deliver the guns to boat or cars without cost.

Three light bronze twelve-pounder guns would make nearly the amount of metal you need—about 3,681 pounds. We have no condemned ordnance heavier, and but two of these; but some six-pounders, lighter, four of which will weigh about 3,336 pounds.

The requisition to meet the requirements of the act of Congress should state the number of guns "necessary to make a bronze soldier's statue." The above figures will enable you to do this.

Respectfully yours,

T. H. LOGAN, Esq.,
Wheeling, West Virginia.

A. R. BUFFINGTON,
Major Ordnance, Commanding.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, August 9, 1878.

SIR: Acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 1st instant, inclosing one from Mr. T. H. Logan, of Wheeling, on the subject, and inquiring whether the cannon granted by act of Congress for a soldiers' statue at Wheeling can be furnished at Pittsburgh, I have the honor to inform you that directions have been given for these guns to be supplied from the Allegheny arsenal, at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. W. MCCRARY,
Secretary of War.

Hon. B. WILSON, M. C.,
Wheeling, West Virginia.

Mr. MORRILL. That, it will be seen, bears date in 1878. I now ask the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] who has the report in his hands, what is the number of cannon that are on hand at the present time?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will allow me a minute. It will be noticed that the officer in charge at the arsenal says that he has been holding these cannon, and his letter is dated December 1, 1879.

Mr. MORRILL. But the last report shows that all the condemned cannon we now have on hand are not sufficient to supply the appropriations that have been already made.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But the Senator loses sight of the fact that this grant was made by a bill passed over a year ago; and so far as this case is concerned the cannon have been appropriated to that purpose, as stated in the letter.

Mr. MAXEY. I stated yesterday the reasons which induced me to ask that all these bills be recommended to the Committee on Military Affairs. It will be noticed by the Calendar that this bill was reported to the Senate by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. RANDOLPH] on the 5th of February. On that day a letter was transmitted to the Vice-President by the Secretary of War, accompanied by a report of the Ordnance Office, dated on the 3d of February, 1880, and that report shows that there are now no condemned bronze cannon on hand for purposes of donation. I ask that so much of that report as may be necessary shall be read in order to explain the facts.

I desire to state to the Senator from West Virginia and all others that I, myself in charge of some of these bills, would have been glad to report favorably, but I was compelled to report adversely by reason of that communication from the Secretary of War, because it is nonsense to be appropriating that which we have not got to give away.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The act of 1878 provides,

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to furnish to the governor of West Virginia for the Soldiers' Union of that State, one or more of the condemned bronzed cannon belonging to the Government of the United States, as may be necessary to make a bronze soldier's statue, to be erected upon a monument in the capitol square of Wheeling.

This bill says that that act shall be so construed as "to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish to the governor of West Virginia, for the use of the Soldiers' Union of that State bronze cannon"—leaving out "condemned"—"belonging to the United States, that are now or may hereafter be condemned, to inclose the monument of that union in the city of Wheeling." What does that mean? The original law directed that the United States should furnish the bronze metal to make a statue to be erected upon a monument that the Soldiers' Union at the city of Wheeling was to erect or had erected. And now this bill, besides taking any kind of cannon that are now or may hereafter be condemned, provides that the use to which they are to be devoted is to inclose a monument of that union in the city of Wheeling. The number of cannon necessary to be melted into a statue might be two or three. The number of cannon necessary to inclose a monument, if you were to make a fence of them as I have sometimes seen done around monuments, might be twenty or thirty, depending upon the intervals between the cannon that you set up in the ground. So that this bill is quite a different bill from the act it proposes to construe.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am not familiar with all the facts; my colleague has had charge of this bill; but I take it that the Senator from Vermont is right in saying that the cause of these cannon not having been delivered was that the governor could not give a receipt that they were to be applied for the purpose of a bronze statue, which the original act required. The desire is to use them for the purpose of inclosing the statue. I do not know to what extent the cannon are required; but I take it, from what the officer at the arsenal says, two or three cannon are all that are required, for he speaks of what the requisition was.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He was not writing in reference to this bill; he was writing in reference to the act which provided for furnishing the necessary cannon to melt into a statue. He says two or three will do for that. He was not writing in reference to this bill which calls for an indefinite number of cannon to build a fence with them.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will notice that the requisition was made, and it is to be presumed that would not be changed. It is but fair to presume so. Dr. Logan, whose name is in these communications, and who I believe is the president of this soldiers' union, is a gentleman of standing and respectability, who would ask for nothing but what was right in any form or manner, and I have great confidence in what he states. He states in a communication here that the number needed is two or three.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, so that they can find out exactly what is wanted.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Secretary will read what I have marked in the report of the Secretary of War, I think it will show the condition of the whole matter. The condition of the War Department as to delivery being disclosed by that report, there is no use in making any appropriations of this kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the committee find out exactly what it is that these gentlemen at Wheeling want.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection to the recommendation, and in the mean time we can get the exact information from the War Department and from all concerned. I have no objection to the recommendation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES W. ABBOT AND W. W. BARRY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 533) for the relief of Charles W. Abbot, a pay director, and W. W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster, in the United States Navy; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. FERRY February 9, 1880:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 533) for the relief of Charles W. Abbot, a pay director, and W. W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster, in the United States Navy, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

The facts of this case are set forth with considerable fullness in a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, March 3, 1879, at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, from which your committee quotes:

"It appears that on the 19th of October, 1876, R. J. O'Reilly was appointed paymaster's clerk by Paymaster W. W. Woodhull, then discharging the duties of paymaster of the navy-yard, Boston, Massachusetts, which appointment was approved by the commandant of the station. Since the above date O'Reilly continued to hold the position of paymaster's clerk, his duty being to assist the paymaster of the navy-yard at Boston, until the 25th of October, 1878, when, having been detected in a dishonest transaction, he was suspended from duty, and a thorough examination disclosed the fact that he had embezzled of the Government moneys $2,605.54. Prompt measures were taken to effect his arrest after his defalcation was ascertained, but he had absconded. On the 10th of July, 1878, Pay Director Charles W. Abbot was ordered to relieve Paymaster F. H. Swan at the Boston navy-yard. After taking charge of the pay office, Pay Director Charles W. Abbot became suddenly ill, and on the 22d of July, 1878, was relieved by Passed Assistant Paymaster W. W. Barry. Again, on the 1st of October, 1878, Pay Director Charles W. Abbot, having recovered his health, relieved Passed Assistant Paymaster W. W. Barry. The fidelity, competency, and integrity of the clerk, O'Reilly, having been vouched for by Paymaster Swan, who relieved Paymaster Woodhull, and had continued the clerk through his term of service, he was therefore retained by Passed Assistant Paymaster W. W. Barry and by Pay Director Charles W. Abbot.

"After the discovery of this deficiency in the cash the fact was at once reported to the commandant of the station, and an investigation requested by Pay Director Charles W. Abbot. An official investigation was ordered by Commodore Spicer, and subsequently a court of inquiry was ordered by the honorable Secretary of the Navy."

In response to a call from this committee, the Secretary of the Navy has transmitted certain transcripts from the records of the Navy Department connected with this case, including the report of the court of inquiry referred to, which is as follows:

Findings of the court of inquiry.

"At 12.30 p. m., there being no further testimony to offer on the part of the court or judge-advocate, the court declared the testimony closed, and proceeded to deliberate.

"After carefully examining the instructions before the court and the testimony produced, the court decided as follows, and does so report:

"The following facts are deemed established by the evidence, namely:

"First. That on the 10th day of July, 1878, Pay Director C. W. Abbot reported for duty as paymaster of the navy-yard, Boston, and relieved Paymaster F. H. Swan of that duty. That Pay Director Abbot was ill at the time, and, continuing so, was obliged to be relieved temporarily by Passed Assistant Paymaster William W. Barry on the 23d day of July. The latter remained in charge of the office up to October 5, when Pay Director Abbot resumed charge of the office. From July 10 until October 25 Mr. R. J. O'Reilly, who had filled the office of pay clerk with Mr. Swan, continued to perform the duties of that office, having been highly recommended by Mr. Swan with whom he had served for a number of years. That Pay Director Abbot and Passed Assistant Paymaster Barry were neither neglectful, careless, nor inefficient in the discharge of their duties.

"Second. The method observed in receipting for public moneys. That the paymaster drew checks, payable to his own order, and presented the same in person at the sub-treasury, for money to meet the payments on rolls of officers and employes of the yard.

"In cases of money received from sales of public property in the yard, the method appears to have been in one department of the pay officer of the yard himself; for money deposited, before making delivery of the goods, and in other departments, the receipt of the paymaster's clerk has been accepted, but it does not appear that the pay officer had given authority to the clerk to sign such receipts.

"Third. The method observed in making payments of public moneys has been as follows:

"In the case of officers present on pay-day, the money due them was paid in cash, and their receipts taken either on the roll or on individual receipts.

"Absent officers were paid by check on the sub-treasury, drawn to their order after receipts (generally signed in blank as to date and amount) had reached the paymaster's office. The employees of the yard were paid in cash, each man presenting himself on pay-day, the foreman of his department being present to identify him; the man's name being called at the window of the writer in charge of the rolls, he received a slip of paper or check (a sample of which is attached to this record, marked B) with the amount due upon it, and his number, and the stamp of the pay office, showing the date; this check he presented to the pay clerk and received his money, the paymaster being present to supervise the business. These payments were made at regular times when possible.

"Fourth. The method observed for filing and preserving vouchers has been, that in cases of single receipts the clerk took charge of them, and after the signature of the parties to whom payments were made thereon was had on the rolls, those receipts were either filed and retained by the clerk or returned to the parties signing them.

"In cases of payments made to officers at other times than the last day of the month, receipts for the amounts paid were taken and returned to the officers at the end of the month.

"Fifth. The public funds have been kept in the sub-treasury until required for immediate use, when, on being withdrawn by the paymaster, in person, were by him deposited in the safe provided, and for which he alone possessed the necessary combination to open.

"Sums for current use, not ordinarily exceeding $1,000, have been left in the hands of the paymaster's clerk.

"Sixth. The forms of checks used for the pay of absent officers were the official checks supplied by the Treasury Department.

"Seventh. Official checks, sent by mail, payable to the order of absent officers, was the precaution taken in such cases.

"Eighth. That the receipts taken from officers absent, and borne on the rolls, were generally signed by them in blank as to dates and amounts, to be filled up in the office of the paymaster of the yard.

"Ninth. That the deficiencies on the accounts of Passed Assistant Paymaster W. W. Barry are as follows:

Rear-Admiral A. L. Case having been overcharged	$751 65
Rear-Admiral W. R. Taylor having been overcharged	381 99
Paymaster J. McMahon having been overcharged	536 86
Assistant Engineer B. H. Warren overcharged	40 89
Boatswain H. E. Barnes overcharged	49 12
Received by him from sale of auction stores not accounted for	47 88

Sum total

1,808 39

"That the deficiencies on the accounts of Pay Director C. W. Abbot are as follows:

On account of Commander O. A. Batcheller, forgery	$138 00
On account of Sailmaker J. E. Crowell, forgery	35 00
On account of Gunner M. Dutcher, forgery	50 00
On account of Gunner M. K. Henderson, forgery	50 00
On account of Clerk Vebe Spicer, forgery	30 00
On account of Carpenter Thomas Smith, overcharged	85 00
On account of F. C. Christie, employé, forgery	66 00
On account of J. P. Carter, carpenter, overcharged	65 62
On account of Hugh McKenna, employé, overcharged	12 00
On account of G. A. Galbraith, employé, overcharged	4 00
On account of C. B. Abrams, employé, overcharged	55 75
On account of F. C. Christie, employé, overcharged	31 00
On account of W. F. Merrill, employé, overcharged	65 00
On account of J. L. Cates, employé, overcharged	45 50
Error in cash, shortage	64 22

797 15

"That these forgeries and overcharges were made by Clerk R. J. O'Reilly; that the amounts having been made good by Passed Assistant Paymaster Barry and Pay Director Abbot, the Government is not a loser by these irregularities, which were done without the knowledge or connivance of any other person employed in the office.

"The sole amount that the Government appears to be the loser of is $47.01, deposited on account of sale of ordnance stores, and which does not appear to be chargeable to either Passed Assistant Paymaster Barry or Pay Director Abbot. This deposit was receipted for by Clerk R. J. O'Reilly October 3, 1878. The court therefore report, from the facts they deem established by the evidence, that, in their opinion, the manner of conducting the business of the office, while in accordance with the usual practice, is defective in this, that the accepting blank receipts (left generally in charge of the clerk) leaves an opportunity for irregularities on his part, by making charges on the rolls and retaining the money so charged for his own use.

"The court is of opinion that the system of sending receipts in blank is wrong, and that the paymaster should not make payments to absent officers on receipts not fully filled out.

"In the case of absentees on the list of employés at the regular pay-day, the court is of opinion that the rule that their pay should go over to the next regular pay-day, as provided in paragraph 2, page 155, Navy Regulations, should be adhered to. The leaving of such checks for pay in the hands of clerks opens the door to fraud and irregularities. Such checks should, in the opinion of the court, be retained by the paymaster himself.

"The system of accountability, as provided by the regulations, for money received from sales, and the order of the commandant of the yard, has not been departed from by the paymaster, but receipts, signed by Clerk O'Reilly, have been accepted in some departments for proceeds of sales of material.

"To sum up: The court finds that Pay Director Abbot, on relieving Paymaster Swan, retained Clerk O'Reilly in the office on the recommendation of Mr. Swan, and owing to the illness of Mr. Abbot, it became necessary to order another pay officer to temporary duty in his place. Mr. Barry was so ordered, and, knowing that he would remain but a short time, retained the clerk and writer during his term of service.

"Mr. Abbot, after resuming the duties on October 5, learned some facts in relation to O'Reilly that caused him to watch him and finally suspend him. It was not until the suspension took place that the proofs came to light to establish the guilt of O'Reilly, who appears to have possessed the confidence of other officers in the yard besides the paymaster. The practice of transferring clerks without reappointment in due form, as provided in the Regulations, should in the opinion of the court not be permitted.

"The court do not find that either Passed Assistant Paymaster Barry or Pay Director Abbot have been guilty of negligence, carelessness, or inefficiency, or are chargeable with culpability or mismanagement, but that, owing to the changes and transfers made in the brief period between the dates July 10 and November 1, an opportunity was afforded the clerk, O'Reilly, to carry over from one to the other any frauds that he had kept concealed.

"There being no further business before the court, at three o'clock and forty-five minutes the court adjourned to await the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy.

"O. C. RHIND,

"Commodore, President of Court.

"GEORGE H. REED,

"Passed Assistant Paymaster, Judge-Advocate."

While public policy requires from disbursing officers a strict accountability for the handling of funds by subordinates, some of the extenuating circumstances in this case are as follows:

Pay Director Abbot was ill when ordered to the Boston navy-yard, and continuing so, was relieved thirteen days thereafter by Assistant Paymaster Barry, during which brief time, and considering his illness, it is hardly to be expected that he had opportunity to verify by examination of books or otherwise the high recommendation from his predecessor of the pay clerk O'Reilly.

Within twenty days after the resumption of his duties by Pay Director Abbot, it appears that the dishonesty of the clerk was detected, but that before he could be arrested he had absconded; all of which would indicate reasonable care and diligence during the brief period for oversight afforded.

Passed Assistant Paymaster Barry was, according to the language of the preceding report, "temporarily" assigned to the duty.

In the illness of the regular incumbent of the office, believing that his stay at the post would be short, and in the absence of any suspicion of an old employé, a paymaster acting as a substitute would naturally be reluctant to make special inspection or changes as to methods of payment; some of which methods and usages, as set forth in the findings of the court of inquiry, are to be condemned as affording too great opportunity for dishonest practice, but for the establishment of which, however, it does not appear that the officers who have suffered by this loss are responsible.

It further appears that the embezzling clerk, O'Reilly, had not been regularly reappointed by Pay Director Abbot, which would have been a definite declaration that he assumed responsibility for the selection of a subordinate already in office. Your committee concur in the opinion expressed by the court of inquiry, that a transfer of clerks without reappointment should not hereafter be permitted.

Under the exceptional circumstances of this case, and having carefully considered the facts and the evidence as herein recited, your committee make favorable report thereon, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. This is an application by parties who have disbursed public money for relief from responsibility for the defalcation of a subordinate. In my judgment we have carried the practice of granting relief in such cases too far. Very frequently in the Post-Office Department, and in almost every department of the Government, parties charged with the disbursement of public money, responsible to the Government for the proper use of the money placed in their charge, come here and allege that some subordinate of theirs, for whose acts they are responsible, has committed a defalcation, and they being thus involved in trouble ask Congress to relieve them, and in our charity and liberality we are almost invariably extending the relief that they ask.

I suggest whether this course does not invite defalcations. Does it not amount to a release of the obligation imposed on disbursing officers of the Government and lead them to relax that care and that vigilance which the law expects at their hands? So far as these particular gentlemen are concerned, I do not know that any blame attaches to them; but if we pass this bill relieving them from responsibility and from the obligations that devolved on them by reason of the default of their subordinate, do we not invite to carelessness and negligence by such officers in the watching of their clerks and entail on the Government a repetition of these same defalcations?

For one I think we had better adhere to the strict rule of responsibility required of public agents charged with the disbursement of public moneys to be faithful in the discharge of their duty, and if defalcations occur whereby there is a loss to them they had better submit to it rather than that we should adopt a policy which invites to that condition of things. I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. FERRY. While I share in the main with what has been stated by the Senator from Delaware, it will be learned by reading the report that Pay Director Abbot was in no way responsible for this clerk. He was not an appointee of Pay Director Abbot, but was appointed before, was a clerk when Pay Director Abbot was placed at the head of the office, and therefore he was not at all responsible for him, and he was the first to discover the fraud.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator will bear in mind that when he went into that office he had a perfect right to select his own clerk, but he choose to retain one who was already in the service, which was virtually an appointment of his own.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will remember that the report shows that Pay Director Abbot was sick at the time the fraud was committed, was not then discharging the duties of the office, but held the position of director in charge of the office. The moment he was well enough to resume his duties he very soon upon inspection discovered the fraud, and was really the means of ejecting the clerk, not an appointee of his.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand that; but I understand also from the report that there had been some carelessness in the management of the affairs of that office. There had been blank receipts sent forward and signed, and other such carelessness which does not indicate that diligence and care which a public officer ought to observe.

Besides that, I think we have carried this thing a little too far. I remember one bill that passed through the Senate in the case of an internal-revenue collector who had appointed his own clerk, who had taken no bond from his clerk, and who applied to us by reason of the clerk's defalcation to the amount of $3,700 for which the internal-revenue collector took the clerk's individual obligation, and after two years holding that obligation he came to the Senate and asked to be indemnified for the loss which he had sustained. We must stop this thing. The people pay the taxes, and we ought to be as careful of their interests as of the disbursing agents of the Government who are charged with the responsibility of managing properly the moneys placed under their control.

I am aware that there have been cases of this kind, and I have said before that these gentlemen may not have been responsible for the action of this clerk; yet the pay director had the power to protect himself by making a new appointment, and he failed to do it. Besides that the report itself discloses the fact that there has been a loose mode of transacting business in that department.

Mr. FERRY. Right there I wish to remind the Senator that Pay Director Abbot did not inaugurate this method of keeping accounts, but found the method when he entered upon the duties of his office, and as soon as he was able to examine the method he changed it, and not only changed it but changed his clerk, so that in no respect whatever can Pay Director Abbot be responsible for this defalcation or fraud.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. From what committee does this bill come?

Mr. FERRY. The Naval Committee, of which the honorable Senator from Florida is a member.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the bill pass?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 29, noes 9; no quorum voting.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there is a quorum present. If the Chair will call for another division that will show the fact.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays; that will show it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 35, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Anthony,	Coke,	Lamar,	Pryor,
Bailey,	Dawes,	Logan,	Rollins,

Bruce,	Groome,	Jones of Nevada,	Thurman,
Butler,	Grover,	Kirkwood,	Voorhees.
Cameron of Wis.,	Hampton,	McPherson,

So the bill was passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. No. 1465) granting a pension to Levi Leedom;
 A bill (H. R. No. 1806) granting a pension to Michael Lingenfelter;
 A bill (H. R. No. 1890) granting a pension to Ellen Gillespie;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2039) granting a pension to Jacob J. Smith;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2864) granting a pension to Isaiah W. Bunker;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2854) granting a pension to Noah Caton;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2856) granting a pension to William T. McCoy;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2857) granting a pension to Joseph Showman;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2859) granting a pension to Paul Walker;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2860) granting a pension to Thomas H. Vaughn;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2861) granting an increase of pension to Herman Baldwin;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2862) granting an increase of pension to John H. Black;
 A bill (H. R. No. 3076) granting a pension to William R. Weimer; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3077) granting a pension to John L. Williams.

The bill (H. R. No. 4219) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

A bill (H. R. No. 4908) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Israel Dodge, deceased; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4907) to confirm to John Hepting and others title to certain lands.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. RANDOLPH.

Mr. LOGAN resumed the floor and concluded his speech. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me that I can make a motion to adjourn. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I should like to move that when the Senate adjourn it be to meet on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BURNSIDE in the chair.) The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 5, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I desire to make a correction in the RECORD. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROTHWELL] reported yesterday morning a bill in which I was interested. That gentleman is out of his seat now, but I desire to state that it is represented in the RECORD, and I presume in the Journal, that Mr. ROTHWELL reported a substitute for House bill No. 3368. That is an error; the substitute was for House bill No. 3854, as appears from the statement of Mr. ROTHWELL made immediately afterward.

The SPEAKER. It seems that the body of the report contains the wrong number.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. But just below Mr. ROTHWELL states emphatically that he reports the substitute for bill No. 3854.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. MCGOWAN. At the solicitation of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CASWELL,] I desire to correct the RECORD of the proceedings on Friday last. On page 34 of the RECORD of Saturday, containing the proceedings of Friday last, the name of Mr. CASWELL is inserted incorrectly. I ask the Clerk to read that portion of the RECORD which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The Hall of the House shall be used only for the legislative business of the House, and for the caucus meetings of its members, except upon occasions where the House by resolution agree to take part in any ceremonies to be observed therein; and the Speaker shall not entertain a motion for the suspension of this rule."

Mr. CASWELL. I move to insert after the word "therein," in the fourth line, the following:

"And the corridors and lobbies of the Capitol, so far as the House has control of the same, shall not be occupied by lunch tables or parties offering for sale articles of merchandise other than newspapers and other printed matter usually kept for sale at news-stands."

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CASWELL. Very well, let there be a vote.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 60.

Mr. CASWELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCGOWAN and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

Mr. MCGOWAN. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] is a little sensitive about this matter, and fears that if the RECORD goes to the country in that shape he will have to pay two prices for his sandwiches and apples in the lobby. I desire that the RECORD be corrected, and where the name of Mr. CASWELL appears that the name of Mr. MCGOWAN be inserted. I am willing to take the whole matter upon myself.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MYERS, for to-day.

HARBOR AT GRAND HAVEN, MICHIGAN.

Mr. REAGAN. By instruction of the Committee on Commerce, I report the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives any supplemental report in his Department relative to the condition and improvement of the harbor at Grand Haven, Michigan, with such views of its importance and necessity and recommendations respecting the same as may be deemed advisable by the Department.

The resolution was adopted.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 870, a bill (H. R. No. 4911) to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

ENCAMPMENT OF KNIGHTS-TEMPLAR, CHICAGO.

Mr. MARSH. The Committee on Military Affairs have directed me to report favorably for immediate consideration the joint resolution (H. R. No. 168) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, flags, &c., to the triennial committee of Knights-Templar at Chicago.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan the triennial committee representing Apollo, Chicago, and Saint Bernard commanderies of Knights-Templar, for use at their triennial encampment at Chicago, Illinois, on the 16th, 17th, 18th, and 19th days of August, 1880, such tents, tent-poles, flags, standards, guidons, and camp equipage as they may require: Provided, That such things are in the reserve supplies at the various quartermasters' depots: And provided further, That the said society shall pay all freight charges to and from said supply depots to Chicago, and shall return said articles in as good order as when received, ordinary wear excepted, or otherwise to pay the assessed damages.

Mr. CARLISLE. Does this resolution provide for the execution of any bond or other security for the safe return of these articles? Who will be responsible?

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I will. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARSH. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that it has not been customary in cases of this kind to embrace in the resolution the requirement of any bond.

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes the Secretary of War takes such security as he deems necessary.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am not objecting to the resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARSH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY L. NORVELL.

On motion of Mr. HOUSE, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1004) for the relief of the sureties of Henry L. Norvell was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

ROCK ISLAND RAPIDS, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the House certain maps and reports in reference to a proposed widening of the channel of the Rock Island rapids of the Mississippi River, for the use of the Committee on Commerce and of the House.

WARREN MITCHELL.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, presented from the Committee of Claims a report on the claim of Warren Mitchell; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

ASSISTANT CLERK FOR COMMITTEE OF CLAIMS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am requested by the Committee of Claims to present for immediate action the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in consequence of the great amount of business now before the Committee of Claims, and there being a necessity for additional clerical force in order to properly discharge the duties of the committee, the chairman be, and he is hereby, authorized to obtain leave of the House to procure an assistant clerk, to be employed during the present session of Congress at an expense not exceeding $125 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask immediate action on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The rule requires that all such matters shall go to the Committee of Accounts. The additional officer contemplated by the resolution would have to be paid, according to the terms of the resolution, out of the contingent fund of the House.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

WILLIAM H. RIFENBERG.

Mr. CALKINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4912) for the relief of William H. Rifenberg; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WORK ON MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask by unanimous consent to present a resolution directing the Committee on Military Affairs to investigate the claim of George Williams for work upon the Muscle Shoals improvement.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that resolution. The subject is already under consideration.

Mr. DIBRELL. The subject is not under consideration as they have not the papers. If the gentleman wishes to smother it, very well.

Mr. CONGER. The threat of smothering never had any terror since Desdemona's time. [Laughter.] I object.

Mr. DIBRELL. This is one of the greatest frauds ever perpetrated upon the country for the amount of it.

Mr. MCCOOK. As one of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs I wish to say that the minority are not at all afraid of any investigation in the direction which the gentleman from Tennessee suggests.

Mr. DIBRELL. Then the gentleman ought to withdraw his objection and let it be investigated. We wish to have the facts in the case.

Mr. MCCOOK. It appears to me before taking any step like that suggested we should have the matter investigated in the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARMY OFFICERS AT COLLEGES, ETC.

Mr. DIBRELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4913) to provide for the detail of retired officers of the Army at colleges, universities, and other institutions of learning in the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. SAPP. I ask by unanimous consent to present the memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, relating to the Des Moines River lands, for reference to the Committee on Public Lands; and I also ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It has been already printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SAPP. Then let it go to the Committee on Public Lands.

The memorial was received and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

RAPE PUNISHABLE BY DEATH.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4914) to punish the crime of rape in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ELLIS. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

1. That whoever shall commit the crime of rape within the District of Columbia shall, upon conviction thereof, suffer death.
2. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this bill be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF RIVERS FROM MINING DÉBRIS.

Mr. BERRY, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolution of the California Legislature, asking an appropriation of $500,000 to protect the navigation of rivers in California from mining débris; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

By unanimous consent, the body of the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

Whereas many rivers of this State, and cities and lands bordering thereon, are being greatly damaged or endangered by the flow of mining débris; and

Whereas the whole country, as well as this State, are directly interested in the gold production of California, which materially depends on the free discharge of said mining débris: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the assembly, (the senate concurring,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their utmost endeavors to obtain an immediate appropriation of at least $500,000 for the protection and improvement of the rivers and lands of California which are being damaged by the mining débris.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to send a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

J. F. COWDERY,

Speaker of the Assembly.

JOHN MANSFIELD,

President of the Senate.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. BERRY also, by unanimous consent, presented concurrent resolution of the California Legislature, relative to the establishment of postal telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

Resolved by the assembly, (the senate concurring,) That our Senators in Congress be, and they are hereby, instructed, and our Representatives requested, to use their influence to obtain the establishment of a postal telegraph system through out the United States.

J. F. COWDERY,

Speaker of the Assembly.

JNO. MANSFIELD,

President of the Senate.

ADMINISTRATOR OF JOSIAH H. PILLSBURY.

On motion of Mr. ANDERSON, by unanimous consent, an act (S. No. 762) for the relief of the administrator of Josiah H. Pillsbury, deceased, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

CENSUS OF ALASKA.

Mr. DE LA MATYR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census be requested to inquire into the advisability of taking the census of Alaska, and report to the House by bill or otherwise.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DE LA MATYR also, by unanimous consent, submitted resolutions asking for information from the commissioners of the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. DUNN. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to ask unanimous consent for the adoption of a resolution for the investigation of the matters pertaining to the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. CONGER. What is that?

The SPEAKER. It provides for an investigation into the affairs of the Hot Springs reservation.

Mr. CONGER. Is it a resolution reported from a committee?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. DUNN. I will state to the gentleman that the phraseology has been changed.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

DENNIS WOLFSKILL.

Mr. ROTHWELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4915) granting a pension to Dennis Wolfskill, of Chillicothe, Livingston County, State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

GEORGE ZIEFLE.

Mr. ROTHWELL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4916) granting a pension to George Zieffe, of Chillicothe, Livingston County, State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

STATUE ON SUB-TREASURY BUILDING, NEW YORK.

Mr. CHITTENDEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4917) granting permission to the Chamber of Commerce of New York to erect a statue on the sub-treasury building in the city of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to introduce for reference the two bills that I send to the Clerk's desk, the first by request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota objects to the introduction of bills.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do. It can be done as well on Monday next.

PETER PHILLIPS.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, Senate bill (No. 389) for the relief of Peter Phillips was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JACOB B. KING.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, also, by unanimous consent, Senate bill (No. 388) for the relief of Jacob B. King was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

On motion of Mr. SHALLENBERGER, by unanimous consent, Senate bill (No. 1157) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional lots of ground adjoining the new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

FRANCIS M. WAY.

Mr. DAVIDSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1636) for the relief of Francis M. Way; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES HOPWOOD.

Mr. DAVIDSON also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 1575, a bill (H. R. No. 4918) for the relief of James Hopwood; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, the letter of the Secretary of the Interior relative to lands held by the Cherokee Indians, heretofore referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, was withdrawn from that committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to have the following bill referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota objects to the introduction of bills.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objection. Other members have had an opportunity, and I have waited for half an hour.

The SPEAKER. The objection made by the gentleman from Minnesota has not been withdrawn.

DECIMAL SYSTEM.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back House miscellaneous document relative to the decimal system of weights and measures for English-speaking nations; and the same was ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

DANIEL LEWIS.

Mr. VANCE also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That Daniel Lewis be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $123, the same being the remainder of his salary for services rendered in the Doorkeeper's department in the last session of the Forty-fourth Congress for the months of March, April, May, and June.

Mr. VANCE. I request that that be referred to the Committee of Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of Accounts decline to consider anything which does not apply to the present Congress. It should be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. VANCE. Let it go to that committee.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of Claims.

FIRE-EXTINGUISHERS, ETC.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to submit for present consideration a resolution that a commission be authorized to investigate the quality and capacity of the various gas-governors and fire-extinguishers proposed for the use of the Government.

Mr. BAYNE. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. If I can get the gentleman's ear for a moment I think he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BAYNE. I demand the regular order.

KANSAS TRUST AND DIMINISHED-RESERVE LANDS.

On motion of Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3968) for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished-reserve lands, in the State of Kansas, were taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 3, after the word "assigned," insert "being in possession thereof." And on page 2, at the end of line 10, insert "and where such persons, their heirs, legal representatives, or assigns, are not in possession of such lands, then the same may be entered as others of the said Kansas Indian lands by actual settlers only."

The amendments were concurred in.

REV. PAUL E. GILLEN.

Mr. LE FEVRE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3351) for the relief of Rev. Paul E. Gillen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to amend the records to show Paul E. Gillen as continuously in the service as chaplain of volunteers from the 20th day of July, A. D. 1861, the date of actual commencement of duty, until the 25th day of November, A. D. 1862, from which date he was mustered in and paid as chaplain of the One hundred and seventieth New York Regiment Volunteers, and cause to be paid to the said Paul E. Gillen, from any appropriation for pay of the Army, the pay and allowances of a chaplain of volunteers for the time stated, or any part thereof for which payment has not been made.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the accompanying bill (H. R. No. 3357) for the relief of Rev. Paul E. Gillen, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

It appears, from the letters of distinguished military officers, among whom are General Charles Devens, who is now Attorney-General, General Winfield S. Hancock, General McClellan, and Colonel James McQuade, now commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, that Rev. Paul E. Gillen, in view of the scarcity of Catholic chaplains in the army of the Potomac, volunteered his services as chaplain immediately after the first battle of Bull Run; and having been duly accepted by General McClellan, who placed a horse and carriage at his disposal, and being furnished with a pass, he at once entered upon his duties and visited the following regiments, namely, the Second, Seventeenth, Thirty-sixth, Forty-second, Sixty-ninth, One hundred and fifty-fifth, and One hundred and sixty-fourth, New York Volunteers; the First Pennsylvania Artillery, the Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and the Tenth New Hampshire Volunteers, performing the duties of chaplain in each of those regiments, as is shown by the testimony of the officers in command. They are all unanimous in praising the Rev. Mr. Gillen for the faithful and efficient discharge of his laborious and numerous duties. He traveled about constantly, administering the consolations of his religion to the wounded and dying, cheering by his presence, and sweetening by the ministrations of the sacrament of the Church, the last painful hours of death. So much were his services appreciated that on the special request of the soldiers of the One hundred and seventieth New York Volunteers, a regiment well known as the Corcoran Irish Legion, almost entirely composed of Catholics, he was mustered on the 25th of November, 1862, into the chaplaincy of that regiment. He served continuously till the close of the war, participating in all of the arduous campaigns for which the Corcoran Irish Legion is so justly celebrated.

It also appears, from the affidavits of two of the officers of the One hundred and seventieth, that he was stricken down by sunstroke while officiating at a burial service in the line of duty.

In view of his extreme old age—being now in his eighty-first year—and the feebleness and suffering aggravated by diseases contracted in the active services rendered during the war, and as an act of justice to a deserving old man, it is proposed to allow him the small compensation received by volunteer chaplains for the time intervening between the 20th of July, 1861—the day on which his services were accepted—and the 25th of November, 1862—the day on which he was mustered in.

Inasmuch as Rev. Mr. Gillen actually and fairly earned that which he now seeks, and as the Government would not be extending him a gratuity, the committee are unanimously in favor of paying him the compensation to which, in the committee's opinion, he is justly entitled.

The committee therefore report back the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LE FEVRE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES ENTOMOLOGICAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HASKELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed, with necessary illustrations, at the Government Printing Office 10,000 copies of the second Report of the United States Entomological Commission on the Rocky Mountain Locust and other Injurious Insects; 5,000 copies for the use of the House, 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the commission.

TAX UPON DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to offer the preamble and resolution which I send to the desk for reference to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the agitation by Congress of the question of changing the tax imposed by existing law upon distilled spirits would be very injurious to all manufacturers of distilled spirits in the United States, and would tend temporarily to paralyze in a great degree the trade and commerce based upon it; and

Whereas a wise and just policy on the part of the Government requires that the interests of those engaged in the industry and trade mentioned should not be unnecessarily injured or jeopardized by frequent changes in the rate of tax they are compelled to pay upon distilled spirits: Therefore,

Resolved, That the agitation by Congress of the question of reducing the internal-revenue tax imposed by law upon distilled spirits is not demanded by any present public exigency, and, in view of the great injury which would necessarily result therefrom to the large number of our citizens who are engaged in manufacturing and dealing in said articles, is inexpedient.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move that the preamble and resolution be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move to amend, so that the resolution shall be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MILLS. I second that motion.

The question being put on the amendment, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it, and that the resolution was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdraw any objection I made to the introduction of bills and resolutions for reference.

Mr. DIBRELL. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] asked for the yeas and nays on the reference of the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.]

The SPEAKER. The request comes too late, other business having intervened.

Mr. MILLS. I called for the yeas and nays before other business did intervene.

The SPEAKER. Upon that statement the Chair will recognize the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DIBRELL. I want the resolution to go to a committee that will act upon it.

Mr. MILLS. That is what I wanted. I wanted the resolution to go to the Committee on Agriculture. If it goes to the Committee of Ways and Means it will not be acted upon. But, having said that, I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

GREENLEAF STACKPOLE.

Mr. CARLISLE, by unanimous consent, (and by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4919) authorizing Greenleaf Stackpole to make application for the extension of a patent; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

DUTIES ON SUGAR.

Mr. CARLISLE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4920) to regulate the duties on sugar; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ANNIE D. REEVES.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4921) for the relief of Annie D. Reeves; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

EDWARD SHIELDS AND OTHERS.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 128) for the relief of Edward Shields and others. This is a bill for the relief of sufferers by the explosion at the United States arsenal at Bridesburgh, Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for information, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage at this time.

Mr. KNOTT. I object. I think the bill ought to be referred.

Mr. WHITE. I appeal to my friend from Kentucky to withdraw his objection to the present consideration of the bill. These are people who suffered by the explosion of the Bridesburgh arsenal. The bill has passed the Senate and has passed the House from time to time, but has failed to receive the concurrent action of both Houses. The sufferers are all poor workmen.

Mr. KNOTT. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. TAYLOR. I renew it.

Mr. MILLS. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. I trust the gentlemen will not object to this very meritorious bill.

The SPEAKER. The present consideration of the bill is objected to. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania ask to have it referred?

Mr. WHITE. Unquestionably. Let it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GAS-GOVERNORS AND FIRE-EXTINGUISHERS.

Mr. BAYNE. I withdraw my objection to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. YOUNG.]

Mr. YOUNG. I desire to report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Commissioner of Public Buildings, the Architect of the Capitol, and the civil engineer of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, be, and they are hereby, authorized and requested to act as a commission for the purpose of investigating the quality and capacity of all gas-governors and fire-extinguishers for the use of the Government that may be submitted to them; and that they have authority to call upon the Government gas-inspector for any information, instruments, or facilities in his possession, and which may be required in the investigation here provided for, and the said commission, before commencing such investigation, shall advertise for such length of time as they may deem proper, in such newspapers as they may select, the time and place at which the same will take place, requesting the owners of gas-governors and fire-extinguishers to present them for examination; and when the commission shall have completed said investigation, they will report to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the result of the same and which gas-governor and fire-extinguisher is best fitted for public use.

Mr. CONGER. For what is that resolution presented?

The SPEAKER. For action.

Mr. CONGER. I object. I do not think the House of Representatives can appoint such a commission. The resolution is not in the form of a concurrent resolution.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I think, if the gentleman will hear a few words of explanation, he will not object. There are a number of gas-governors in use, which, we are informed, give various results, and there is a difference of opinion as to which is the best one. A bill upon the subject has been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and we have declined to take the responsibility of deciding the matter. This resolution is designed to obtain from the officers named advice which will enable the committee to determine this question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it should be a joint resolution.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. It does not cost anything.

The SPEAKER. That does not matter. It imposes new duties on officers of the Government, and such new duties should be imposed by law.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. We can request these officers to do this.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. It is reported from that committee.

Mr. CONGER. It looks to me as if that committee desired to shirk responsibility.

The SPEAKER. That is what it states.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. There is a bill before the committee upon this subject, and we do not desire to report upon it until we can get this information.

Mr. CONGER. I will not object to the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

FOLDING-ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee of Accounts, to which had been referred a resolution submitted by Mr. McLANE, reported the following substitute:

Resolved, That the superintendent of the House folding-room be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ an additional force of twelve men to fold speeches and other public documents accumulating in the folding-room, and to perform such other duties as may there be assigned to them: Provided, That the employment of the said additional force shall terminate one month after the adjournment of the present session of Congress, unless otherwise ordered by the Committee of Accounts; and they shall be paid out of the contingent fund at the rate of $720 per annum while employed.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that I wish to object to that resolution; but I would inquire if there is any report accompanying it showing the necessity for it?

Mr. MORSE. There is no report.

Mr. CONGER. Will the committee state whether there will probably be documents enough to be sent out for the campaign to require the employment of this force for a month after the House adjourns?

Mr. WHITE. To save time, I object to the resolution.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS FOR LIBRARIES.

Mr. NICHOLLS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4922) to provide for supplying State and other libraries, incorporated colleges, atheneums, literary and scientific institutions, and boards of trade with all public documents printed by order of Congress or the Departments; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4923) to promote the efficiency of the life-saving service, and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING TESTIMONY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the Committee for the District of Columbia desire to be authorized by the House to have printed the testimony, or such part of it as they may see fit, taken by them in an investigation authorized by the House.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object if all the testimony is printed; but I do object to printing only part of it.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. It will all be printed.

Mr. CONGER. Then let the resolution so provide, and I will not object.

Mr. HUNTON. By direction of the Committee for the District of Columbia I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be authorized to have printed such papers or evidence taken before said committee as they may deem necessary.

Mr. HUNTON. If any gentleman desires an explanation of this resolution I will give it with pleasure. We have been directed by the House to make an investigation and have taken testimony.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that I object to this particular resolution. My point is that when testimony which is taken by an investigating committee is printed, the whole of it should be printed.

Mr. HUNTON. We will print the whole of it, every word of it. The resolution was adopted.

COMPENSATION OF OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. KNOTT. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a substitute for a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG] and referred to that committee.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will reserve the right to object until I have heard the resolution and substitute read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That a committee of five Representatives be appointed to investigate the present system of salaries, fees, and emoluments allowed to the officers of the several courts of the United States, to ascertain whether any, and, if any, what, abuses now exist, or have existed, or may take place thereunder, and to report by bill or otherwise; that said committee have power to employ a clerk and the services of a stenographer, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to examine witnesses, and to report at any time; and the expense of said committee shall be paid on vouchers approved by the chairman.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to investigate the present system of fees, salaries, and emoluments allowed to the officers of the several courts of the United States, and ascertain whether any, and, if any, what, abuses now exist, or have existed, or may take place thereunder, and to report by bill or otherwise; that said committee shall have power to employ clerks and stenographers, to send for persons and papers, and examine witnesses; that as many sub-committees may be designated from said committee as may be expedient for the investigation hereby authorized, and the chairman of any such sub-committee, for all the purposes of sending for persons or papers, administering oaths, and examining witnesses, shall have all the powers of the chairman of said committee, and said committee may report at any time. The expenses of the investigation hereby ordered shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House; and the Clerk of the House is hereby directed, with the approval of the Committee of Accounts, to pay out of said fund to the Sergeant-at-Arms such sums for the payment of such expenses as the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, or the chairman of any sub-committee thereof assigned to make such investigation, shall from time to time in writing direct, and any sums which may be received by the Sergeant-at-Arms under this resolution shall be by him disbursed on vouchers approved by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, or the chairman of any sub-committee herein provided for; and any unexpended balance thereof remaining in his hands shall be by him deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the House. And the Sergeant-at-Arms shall make a report in writing, accompanied by vouchers in detail, of the manner in which the sums thus received by him shall have been expended or disposed of, which report, when examined and approved by the Committee of Accounts, shall be deemed a sufficient settlement of his accountability for the same.

Mr. BRIGHT. That is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the introduction of the resolution. I desire to say—

The SPEAKER. That is all that is necessary.

Mr. CONGER. It is on a point of order in regard to the resolution—

Mr. KNOTT. I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. In regard to the subject-matter—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] objects to debate on the ground that the objection of the gentleman from Michigan is conclusive, and the subject is not before the House for debate.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I have the right to make this remark—

Mr. KNOTT. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects on the ground that the subject is not before the House and therefore is not debatable.

Mr. CONGER. The attempt of a committee to assume—

Mr. KNOTT. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

Mr. CONGER. I must be heard, and I shall be heard before I get through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will not be heard out of order.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; but I— [Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects to debate on a proposition which is not before the House; and it is his right.

Mr. CONGER. Of course it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the right upon his demand, and declares that the gentleman from Michigan is out of order in speaking to a proposition which is not before the House.

Mr. CONGER. I have not offered to speak to a proposition not before the House. The Chair has not heard what I said.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not at liberty to hear, because the gentleman from Kentucky objected.

Mr. BRIGHT. Regular order!

Mr. CONGER. I rose to a point of order, and stated so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objected to the introduction of a resolution. The Chair recognized the objection, and acted upon it.

Mr. CONGER. That is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. If that is disposed of, then the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] demands the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I rose to a point of order; and the Chair has never yet refused to recognize a gentleman who rose to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not refused now; but the regular order is demanded. The Chair must conform to the regular order, and does so.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir. When I rise to a point of order the Chair of course must hear me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CONGER. But if the Chair is unwilling to hear the point of order, I will bring it up some other time. I simply want to show that I have the right to be heard, and if I insist upon it, will be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will maintain good order in the House, without respect to the gentleman from Michigan.

ALBERT FULLER.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the regular order. The morning hour begins at twelve minutes after one o'clock. The unfinished business pending in the morning hour is a bill reported last Friday from the Committee on Patents—the bill (H. R. No. 4766) for the relief of the heirs of Albert Fuller.

Mr. VANCE. I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COVERT.]

Mr. COVERT rose.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Before the gentleman from New York proceeds I would like to hear the bill read. It has not been printed, and we wish to understand the subject upon which the gentleman from New York speaks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is on the floor, and the Chair has no right to interrupt him. The bill can be read when he has concluded.

Mr. COVERT. Perhaps it would be best to have the bill read now.

The SPEAKER. It will come out of the time of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TUCKER. I suggest that the bill be read by unanimous consent, not to come out of the gentleman's time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to that arrangement, and the bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the legal representatives of Albert Fuller, deceased, late of Brooklyn, in the State of New York, have leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent No. 13677, granted to said Fuller October 16, 1855, for an improvement in faucets for hot and cold water, and the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized to hear and determine said application in accordance with the rules and regulations heretofore existing in the Patent Office in relation to the extension of patents, and to extend the same for the term of seven years from and after the date of such extension, provided he shall be satisfied that said extension will be just and proper, and not injurious to the public interests; and said patent when so extended shall have the same force and effect in law as if originally granted for the full term for which it shall be so extended: Provided, That no person shall be held liable for the infringement of said letters-patent, if extended, in consequence of having used said invention since the expiration of said patent and prior to the date of the extension, nor shall any party be held liable for using faucets which may be in use at the time of the extension of said patent, as authorized by this act.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, from various utterances made during the progress of the discussion upon this bill I assume I am not wrong in the supposition that this case is to be made a test case so far as relates to the extension of patents by this Congress.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. VANCE] and my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WARD], both of whom have given to this matter that thoughtful care and attention which distinguish their legislative work always, have united in saying substantially that if this bill cannot pass it will be useless for the committee ever again to bring into this House any measure of a similar character. These declarations, Mr. Speaker, made deliberately upon this floor, elevate this bill, which upon its face is one of a private character, into an importance which it would not perhaps under other circumstances possess. The decision of this question and the deliberation which shall precede its decision require, therefore, it seems to me, earnest and conscientious thought on the part of every member of this body.

The Constitution declares in its eighth section, substantially, that Congress shall have the power to secure to authors and inventors for limited times the exclusive ownership of their works. My distinguished colleague, [Mr. Cox,] in his remarks in opposition to this bill, emphasized the word "limited" in this connection, and sought thereby to convey the impression that this privilege was intended to be granted for a short time only and necessarily. The word has no such meaning anywhere. It is a term of restriction simply, and was used in this sense—its ordinary sense—undoubtedly by the framers of the Constitution. There was to be some time after the issuance of a patent during which the rights of the inventor were to be secured, and this limit might be seven years or fifty years, or any given time that Congress might establish. This clause stood and stands now as a premium for thought and endeavor in the directions of authorship and invention. History, up to the time of the adoption of the Constitution, had abundantly proven that inventors, as a rule, had been men who were poor and very often ignorant in the learning of the schools. The idea of the perfected steam-engine was born in the busy brain of a poor Scottish mechanic. The spinning-jenny of to-day owed its origin to the patient thought and experiment of a poor unlettered weaver of Blackburn; and the history of inventions everywhere had demonstrated that inventors, as a rule, were men who, so far as the details of business were concerned, needed the protection of government in order to reap any return from their labor. And so it was, undoubtedly, that this section found a place in our Constitution. The wisdom of its framers has been abundantly shown by the history of inventions in this country.

Call over the names that we, with national pride, delight to honor and revere, and we find that in almost every instance new and improved appliances in mechanics were suggested by men whose hands were hard and brown with toil, and that those who have done so much for us as a people in the field of inventive art have been men so ignorant of the hard rules of business that they have required almost the same measure of consideration and protection in this regard that we extend to weak and helpless women. And this case, Mr. Speaker, is a case which fully illustrates this condition. I speak only from the proofs offered before the committee. Albert Fuller, twenty-five years ago, saw that, with the introduction of water in the various cities, an improved faucet would be a matter of urgent necessity. He gave to the subject profound thought and all the time and labor necessary for the perfection of his idea. Nearly two years were passed in this way before his plans were perfected and his patent issued, and then began his weary work of introducing and utilizing his invention. My friend from South Carolina [Mr. Aiken] has said in his argument against this bill that no merit attaches to the inventor who only fills the immediate demands and wants of the people in this regard. He states that it is only when an invention is in anticipation of the wants of the people that any credit attaches. That is this case precisely. The people did not know that they wanted and needed Fuller's article, and, as is usual in such cases, he found it difficult to persuade them of the merit and utility and necessity of his invention.

I venture the assertion, sir, that nowhere among the dusty files of reports ever presented to either branch of Congress is there one which excels in the elements of simple pathos the report in this case; a report which does equal credit to the head and heart of my friend from North Carolina [Mr. Vance] who drafted it. From city to city and from town to town this poor inventor went, conscious of the value of his invention, but meeting with rebuff and slight in almost every direction. Worse than this, he encountered the almost general opposition of the mechanics whose work was to be supplanted by this appliance. So poor that in instances he was obliged to sleep upon the floor, with a dependent family who patiently and hopefully shared his poverty with him, the experiences of Albert Fuller added but another chapter to the sad experiences of but too many other inventors in this and other lands. What good came from it all? How were the people, the great public, rather than the individual, benefited by this invention? Why, sir, in that vast section of country, watered by the Mississippi and its tributaries, owing to the peculiar character of the water, the ordinary article then in use, afterward supplanted by Fuller's invention, was soon destroyed in parts and rendered absolutely useless; it was in the section of country referred to that the utility and superiority of this invention first had recognition. This was in 1857, the year of the panic. The progress made was but slow, and the years passed wearily on to the inventor. His patent was repeatedly infringed and he was without the means to completely resist these infringements. The war came, and with it prostitution in many branches of business, including work in a branch of industry like this. And finally, after this man had given twenty years of his life-time to the perfection and introduction of his invention, receiving as his reward less than he would have earned at ordinary mechanic's wages, he died at the age of seventy years, poverty-stricken, and leaving an aged widow and family entirely helpless and dependent. And so ended but another chapter in the "short and simple annals of the poor."

My friend from South Carolina [Mr. Aiken] says that some of these patentees live in brown-stone houses. Very likely this is true. Undoubtedly there are instances of this condition of things. The existence of this condition furnishes perhaps the strongest argument against the practicability of the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. Cox] that there should be a general law framed to cover all applications for the renewal or revival of patents. But the report shows that the condition referred to by my friend from South Carolina [Mr. Aiken] is not of application here. My friend is much too chivalric, much too generous, to insist that his remark shall have application to this case or that it shall influence this House in determining the issue presented here. The only habitation tenanted by this man is "a small and narrow house" in an almost unmarked grave; his widow of nearly three-score years and ten is in want; his daughter is an inmate of an asylum for the insane. And it is for this widowed mother and this insane daughter that the favorable action of Congress is invoked.

But the passage of this bill, Mr. Speaker, should not be made dependent upon the impulses of the warm hearts of the members of this House. It should be passed, sir, upon its merits and upon its naked merits alone. The work of this inventor has been of benefit not to individuals alone, but it has been of advantage to the whole country. While his was the original idea, others have fashioned upon it, and inventions somewhat similar in character have been patented, and so no monopoly will be created by an extension. The testimony is conclusive that this laborer, who was more than "worthy of his hire," has not been properly compensated for his work.

I was surprised when my colleague [Mr. Cox] said that the time of this House should not be occupied in the consideration of private bills of this character. My friend, to a greater extent than ordinary men, is of kin to the men of thought and brain in all the departments of labor. He can see and appreciate the "poetry of mechanism." He can do more than that. He can realize that sometimes the fate and fortune of one man is a matter of public consequence, of national concern. When, as in the case of Condon, a foreign power has inflicted or has sought to inflict an outrage upon the rights of even one humble American citizen my friend has been the first to call the attention of the Federal Congress to the wrong and to demand in the name of the whole American people that the rights of even one individual subject should be preserved and respected. A distinguished soldier of the present time has claimed that injustice has been done to him by the Government, and the attention of one branch of this Congress is to-day being given to an examination of the justice of his claim. These are but instances, Mr. Speaker, going to show that sometimes the matter of individual justice, the question of the rights and wrongs of the individual citizen, becomes matter of general and of public importance. And so this case, and the principle to be decided by it, is of public consequence. I yield, sir, to no gentleman upon this floor in the earnestness of my desire to repress and to place within all proper limits the volume of special legislation. I believe that so far as is possible general laws should be enacted to this end. In the Forty-fifth Congress I gave to the measure of my then colleague, [Mr. Potter,] in the direction of reform in this particular, all the aid and all the effort it was in my poor power to bestow. I pledge my most earnest support to the like measure of my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. O'Connor,] now pending in this House. But, sir, until reform in this direction is an accomplished fact, we have to deal with these matters as we find them. There is no inhibition in the Constitution so far as this application is concerned. There is no act of the Federal Congress which prohibits it. There is no general law upon our statute-book under which this application can be made. The only remedy, the only method of relief left open to the applicants, is the measure by which these parties have come before Congress, the special bill which has been reported to the House for the extension of this patent.

I have tried to show, Mr. Speaker, that this case, presenting the features it does, is of public consequence. Whether I have succeeded in this respect or not, the principle to be decided by it is most certainly a matter of national concern. The American people, as a people, are justly proud of the victories they have won in nearly every department of human endeavor. While these achievements cover almost the whole wide range of human effort, the results they have reached in the field of inventive art exhibit them to the best advantage as a people of active brain, of patient thought, and of earnest endeavor. From the time of Franklin down to our own day the long line of distinguished inventors of this land have won fame and glory that the world will not willingly let die.

The fathers, in the Constitution which they drafted, made these men, in a measure, the wards of the nation. Let the Federal Congress be just, and, being just, let it be generous in its treatment of these our wards. The spirit and the letter of the Constitution, while offering a premium for thought and effort on the part of these men, at the same time sought to protect them, their interests, and their rights. I most earnestly hope that this Congress will not seek to place a strained construction upon the letter of the section governing this case, and I most sincerely trust that it will not seek either to violate or abridge the broad and generous spirit which pervades it.

Mr. VANCE. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 49, nays 149, not voting 94; as follows:

So the bill was not passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. SCALES. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. DAVIS, is paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague, Mr. SIMONTON, is paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. MCCOIR.

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. McKINLEY. If he were present, I should vote "no." My colleagues, Mr. BRAGG and Mr. CASWELL, are paired.

Mr. WAIT. I am paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. GIBSON, who is detained from the House by illness.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. WARD. My colleague, Mr. O'NEILL, is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. ROSS.

Mr. LORING. I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I am paired with Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. FISHER. I am requested to announce that Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, is paired with Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina; and that Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, is paired with his colleague, Mr. MYERS.

On motion of Mr. SAPP the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

WILLIAM G. BUDLONG.

Mr. BALLOU, from the Committee on Patents, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2030) for the relief of William G. Budlong.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill for the relief of William G. Budlong.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of Patents be, and is hereby, authorized to hear and determine the application of William G. Budlong for the extension for the further term of seven years of the letters-patent for improvement in shoe-pegging machines granted to him the 12th day of May, 1863, and antedated the 30th day of June, 1862, and reissued upon an amended specification the 29th day of February, 1876, the form of such application and the mode of proceeding under it to be in all respects the same as was provided by the act of Congress approved the 8th day of July, 1870, entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights, for the extension of patents granted prior to March 2, 1861;" and if upon such hearing the Commissioner should be satisfied that the said William G. Budlong, without neglect or fault on his part, has failed to obtain from the use or sale of his invention or discovery a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon it and the introduction of it into use, and that it is just and proper, having due regard to the public interest, that the time of the patent should be so extended, the said Commissioner shall make a certificate upon said reissue patent, renewing and extending the same to the said William G. Budlong, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for the term of seven years from June 30, 1879: Provided, That no person shall be held liable for the infringement of said patent, if extended, for making use of said invention between the time of the expiration of the extended term of said letters-patent and prior to the date of extension.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. WRIGHT. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to a privileged question. I move that when this House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 40.

Mr. STEVENSON. I demand tellers.

Mr. BALLOU. I have the floor on this bill. Now, can I be taken off the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. TALBOTT in the chair.) A gentleman can be taken off the floor by the motion to adjourn over. The gentleman from Illinois has demanded tellers; and the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WHITE. There was a quorum voting, and I do not see why we need tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was a quorum voting, but the Chair thinks it best to appoint tellers. The Chair appoints Mr. PRICE and Mr. WRIGHT as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 110, noes 17.

Mr. SPARKS. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places, the point being made that no quorum has voted.

Mr. McMAHON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, be allowed to make a statement which will save all further trouble in this matter.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I wish to state—

Mr. WHITE. I demand the regular order of business.

The tellers resumed their places, and reported—ayes 129, noes 22. So the motion to adjourn over was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from New York rises to a privileged question.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to say a word.

Mr. WHITE. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from New York rises to a privileged question.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There are about twenty members who desire to make speeches on the refunding bill.

Mr. WHITE. I object to debate and demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will state his question of privilege.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move there be a session to-morrow for discussion of the refunding bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, no business to be transacted.

Mr. WHITE. That is not a privileged question. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move, then, to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed, when it adjourns to-day, to adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. KELLEY. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I now move the House adjourn.

Mr. BALLOU. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has moved to adjourn, and the question must be first put on that motion.

The House refused to adjourn.

WILLIAM G. BUDLONG.

Mr. BALLOU. I now ask for the reading of the report in the case reported from the Committee on Patents.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BALLOU, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following report: In the matter of House bill No. 2030, for the relief of William G. Budlong.—First by his affidavit:

I, William G. Budlong, of the city and county of Providence, in the State of Rhode Island, being duly sworn, depose and say that I am the William G. Budlong named in said bill and in the letters-patent therein mentioned; that in the spring of 1858 I was residing in Hartford, Connecticut, and was engaged in business there, running a small machine-shop, and doing work on sewing-machines, repairs, model-making, and jobbing. My attention was called to the fact that a large portion of the pegged work in the manufacture of boots and shoes was defective on account of the projection of the pegs beyond the face of the sole. After investigation I found the cause of this defect was in the manner of inserting the pegs into the sole. At that time the most approved method was to press the peg into the sole by means of a cam. A large hole was required to be made in the sole to receive the peg. All of the holding qualities of the peg was obtained by the friction or adhesion of the leather upon the sides of the pegs, consequently the smaller the hole into which the peg was forced the more the friction or adhesion.

After study it occurred to me that if a device could be constructed to drive the peg with a blow it would obviate the difficulty, and by a series of experiments I satisfied myself that I was correct.

In the autumn of the year 1859 I moved to said city of Providence, and soon after I had a set of patterns made. I constructed a full-sized machine, but being compelled to labor for the support of my family could work on the machine only in the night-time, and at times whenever I had leisure. After finishing said machine and testing it so as to find it was practical I made a model and placed it in the hands of my solicitor in New York, who filed for me the application for the letters-patent aforesaid, which was granted and issued as above stated.

When the patent was issued, as I was without any capital, I used my best and constant efforts to find some one to assist me with pecuniary means, but owing to the uncertain condition of the country in those days of the war, I did not succeed in my endeavors to interest capitalists, and as mechanical skill was in demand I gave my attention to business with considerable success. From time to time I made strenuous endeavors to interest capitalists in my invention, but always without success.

In the year 1879 metallic fastenings for boots and shoes began to come in demand. As I had at that time no business, I again considered the subject-matter of my invention, and concluded to have said letters-patent reissued on account of some imperfections in the specification. I surrendered the patent as prescribed by law, which was reissued in the form in which it stands at the time of the filing of this bill.

I have put into said invention and patent, and my said efforts to realize upon the same, all the money I could possibly spare from the necessary support of my family, and have thereby been reduced to most straitened circumstances. I have expended in money and labor, including the expense of procuring said letters-patent and the reissue thereof, upwards of $15,000. I have never yet received anything, not so much as a dollar, from said invention or said patent. My invention is exceedingly useful, and now that my patent is about to expire by limitation I have succeeded in obtaining capital, and if said letters-patent can be extended I have reason to believe I can realize from it an adequate recompense for my said expenditures and for my labors and study for years. I further depose all rights to said patent for the term of said extension, if granted, are my own, and that no other person has any right, title, or interest in or to said extended term should the same be granted.

WILLIAM G. BUDLONG.

Subscribed and sworn to this 5th day of February, A. D. 1880, in Providence, in the county of Providence, in the State of Rhode Island, before me.

WARREN R. PERCE, Notary Public.

It appears by the foregoing affidavit, the leading facts of which are corroborated by letters to the committee from two prominent citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, Lieutenant-Governor A. C. Howard and Hon. R. Hazard, that though William G. Budlong obtained his first patent in 1863, for various causes he was unable to introduce or use it, either for his own or others' benefit, and has spent his spare time and all his means, which he estimates at more than $15,000, in trying to perfect and introduce it to use, and has as yet received no compensation whatever; but has perfected it and obtained a reissue on an amended specification, in which he hopes by an extension of his patent, as provided by act of Congress of 1870, to receive some remuneration for his time and labor and to relieve him from the poverty to which he has become reduced by the expenses attending his invention.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the following bill:

Mr. BALLOU. If I can have the attention of the House for a moment—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. BALLOU. Shall I have the opportunity on next Friday?

The SPEAKER. The bill will come up in the morning hour of next Friday, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Rhode Island as entitled to the floor.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I ask, by unanimous consent, there be a session to-morrow, for debate only in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the funding bill, no other business to be transacted.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not think there ought to be any objection to that.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that now in order?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. By allowing this session to-morrow for debate only on the refunding bill time will be saved on the bill when it comes up for consideration hereafter. I hope the session to-morrow will be allowed for that purpose, and that purpose only, no vote to be taken, and on that bill exclusively.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I shall object unless general debate be allowed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make a qualified objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There are other gentlemen who desire an opportunity for discussion. I do not want to speak myself, but there are subjects on which other gentlemen desire an opportunity to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks that the order of the House heretofore made adjourning over until Monday be vacated, and that to-morrow shall be set apart for debate only in Committee of the Whole on the refunding bill, no other business to be transacted.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not object to this. I will say to him that it will make one month's difference in the length of the session.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] objects.

Mr. WHITE. I did not hear what the gentleman from New York said.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I stated that it would protract the session at least one month.

Mr. WHITE. I insist that it will not protract the session. If I thought it would protract the session I would not interpose my objection. The majority of the House can always control the conduct of its business. The refunding bill is too important to be at this early stage of its consideration the subject of speeches read to thinly attended Saturday sessions. I want the bill discussed first to full Houses, so that no erroneous statements may be sent to the country.

Mr. BRIGHT. I demand the regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage of bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 89) touching the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas; and

A bill (S. No. 533) for the relief Charles W. Abbot, a pay director, and W. W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster, in the United States Navy.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

On motion of Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, Thomas W. Varnon, esq., of Kentucky, was admitted to the floor during the day.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. BRIGHT. I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the Private Calendar, Mr. CALKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this is objection day. The committee now resumes the consideration of the Private Calendar where it was left off on the last objection day.

WILLIAM BOWMAN.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2290) for the relief of William Bowman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William Bowman, Company B, Ninety-first Veteran Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $6 per month, commencing on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1865, that being the date of his discharge from the Army of the United States, in the late war of the rebellion, on account of disease contracted while in said military service and in line of duty.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the accompanying report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

William Bowman, the claimant, was enrolled in Company B, Ninety-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the 11th March, 1865, and discharged on the 10th of July, 1865. He applied for pension on the 3d of December, 1872, alleging that he contracted piles in June, 1865, while on a march from Burkeville, Virginia, to Washington, District of Columbia.

His claim for pension was rejected on the 20th day of May, 1873, because the claimant was unable to furnish the testimony of the surgeon or assistant surgeon of his regiment showing treatment for said disease while in the service.

The claimant, on the 27th of November, 1872, swears that he contracted the piles in June, 1865, while on a march from Burkeville, Virginia, to Washington, District of Columbia, on account of the roads being bad, muddy, and slippery. That he did not go into a hospital, although he was urged to go by the officers of the company and regimental surgeons, because there were so many fever patients in the hospital at the time, and he feared the contagion of the disease. He further swears that in consequence of being placed in a company of volunteers (Company B, Ninety-first Pennsylvania) the officers and surgeon of which were strangers to him, he is unable to obtain their affidavits, as he has no knowledge of their present residence, or whether they or any of them are living at this time.

Daniel Lohr, on the 28th of October, 1872, swore that "he was well acquainted with William Bowman, and was a member of the same company and regiment with him," and "that on or about the — day of June, A. D. 1865, while the company was marching from Burkeville, Virginia, to Washington, District of Columbia, owing to the bad roads, consequent upon heavy rains, and hard marching, said William Bowman contracted piles, by reason of which he suffered severely, and that he knew said Bowman intimately, messed with him, and occupied the same tent."

Joseph Coleman, another private in the same company, testifies "that he was an intimate acquaintance of William Bowman," and "that about the — day of June, 1865, while the company was marching from Burkeville, Virginia, to Washington, District of Columbia, the roads being slippery on account of heavy rains and bad roads, said William Bowman contracted piles, by reason of which he suffered very much."

Dr. Robert H. Patterson, the family physician of the claimant for eighteen years before he went into the Army, testifies, on the 30th of November, 1877, "that he had never treated the claimant for piles before he went into the Army."

J. F. Carpenter, another witness, testifies "that he knew the claimant intimately since 1841 and never heard that he was disabled in any way before he went into the Army."

Ananias Berkly, another comrade, and who has known him many years intimately, testifies "that the claimant before and at the time he entered the Army was sound in body and enjoyed good health, and was exempt from piles."

Chaney Miller, another witness, corroborates this.

Dr. J. M. Lenthorn commenced treating the claimant for piles in July, 1865, on his return from the Army, and treated him for about six months, and pronounced his piles incurable. Dr. B. L. Yeagley afterward treated the claimant for piles.

These witnesses are certified to be reputable, and gentlemen of good character.

Examining Surgeon Dr. Henry Brubaker fixes his disability total at $8 per month, and says from the evidence before him it is his belief that the disability did actually originate in the service. Examining Surgeon Dr. W. B. Lowman fixes the disability at one-half—$4 per month.

The committee are of the opinion that the claimant has clearly made out his case, and that his pension should be fixed at the rate of $6 per month. They recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ARTHUR I. McCONNELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 2469) granting a pension to Arthur I. McConnell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Arthur I. McConnell, Company M, One hundred and second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $6 per month, from the 25th of June, 1865, that being the date of his discharge from the Army of the United States, in the late war of the rebellion, on account of injury received and disease contracted while in said military service and in line of duty.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

Arthur McConnell made application for pension on the 8th of June, 1876, alleging "that while in line of duty at Burkeville, Virginia, he contracted chronic diarrhea and asthma." His application was not favorably considered by the Commissioner of Pensions, because the applicant was unable to furnish the medical evidence required by the Department.

Thomas J. Krise, a private and comrade in the same company with the applicant, and who went from the same neighborhood to the Army, testifies "that while at Burkeville, Virginia, on or about the 10th day of May, 1865, the claimant contracted, from exposure while lying on the damp ground, chronic diarrhea and asthma; that at the time of his enlistment into the military service of the United States he was in the enjoyment of sound bodily health and perfectly free from the aforesaid diseases, from which he has been suffering from the date of his discharge."

Michael Shortencorber, another comrade, corroborates this testimony as to the contracting of chronic diarrhea and asthma at Burkeville, Virginia.

Elias B. Barnicle and W. A. Adams, two reputable citizens of the town in which the applicant lives, swear "that they are personally well acquainted with the claimant; knew him before and at the time of his enlistment into the military service of the United States, when he was in the enjoyment of sound bodily health and perfectly free from chronic diarrhea and asthma; that since his discharge from the service he has suffered from these diseases, which have continuously existed to the present time."

Dr. Alexander Tait, who treated the claimant for chronic diarrhea and asthma a part of the time since his return from the Army, says the claimant, because of said diseases, is unable to do manual labor.

Examining Surgeon Dr. D. W. Evans says the claimant's disability is likely to be permanent, and, from the evidence before him, the disability originated in the service and in line of duty, and rates the disability at three-fourths, or $6 per month.

The committee are of opinion, after considering all the facts in the case, that the claimant is entitled to a pension, and they therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDMUND EASTMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1464) granting a pension to Edmund Eastman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Edmund Eastman, a private, Company K, Two hundred and second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that said Edmund Eastman be allowed a pension at the rate of $6 per month, commencing from August 3, 1865, that being the date of his discharge from the Army of the United States on account of an injury received by him while in the service and line of duty during the late war of the rebellion.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

That Edmund Eastman was a private in Company K, Two hundred and second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was discharged August 3, 1865. The evidence submitted to the committee shows that in the winter or early spring of 1865, while his regiment was stationed near Fairfax Station, in Virginia, he was detailed to work upon the fortifications then being erected at that place, and that while at this work he was lifting heavily at a large beam, or piece of wood, above his head, and by reason of his exertion in that position he was very badly ruptured. That he was not detailed after that day to work upon the fortifications, and the nature of the service rendered by him afterward, up to the time of his discharge, was light, requiring no violent physical exercise, and that while he suffered he did not know the nature of his injury, nor did he make it known to any one while in the Army because of his diffidence or bashfulness on the subject. On his return home he attempted to work at his trade, that of shoo-making, when he found that his rupture caused him such intense pain that he could not work at all. That he was compelled to abandon his trade entirely, and has never been able to work at it or perform a full day's work since he was discharged, because of the rupture received as above recited. That he consulted Dr. John E. Maugher immediately after he attempted to work, and was informed of the nature of his injury.

Dr. Maugher, a physician of twenty-eight years' standing, residing in Carrollton, Cambria County, Pennsylvania, testifies "that soon after the return of Edmund Eastman from the service in 1865, he called on your affiant for treatment; that he made an examination of Mr. Eastman's case, and found him so badly ruptured as to be incapacitated from manual labor," and "that he has examined him since and found his condition worse." He further says he "has known Eastman for twenty-three years; that he is a bashful, modest man, who has always shrunk from making known his disability to any one."

Other witnesses testify that Eastman was a sound, able-bodied man when he went into the service, and after his return he had to abandon working at his trade.

Hon. A. A. Barker, a former member of Congress, testifies to the credibility of persons who have testified, and says he has known "Edmund Eastman for over forty years; that I know him to be an honest man, and worthy of credit; that I know him to be a backward, modest, and bashful man, and I firmly believe that it was because of his bashfulness that he did not apply for medical treatment when injured and thereby secure for himself the evidence necessary to successfully apply for a pension in the Pension Office."

The committee are satisfied and believe this to be a meritorious case; therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. I do not want to object to the bill, but to the rate. I wish to insert an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "volunteers," in line 4, as follows:

And that said Edmund Eastman be allowed a pension at the rate of $6 per month, commencing from August 3, 1865, that being the date of his discharge from the Army of the United States on account of an injury received by him while in the service and line of duty during the late war of the rebellion.

And insert the following:

On account of disease, injury, and wounds contracted in the line of duty in the military service of the United States in the war of the rebellion; said pension to date from the discharge of said soldier.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to amend the amendment so as to date from such time as the Pension Department may think the pension is deserved.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. Does the gentleman wish to offer an amendment?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "to date from the discharge of said soldier," and insert: Said pension to commence now, or at such time in the past as may be fixed by Pension Department.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to make a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order, this being objection day. The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. WHITE, and it was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA M. FRICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3021) granting a pension to Eliza M. Frick; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read.

Mr. WHITE. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Objected to by Mr. WHITE.

MARY ANN McCARROLL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1469) granting a pension to Mary Ann McCarroll; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. McMILLIN. I object.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I cannot withdraw the objection.

MARY WADE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2450) granting a pension to Mary Wade; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill and report were read.

Objected to by Mr. WHITE.

J. J. PURMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 235) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That J. Jackson Purman, late first lieutenant in the One hundred and fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, be, and he is hereby, granted and allowed from May 18, 1864, a pension at the rate of $24 per month; and the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of said J. Jackson Purman on the pension-roll at said rate, in lieu of the pension now paid him.

The report was read, as follows:

It is in evidence that the claimant was mustered into the service September 4, 1862, as first lieutenant in the One hundred and fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry for three years, and was in active-field service with his company and regiment until July 2, 1863, when wounded at the battle of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. Owing to the character of his wounds received in that engagement, he was thereafter unable to rejoin his regiment for duty, and was honorably discharged May 23, 1864, by special orders from the War Department, for physical disability on account of wounds received in action. He is now in receipt of a pension at $18, and asks that it be increased to $24, to date from the date of his original certificate.

He bases his claim for increase on section 4698 Revised Statutes, which provides that "all persons who have lost a leg above the knee, and are so disabled thereby that they cannot use an artificial limb, shall be rated in the second class, and receive $24 per month."

In this case it is shown that in the amputation of claimant's leg it was performed improperly; that the "stump" is with deficient covering to bone, and the tenderness prevents the continuous use of an artificial limb, and compels claimant to go on crutches the greater part of his time.

The nature of his present condition is established by the report of T. B. Hood, medical referee, Pension Office, and transmitted by the Commissioner of Pensions, and which is now on file with the committee, as follows, to wit:

"EXAMINING SURGEON'S CERTIFICATE.

"WASHINGTON, D. C., May 2, 1879.

"I hereby certify that I have carefully examined J. Jackson Purman, late a lieutenant in the One hundred and fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

"Disability permanent.

"I found, 1st, amputation of the left leg at a point about midway between the knee and ankle. The condition of the 'stump' is bad, because evidently there was sloughing of the flaps, leaving the stump conical and covered only by the integument which is stretched over the bones, is adherent thereto, and is consequently lowered in vitality. Very great care, and very great care only, could prevent sloughing of the poor covering here afforded, as any pressure, though very slight, if continued even for a few hours, would produce sloughing. The subject claims that he suffers great pain in the leg, and doubtless it is true. The thigh, of this leg presents the condition of marked muscular atrophy.

"2. I found in the right leg, and about four inches above the ankle, upon the lateral and anterior surfaces, two adherent cicatrices, which the subject claims mark the site of a gunshot wound. These cicatrices are adherent. It should seem, from the course of the missile, that the fibula was fractured, though the bone does not present any enlargement or outer evidence that it was so. The missile traversed the mass of muscles upon the side of the limb, namely: the two peronei, the long flexor of the toes, and the tibialis anticus. The movements of the leg are consequently limited, and certain of them necessarily painful, rendering locomotion difficult and uncertain, particularly upon a rough surface or in ascending or descending heights or a stairway. In addition to these local injuries, it is clear that the general health of the subject suffers somewhat. That which he claims is, in my judgment, entirely consistent with that which is objective and rational in the case."

"T. B. HOOD.
"Medical Referee."

The foregoing medical testimony establishes—

First. That, with a very little use of an artificial limb, he is forced to his crutches; the shriveled condition of the thigh urges the impression that it would have been preferable if a proper amputation had occurred above the knee, insuring claimant's general health.

Second. The medical referee states that the mass of muscles upon the side of the other limb was severed by a second gunshot wound, naturally rendering locomotion vexatious. He says, "It should seem from the course of the missile that the fibula was fractured," that "the movements of the leg are consequently limited, and certain of them necessarily painful." The disabled condition of the remaining leg forces your committee to the conclusion that claimant's disabilities are greater than if amputation had occurred above the knee; adding to these severe injuries a shattered constitution entitles him to relief in accordance with the spirit of existing laws; and as they are not of that character as will give the desired relief, the committee are of the opinion that Congress should grant the same. They therefore return the bill to the House, and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE W. LEAMY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 228) granting a pension to George W. Leamy; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to offer the same amendment to this bill that I did to a former bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I object to the bill.

MELISSA WAGNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 225) granting a pension to Melissa Wagner; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Melissa Wagner, widow of Jacob F. Wagner, late a private in Company B, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

It is in evidence that the petitioner is the widow of Jacob F. Wagner, a private in Company B, Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, who, while serving in said command, contracted a severe disease in his head and lungs, resulting from a gunshot wound received in battle at Cold Harbor, Virginia, which said wound carried away his teeth and the roof of his mouth; that said disability continued until the 12th day of April, 1875, when death resulted. It is in evidence that a pension was granted said Wagner for said wound, the number of certificate being 86,023; that the petitioner, after the death of her said husband, made application for a pension on the above stated facts, and that the same was rejected by the Pension Office, on the ground that it had not been established by medical evidence that the wound received in battle was the sole and direct cause of her husband's death; that she is now left without support, with four children to maintain, and has no income whatever save her own earnings. This latter statement is certified to by sixty-eight reputable citizens of Pennsylvania, who aver that they are well acquainted with the widow, and were likewise well acquainted with the husband when living.

It is the opinion of the committee, from the evidence furnished, that the said Jacob F. Wagner died in consequence of wounds received in battle; the evidence of S. J. Hamill, the physician who attended him in his last illness, points conclusively to the same; and as she is the widow of a brave soldier, who was very severely wounded in battle, and as she is now in the most destitute condition, with four children to maintain, and as a bill for her relief was favorably reported from committee and passed the House in the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress, but failed in the Senate for lack of time, the committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Add to the bill the words—
"Who died from the effects of wounds received in action and in the line of duty. Said pension to take effect from the date of the death of her said husband."

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

THOMAS LOWRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 229) granting a pension to Thomas Lowry; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Lowry, late a sergeant of Company A, One hundred and forty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion, and a private of Company K, First Pennsylvania Regiment (Colonel Black commanding) in the war with Mexico.

The report was read, as follows:

It appears from record evidence that this soldier was mustered into the United States service August 5, 1861, in Company L, Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, which was transferred and became Company A, One hundred and forty-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry; that he was mustered out of service July 15, 1865; that he was admitted to general hospital, Harper's Ferry, December 10, 1862, and that he remained in hospital nearly ten months. The Surgeon-General reports treatment in Patterson Park hospital for rheumatism from December 18, 1862, to October 2, 1863. George F. Dibel, late captain Company A, One hundred and forty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, testifies that in line of duty at or near Harper's Ferry, Virginia, in December, 1862, the claimant was taken sick with rheumatism, became unfit for military duty, and was sent to general hospital; that said Lowry was in good health at enlistment, and his disease was not aggravated by any bad habits.

The Army records show this affiant present at the time covered by his testimony. Dr. James McCarrell, the family physician of said Lowry for nine years before his enlistment and for more than a year after his return from the service, and who is certified to by the secretary of the examining board of surgeons at Pittsburgh as credible and skillful in his profession, testifies that when the claimant came home from the Army he was sick and suffering from rheumatism and fever and ague; that he prescribed for him August 18, 1865, and up to October 20, 1866, at which time claimant became so prostrated that he took his bed, and was afflicted with sub-acute rheumatism, spinal irritation, and congestion. Dr. George S. Graham, certified to by the same authority as a credible and skillful physician, testifies that he was called in November, 1866, after the removal of Dr. McCarrell, to treat claimant, and continued to treat him for sub-acute rheumatism and spinal irritation until October 1, 1867. Dr. James McCarrell again testifies that claimant was in good health and free from rheumatism or other disease before he enlisted, and he is satisfied that his rheumatism and fever and ague were contracted in the United States service. Dr. George W. Bell testifies that he was the family physician of claimant after Dr. Graham from December 28, 1867, to August 16, 1872, and had him under treatment more or less during that period; that he has a permanently broken-down constitution, indicated by debility, rheumatic and nervous troubles. United States Examining Surgeon Dr. Dougherty, July, 1872, reports one-half total disability, and that it is his belief that said disability did first originate in the service and line of duty from evidence before him, and is likely to be permanent; and again reports, May 21, 1873, three-fourths disability and permanent. Dr. E. Pearce, United States examining surgeon, October 7, 1874, reports three-fourths disability.

The claimant certifies, November 8, 1878, that he served in the Mexican war in Company K, First Pennsylvania Regiment, Colonel Black commanding; was discharged from the same at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, when regiment was disbanded about the 1st of August, 1848; also that he served four years honorably in the late war, in which he contracted permanent disability from which he now suffers. These facts are attested by seventy-seven reputable citizens of Pennsylvania, who know the claimant, and aver that he is unable to support himself and is a very worthy subject for relief.

His application for pension was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the origin of his disability was not clearly proven to be that for which he claimed pension, although the most positive testimony is presented that the disability originated in the service from several causes, and has continued since.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment: Add the words, "who contracted permanent disability in the service of his country and in the line of his duty, during the war of the rebellion."

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does this bill provide for arrears?

Mr. WARNER. It does not.

There being no objection the bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CAROLINE BOLL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3099) granting a pension to Caroline Boll; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment in writing. Hereafter if an amendment is offered which is not sent up in writing the Chair will regard it as in the nature of an objection. The time of the committee is too valuable to be consumed unnecessarily.

Mr. WARNER. I object to the bill.

JACOB GINDER.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3098) granting a pension to Jacob Ginder; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill and report were read.

Objected to by Mr. WHITE.

ELIZABETH DOUGHERTY.

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the Private Calendar, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3261) granting a pension to Elizabeth Dougherty.

Mr. WARNER. I move that the committee rise.

The question being put, there were—ayes 28, noes 45.

Mr. ATHERTON. A quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers and appoints the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. PRICE, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. ATHERTON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 70.

Mr. ATHERTON. No quorum.

Mr. STEVENSON. Rather than we should have a call of the House, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the motion now pending. The Chair will cause to be read the rule which provides for the case when the Committee of the Whole finds itself without a quorum.

The Clerk read as follows:

106. Whenever the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or the Committee of the Whole House, finds itself without a quorum, the chairman shall cause the roll of the House to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal.

The roll was then called, and the following-named members failed to answer to their names:

Acklen,	Elam,	Lounsbury,	Ryan, Thomas
Armfield,	Ellis,	Martin, Joseph J.	Simonton,
Barlow,	Errett,	McCold,	Smith, William E.

Mr. BRIGHT. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRIGHT. Does the rule disclose a quorum present?

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole has no authority to determine that matter. It is his duty under the rule to report to the House the absentees, and the Speaker of the House is to determine in regard to the question of a quorum.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CALKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and its proceedings having been interrupted because a quorum failed to vote, under the rule he had caused the roll to be called and reported the list of absentees to the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it in order to move to dispense with all further proceedings under this call?

The SPEAKER. The roll-call, as reported from the Committee of the Whole, shows the presence of two hundred and seven members.

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the House now adjourn.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. MCMAHON, from the Committee on Appropriations, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to reserve all points of order on that bill.

Mr. MCMAHON. I move that the bill be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALKINS. The roll-call in Committee of the Whole having developed the fact that a quorum was present, must not the House immediately go back into Committee of the Whole under the rule?

The SPEAKER. That is the rule and the practice; but it can be interrupted by a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CALKINS. I understand that.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to adjourn would be voted down, then the Chair will immediately call the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] to take the chair in Committee of the Whole.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEELE, for one week from Monday next;

To Mr. ARMFIELD, for one week commencing with to-day, on account of important business; and

To Mr. ATHERTON, for one week, on account of important business.

PEARL RIVER, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask unanimous consent to present and have referred to the Committee on Commerce the memorial and petition of members of the Legislature of Mississippi, asking an appropriation of Congress for the improvement of Pearl River. And I also ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection; and the memorial was received and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned, members of the Legislature from South Mississippi, respectfully ask you to use your influence to secure an appropriation for the purpose of improving the navigation of Pearl River south of Jackson.

We are of the opinion that the sum of $150,000 judiciously expended will render Pearl River navigable to Monticello, and perhaps to Jackson, nearly or quite the entire year.

As you are aware, there is a vast amount of valuable timber on this river and its tributaries, especially in Marion and Hancock Counties, which would find a market much easier and more certainly if the obstructions to the navigation of the river were removed. We think not less than twenty thousand bales of cotton would go down this river annually provided boats could navigate it even nine months in the year. There is, too, on Pearl River, in the counties of Hancock, Marion, and Lawrence, magnificent pine forests peculiarly adapted to the manufacture of turpentine; but this interest is entirely neglected except just above the town of Gainsville. This would not be so if turpentine could be readily shipped to New Orleans.

When you consider the distance from the New Orleans and Jackson Railroad to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad you will perceive that Pearl River is the natural outlet for the products of a large portion of our State.

There are two points on Pearl River where work is especially needed. One is at the mouth of East Pearl, where the channel needs deepening; and the other is near where the river divides into East and West Pearl. On East Pearl River are situated the towns of Gainsville, Log Town, and Pearlinton, and at each place there are large saw-mills that ship their lumber by large schooners to Mexican, South American, and Cuban ports. The large schooners have great difficulty at times in crossing the bar at the mouth of East Pearl. To give you an idea of the capacity of these mills and the importance of this trade we will state that the mill of Messrs. Poitevent & Favre, of Pearlinton, can saw two hundred thousand feet of lumber per day. The mills at the other towns are very large, too. Boats for Upper Pearl River now come through West Pearl; and it is desirable that this route should be opened up; and practical steamboat men say by cutting a canal six hundred feet long the volume of water in West Pearl may be vastly increased and the difficulty of navigating it overcome to a great extent. There is a great deal of overhanging timber on the lower part of the river which should be cut away. Where overhanging timber is on a sharp point or deep in a bend it rakes the cotton off boats in passing. There are, too, a great many sunken logs that ought to be pulled out. Some of these logs were cut in during the war to prevent the Federal gunboats from coming up the river. Previous to the war boats have carried out eleven hundred bales of cotton at a time; and we are anxious to see our river so improved that it may be so again.

Hoping you will interest yourself in this matter, we are respectfully yours,
S. J. Leslie, Hancock County; Theodore B. Ford, Marion County; John Lewis, Perry County; Jesse Byrd, Greene County; R. R. Applewhite, Lincoln County; James C. Lamkin, Pike County; Charles H. Wood, Jackson County; J. W. McNeil, Copiah County; H. M. Hunter, Neshobee County; H. F. Bufkin, Copiah County; G. A. Tenneson, Lawrence County; J. F. Burnett, Hinds County; Thomas A. McWillie, Hinds County; N. Mathison, Covington County.
JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI, February 10, 1880.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KNOTT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 98, noes 45.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. ANDERSON called for the yeas and nays.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Pending the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn, Mr. HAZELTON said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAZELTON. I have been trying for some two hours past to rise to a correction of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That is generally done in the morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HAZELTON. Yes; but I believe it is in order at any time after the attention of a member is called to that portion of the RECORD which needs correction. It will take but one moment, if the Chair will hear me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HAZELTON. It is a matter of the utmost importance. In a debate which took place here last night I replied to a speech of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.] After the adjournment, and before the appearance of the RECORD this morning, he struck out that portion of the speech to which I replied, [great laughter,] which left my speech standing naked and alone. [Renewed laughter.] That is the custom of the gentleman, or I would not rise here to-day and ask for a correction of the RECORD. But after three or four of my speeches have gone home, and the object at which I struck has been removed by the party himself, my constituents cannot appreciate my speeches. [Laughter.]

I now move that the RECORD of this morning, on page 28, be corrected by the insertion of the speech of the gentleman, which he has mutilated and garbled by changing entirely the notes of the reporters by striking out the words "hospital pimps," to which I replied. I ask the Clerk to read the report of the speech of that gentleman to which I replied, so that the RECORD may be corrected to correspond to the facts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WARNER. * * * I want to see some method adopted, some secure way, whereby the soldier who has wounds, or scars, or actual disability to show, and who is entitled under the law when he enlisted to his pension—I say I want to see means established whereby he can have it without waiting to die. On the other hand, I oppose mere pretenses, shams, claims put in here by hospital pimps, by men who never were near enough to a battle-field to hear the sound of a gun. I doubt not many of them come up here. I propose we shall know what we are doing and not open the gate wide to all these cases, which means capitalized debt, or debt equal to something like $2,000,000,000.

Mr. HAZELTON. I now ask the clerk to read that portion of my reply which relates to that part of the speech which was stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAZELTON. * * * Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Invalid Committee. I am a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and I have the undoubted right now, as a member of that glorious committee, to say a word on this occasion notwithstanding the desire of my honorable friend from New York to take my place. "I am no orator as Brutus is," but my rights are higher than his here. Now I am very sorry that the gentleman from Ohio, who draws a pension himself, should denounce all those claimants here, amounting perhaps to two hundred, as "hospital pimps." He denounces this system of pensioning soldiers by acts of Congress upon the ground that we do not know the character of the claimants with whom we are dealing and that they are "hospital pimps." The great body of these claimants are men who were wounded in the war in the service of their country. Many of these claimants for pensions are the widows of soldiers who died from diseases contracted or wounds received in the service of their country. Any man is welcome to all the glory he may receive in this Republic by denouncing this class of soldiers in such terms.

Mr. THOMAS TURNER. Who was the "gentleman from New York" alluded to? He was named last night. Let us have his name in there. Who was he? He is a republican, and therefore his name is left out. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I think he ought to be named.

Mr. THOMAS TURNER. Yes, sir; let us have the RECORD right—precisely right. Who was the "gentleman from New York?"

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to refer to the notes of the speech made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON,] but I am quite certain (and my impression is supported by the recollection of gentlemen around me) that material change—some change at least, was made in his speech.

Mr. HAZELTON. Not one word by me; I never saw the manuscript.

Mr. WARNER. Now, I did use here in debate (the expression came to me suddenly) the words "hospital pimps," which I desired at the time to ask the reporter to strike out; but I did not. Now that the matter is brought up, I am inclined to think that my speech as I made it, with the words in, was best, and that it was a mistake on my part to make the correction that I did by striking out the words referred to. I deny, however, that in doing so I did anything more than is done by every gentleman in this House time and time again. I can refer to the most distinguished gentlemen here, whose expressions have been corrected, toned down, or stricken out. This occurs daily. If it was not proper, if it is an offense, then I desire to restore the speech as I made it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state it has always been held that one member has no right to touch the remarks of another as written out by the reporters; but it has generally been held that the right belongs to a member to modify his own remarks.

Mr. WARNER. I did not touch the remarks of any other member.

The SPEAKER. That has been the ruling of the Chair heretofore.

Mr. HAZELTON. I want to say—

Mr. WARNER. I am not through. Have I the floor?

Mr. HAZELTON. Do I understand that to be the rule?

Mr. WARNER. I insist upon my right to the floor.

Mr. HAZELTON. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. WARNER. I did not, however, in using the term "hospital pimps," apply it to the two hundred thousand applicants at the Pension Office. I merely applied the term, which was a common expression in the Army, to a certain class of men who were known to be "shirks," who never appeared upon the battle-field—stragglers and deserters. Such men were in both armies. They always accompany armies, and some of them are as likely to come forward and ask for pensions as any others. Still I did not wish to use a hard term; and I intended to apply it only to the very few constituting this class, and not generally, as the gentleman from Wisconsin sought to make me apply it; otherwise I should not have stricken it out. If he had used the expression as I used it and intended to have it understood I should not have stricken it out, but not having his remarks when I made that change, and not having seen them in the report, I struck it out. But I desire now to have it all in.

Mr. HAZELTON. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Ohio has insinuated that I changed the reporter's notes so that they should represent something different from what I stated, I desire to reply. I am willing that any of the reporters should state before this House, under oath, whether they ever sent any manuscript to me, or whether I ever saw any of their notes until I applied to them to-day for the portion which has been read. I ask the reporter to state what was the fact.

The SPEAKER. The reporters have no right to take part in the debates, and the gentleman has no right to address them in debate.

Mr. HAZELTON. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Ohio when he made the insinuation (for he was not brave enough to make the charge directly) knew that I had never changed one word or letter of the reporter's notes.

Furthermore, sir, this is an old trick of the gentleman from Ohio. You may go back over the tracks of his debates from the time he came here, and wherever he has made a declaration which has been replied to, and he did not like the reply, or did not like the character of what he stated, he has in the night-time, in his secret chamber, [laughter,] struck out what was objectionable to himself, leaving the reply of the other party as naked and bald as a mountain.

Mr. WARNER. I deny absolutely that statement, and the gentleman cannot furnish the proof.

Mr. HAZELTON. Let the gentleman explain what he means by "hospital pimps."

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman may be "brave," but—

Mr. HAZELTON. Have I the floor or not?

Mr. WARNER. I denounce the statement as a falsehood here and now.

Mr. HAZELTON. For all which I shall hold the gentleman responsible—not with daggers or with "pistols and coffee for two." Now, if I have the floor, I want to state—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is traveling altogether beyond—

Mr. HAZELTON. I am not traveling an inch beyond the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Beyond the privilege of a correction of the RECORD.

Mr. HAZELTON. Very well; then I beg pardon of the Chair; but I want to say—I think I have the right to say—that the gentleman from Ohio has admitted the change of the RECORD, and now he thinks the term "hospital pimps," as applied to these pensioners of the Government, is better than the language which appears in print.

Mr. WARNER. I never applied that term to a pensioner of the Government, and if the gentleman from Wisconsin thinks I applied it to him, he is mistaken. I knew very well he was never in the Army, [laughter;] that he was too close to the Canada border all the time, [laughter;] that his fighting was done so far in the rear that it was beyond the sound of the loudest gun. [Laughter and applause.] It is not applicable therefore to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAZELTON. I must reply to that decidedly, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER. That is what hurt him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAZELTON. I am not surprised the gentleman from Ohio stands on this floor to blow his own trumpet for what he did in the war. As near as I can find, he was wounded early, sought a pension early, and that the wound for which he obtained a pension is in his back. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WARNER. A gentleman on this floor [laughter]—

The SPEAKER. The House will observe order.

Mr. WARNER. There is no better evidence of cowardice, of a coward—

The SPEAKER. This debate is all out of order.

Mr. WARNER. Than that he should stab a soldier in the back. [Laughter and applause.] That is the only way he shoots.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose here to proclaim my own deeds. I refer this House and the country to the record I made on the battle-field, in campaigns, and in camp from the beginning of the war to the end of it. I refer gentlemen not merely to the Peninsula, not only to South Mountain and Antietam, where, although I do not like to say it myself here, I suffered as severely as any man in that battle, by a wound, not in the back, but in front, and no man in the service suffered more and lived than I did; I refer all to the record, to the reports of my superior commanders, to the reports of the battles of Antietam and Gettysburgh. And the gentleman who staid at home, who has no better spirit than to be willing now to assail the record of a soldier of whom he knows nothing, deserves the characterization I have given him.

Mr. HAZELTON. Did you not assail my manhood and say I was in Canada?

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALKINS. I wish to ask whether the reports from the Committee of the Whole House will not come up the next objection day?

The SPEAKER. They will.

Mr. HAZELTON. That is foreign to this subject, but it is all right. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS TURNER. I want to know the name of that gentleman from New York. [Great laughter.] They named him last night. Who was the gentleman from New York? [Laughter.] Let him rise and say it was him if he is here. [Laughter.]

And then (at four o'clock and seven minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 6, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, REV. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions submitting a revised estimate of deficiencies for Army and Navy pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3351) for the relief of Rev. Paul E. Gillen; and
A joint resolution (H. R. No. 168) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, flags, &c., to the triennial committee of Knights-Templar at Chicago.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3968) for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished-reserve lands, in the State of Kansas.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Brown, publisher of the Daily and Weekly Nebraska Press, and the German Publishing Company, publishers of the Nebraska Staats-Zeitung, of Nebraska City, Nebraska, praying for the passage of a bill placing wood and straw pulp, soda-ash, and other chemicals used in the manufacture of paper, on the free list, and reducing the duty on printing-paper, &c.; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Sicily and Blue Springs, Nebraska, the petition of citizens of Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, and Nebraska, and the petition of citizens of Pleasant Hill and Dorchester, Nebraska, who were soldiers in the late war, praying to be paid the difference in value between gold and greenbacks at the time of their payment as soldiers; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALLACE presented a petition of citizens of Greene County, Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a department of agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, in favor of the carriage of United States mails in American-built ships; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Greene County, Pennsylvania, praying for such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of citizens of Greene County, Pennsylvania, praying for such legislation by Congress as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in transportation charges; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of William Beattie, Julius C. Smith, J. F. Hunt, J. L. Reynolds, and Theron Earle, committee of the Merchants and Cotton Exchange Association of Greenville, South Carolina, praying for an appropriation for the erection of a public building at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented the petition of S. A. Towns, W. F. Ansel, and 100 other citizens of the city of Greenville, South Carolina, praying for an appropriation for the erection of a public building at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a resolution of the city council of Greenville, South Carolina, praying Congress for an appropriation for the erection of a public building at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONAS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 310) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Israel Dodge, deceased, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1430) to enable town-sites to be entered on the public lands; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Public Lands to this bill. I have taken it from the bill prepared by the commission that was appointed by a former Congress to report upon subjects of this character. The report is lengthy, and the bill they submitted contains very many provisions of doubtful propriety. This portion of their bill will probably not be questioned by anybody familiar with the wants of the people of the West. Owing to a recent ruling of the Land Office, it is practically impossible for a town-site entry to be made under existing law. In the Territories of Dakota and Wyoming, and in some of the Western States, there is great need of a law that will enable town-sites to be entered at once. I believe the Committee on Public Lands should take this matter in hand and report the bill promptly if it meets the approval of the committee, as I think it must. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1431) in relation to the avenue and street lamps in the City of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1432) granting a pension to Angus McAuley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1433) for the relief of I. Ans. McCreight; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1434) for the relief of the estate of William D. Moseley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

JACQUES CLAMORGAN AND PETER PROVENCHERE.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be respectfully requested to transmit to the Senate, for examination in reference to the claims therein mentioned, now pending before the Senate, certain letters from the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and by him submitted to the House on the 13th day of May, 1874, and described in the House Journal of that date as "letters in relation to the private land claims of Jacques Clamorgan and Peter Provenchere."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3351) for the relief of Rev. Paul E. Gillen was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 163) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, flags, &c., to the triennial committee of Knights-Templar at Chicago was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JESSE F. PHARES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the Calendar, commencing at the point reached on yesterday.

The bill (S. No. 1185) granting a pension to Jesse F. Phares was announced as being the first in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is reported adversely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator object to its present consideration?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

JOHN SNIDER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1186) granting a pension to John Snider.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is also reported adversely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is reported adversely; and being objected to, it will go over.

BEN HOLLADAY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben Holladay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is an old disputed bill; that will not do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

PHOEBE C. DOXSIE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 370) for the relief of Phoebe C. Dossie; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Phoebe C. Dossie, widow of the late James W. Dossie, first lieutenant of Company G, Twenty-seventh Regiment Michigan Infantry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FARLEY February 9, 1880, from the Committee on Pensions:

James W. Dossie enlisted in 1862, and was mustered out as lieutenant in 1865. September 16, 1865, he applied for and was granted pension of $8 per month. Increased to $15 per month September 7, 1870. Increased to $24 per month September 11, 1872. Increased to $50 per month November 4, 1874. These pensions were allowed for gunshot wound in left upper arm, in abdomen, and in left breast, the ball passing through the lung.

In January, 1876, Lieutenant Dossie was admitted into Harper hospital, Detroit, Michigan, for care and treatment of the wounds received in the service in line of duty, and while in a greatly debilitated condition was attacked with varioloid May 6, 1876, and died May 20, 1876. The only question appears to be whether he died of varioloid or of debility resulting from wounds. The Commissioner of Pensions seems to have regarded the case as somewhat difficult, and caused a special agent of the Department to examine the surgeon in charge of the hospital at the time of sickness and death.

It would seem from the regular and frequent increase of the pension during the life-time of the pensioner that the injuries were constantly becoming more troublesome, and the evidence shows clearly that his condition became so debilitated that the constant use of tonics was necessary to support life. The use of these tonics had to be suspended during treatment for varioloid.

The hospital surgeon testifies that he would have died of his wounds in all probability in a very few months had not varioloid intervened.

It is no doubt true that varioloid intervened and hastened his death, yet the evidence is equally clear that he would have died within a year of the injuries received in battle had not the disease intervened, and it is quite as certain that he would have survived the attack of varioloid had he not been so badly reduced by his wounds.

From all the facts, your committee are of the opinion that the accompanying bill, granting a pension to Phoebe C. Dossie, should pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN FOX.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1097) for the relief of Susan Fox; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan Fox, step-mother of Robert M. Fox, late private of Company G, Fourth Regiment Delaware Volunteers, and to pay her a pension the same as if she had been the real mother of said soldier, commencing from the passage of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLATT February 9, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1097) granting a pension to Susan Fox, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That Robert M. Fox, a private in Company G, Fourth Delaware Volunteers, was killed in the service of the United States, and in the line of his duty, near Petersburg, Virginia, in the year 1864; that said Robert M. Fox was the son of Joab and Annie Fox, his wife, who died in giving birth to said Robert M. Fox, in the year 1840; that claimant, Susan Fox, being a friend of said Annie Fox, took and reared and cared for the said Robert M. Fox as her own child, and subsequently, in the year 1841, married the said Joab Fox, and lived with him as his wife until his death, in the year 1873. The claimant treated said Robert M. Fox in all respects as if he had been her own child, and her dependence upon him for support, and his actual support of her prior to enlistment, and during his service, are fully established. A pension was granted to the claimant, as the mother of said Robert M. Fox, December 21, 1877, she supposing at the time of her application that she was entitled to a pension the same as if she had been his real mother. One semi-annual payment of the pension was made to her, when her name was dropped from the roll, on the ground that she was only a step-mother of the said Robert M. Fox, and she was recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions to make her application to Congress for relief.

Your committee are of the opinion that the said Susan Fox intended no fraud upon the Government, and finding that special acts have been passed by Congress for the relief of persons similarly situated, report the accompanying bill as a substitute for Senate bill No. 1097, and recommend that the substitute bill do pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Susan Fox."

STEPHEN D. SMITH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1051) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line 8, after the word "thirty," to strike out "seven," and after the word "dollars," to strike out "and fifty cents;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen D. Smith, certificate No. 33823, and pay him a pension of $30 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLATT February 9, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1051) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That the claimant, Stephen D. Smith, was a private in Company C, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, enlisting September 28, 1861; that he was wounded in his left thigh, by a grape-shot, at the charge on Fort Wagner, July, 1863; that he was taken prisoner and carried to Charleston, South Carolina, where his leg was amputated near the hip-joint three days after he was wounded. Two days afterward he was exchanged and sent to New York, his wound receiving no treatment from the time of amputation until he reached New York; that the end of the bone was not covered by the flesh, and protrudes, so that it is impossible for him to wear an artificial limb. He continually suffers pain, and his health has become injured and is continually failing. He is now disabled from obtaining a livelihood, and is under the care of a physician much of the time.

His disability is permanent. He was pensioned at the rate of $8 per month, the highest rate allowed at the time his pension was granted; and his pension has since been increased, under the provisions of subsequent acts of Congress, to $24 per month.

The committee consider his case to be one of peculiar hardship, and recommend that his pension be increased to $30 per month, and that the bill do pass, with an amendment striking out, in the eighth line of the bill, the word "seven," also the words "and fifty cents."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTHER E. LIEURANCE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 526) granting a pension to Esther E. Lieurance; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Esther E. Lieurance, widow of Stephen Lieurance, late a soldier in Company H, Third Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLATT February 9, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 526) granting a pension to Esther E. Lieurance, having considered the same, respectfully report: That the claimant is the widow of Stephen Lieurance, who was a sergeant in Company H, Third Wisconsin Volunteers, enlisted June 29, 1861, and discharged June 18, 1865. He was severely wounded in his left shoulder at Dallas, Georgia,

May 25, 1864, from the effects of which wound he never fully recovered. He made, however, no claim for invalid pension during his life, and died May 5, 1875, of rheumatic fever, involving the heart.

His widow, the claimant, filed an application for a pension June 3, 1876, which was rejected April 16, 1878, on the ground that the disease of which the soldier died was not the result of his wound or his military service. Among other evidence filed in the case is that of two physicians of good standing, one of whom treated the soldier at different times from July 6, 1864, till the fall of 1870, and says that in 1864 the soldier's wound was discharging; that in July, 1865, he suffered from continued pain in his shoulder and spine of a rheumatic or neuralgic character, and was thin and emaciated, which condition and symptoms increased in degree until the fall of 1870, when, on account of change of residence, he ceased to treat him.

The other physician was called to treat the soldier in 1872, and continued his treatment until the time of his death in 1875. He states that during all that period the soldier suffered from rheumatic neuralgia caused by the wound; that the ball entered in front, passed through the apex of the left lung, lodged under the left scapula, and was extracted from that position; that his health gradually failed from year to year, and that he died May 5, 1875, of rheumatic fever, involving the heart, the action of which had been for years impaired; and that he believes that death resulted indirectly from the soldier's wound.

Upon this evidence the case was submitted by the Commissioner to the medical reviewer, who gave an opinion that the wound contributed nothing, directly or indirectly, to the soldier's death; and thereupon the application was rejected.

The committee, in view of the severe character of the soldier's wound, and his continued failing health from the time he received it until he died, are of opinion that, although it may be true that the wound was not the immediate and direct cause of the fatal disease, yet the soldier's health and constitution had become in consequence of his wound so much impaired and enfeebled that he was in no condition physically to resist the attack of rheumatic fever, and that thus death resulted indirectly at least from his wound. They therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THORNTON SMITH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 562) granting an increase of pension to Thornton Smith; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all of the bill after the word "month," in line 7, in the following words:

From and including the 12th day of June, 1864, (his resignation from the military service of the United States having been accepted on the 11th day of June, 1864), less the pension heretofore paid him.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

From and after the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he hereby is, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Thornton Smith, late a quartermaster with the rank of captain in the volunteer service of the United States, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CALL February 9, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Captain Thornton Smith, praying for an increase of pension, respectfully report as follows, namely:

That the said Thornton Smith was a captain and assistant quartermaster in the United States Volunteers from August 3, 1861, to June 11, 1864. That in March, April, and May, in the year 1864, he served under General N. P. Banks in the Red River campaign in Louisiana, being under the immediate command of General Thomas Kilby Smith. While there he contracted the diseases which subsequently resulted in his total disability, namely, chronic diarrhea and muscular rheumatism. That prior to his service on the Red River he was a strong, healthy man, weighing about one hundred and eighty-six pounds, as proven by the affidavits of three intimate friends. That at present he is in a very weak physical condition and totally incapacitated for manual labor, weighing about one hundred and twenty-five pounds. One physician testifies as to his treatment of him in 1864, for severe chronic diarrhea. Another testifies as to his good health before the Red River campaign and his diseased condition subsequent. Another testifies as to his treatment of Captain Smith, from 1867 to 1877, for general nervous exhaustion and alternate constipation and diarrhea.

Another witness, who traveled with him to his post of duty in 1864, testifies as to his good health before the Red River campaign and his diseased condition from that time to this.

The report of the Army surgeon who attended him in New Orleans after his return from Red River, and on whose recommendation he was granted sixty days' leave of absence, shows that he was then suffering from chronic diarrhea.

The secretary of the medical board who examined him for an invalid pension reports that Captain Smith is suffering from true chronic diarrhea.

General Kilby Smith, under whose command the applicant served, testifies in the most unqualified manner as to the service and the severe illness of Captain Smith, and as to the total disability resulting to himself and to others from the same disease, contracted in the same place and at the same time, namely, during the severe attack and bombardment for three days upon the gunboats of the Union army on the Red River in 1864.

Your committee therefore consider that Captain Smith is totally disabled, and recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read again, as it is proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the pension of a captain?

Mr. PLATT. I think not. If the amendment proposed by the committee is adopted, I will move another amendment which will obviate any objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee has been agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Then I move to strike out the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month," and insert:

Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

I propose that amendment for the reason that it has not been the custom of the Senate to rate the pension which the soldier should receive, but to direct the Commissioner of Pensions to place his name upon the pension list, subject to the limitations of the pension laws.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask the Senator from Connecticut whether this is the usual form in which these bills are passed?

Mr. PLATT. I believe it is with the amendment I now propose.

Mr. WALLACE. Why has the Pension Committee then made the report fixing the pension at $30?

Mr. PLATT. I think there is a mistake regarding the report, and that the bill as it will read if my amendment should be adopted is the form in which it was intended to be reported by the Pension Committee.

Mr. WALLACE. That I may be satisfied of that fact, I ask that the bill be over until we make that examination. Let it go over and we can call it up again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over. The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

SPENCER W. TRYON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 982) granting a pension to Spencer W. Tryon; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Spencer W. Tryon, Company E, Fourteenth Illinois Regiment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, February 9, 1880:

Spencer W. Tryon, private Company E, Fourteenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers, transferred to Invalid Corps (S. O. No. 9, Headquarters Seventeenth Army Corps), applied for pension for loss of left arm by gunshot wound. He enlisted 25th May, 1861, and was discharged 24th May, 1864. His application was rejected for the reason that he was not in the line of duty when he received the wound that resulted in the amputation of his arm. It appears from the evidence that on May 14, 1863, while the regiment was embarked on a transport at Memphis, waiting orders to depart, Tryon was permitted to leave the boat by the officer of his company, with instructions to return by six p. m., the hour fixed for departure. The transport sailed earlier than was anticipated, and as Tryon was passing hastily toward the levee he was ordered to halt by the provost guard. Not hearing the challenge he was fired upon by the guard, receiving the injury for which he asks a pension. The evidence shows that Tryon was a good soldier and a quiet, inoffensive man. The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLOTTE T. ALDERMAN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1231) granting a pension to Charlotte T. Alderman; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Charlotte T. Alderman, widow of James Alderman, who was a private in Company E, Forty-second Regiment of Illinois Volunteers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLATT February 9, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of A. A. Sims and others, praying that a pension be granted to Charlotte T. Alderman, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That said Charlotte T. Alderman is the widow of James Alderman, late private in Company E, Forty-second Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, who died March 31, 1873.

Her application for a pension was rejected March 25, 1878, for the reason that the soldier's death did not result, as claimed, from wounds received in service. James Alderman, the soldier, was severely wounded in the left shoulder and also in the left side at the battle of Stone River, December 30, 1862, and again September 19, 1863, at the battle of Chickamauga, in the right temple, after which he was unable to perform active duty until his discharge, June 16, 1865.

He applied for a pension during his life, which application was pending at the time of his death.

An examination July 15, 1871, represented his disability as permanent, and that, in consequence of the wound in the right temple, and in the left side, he was totally incapacitated from labor.

He died of chronic pneumonia, resulting in an abscess of the left lung. The physician who treated him, after his discharge, until his death, testifies that the ball which entered his left side lodged in the pleural cavity, and that, in his opinion, it was by constant irritation of the external surface of the left lung by the lodged bullet that a chronic form of pneumonia, resulting in an abscess of the lung, was produced.

There is abundant testimony to show that from the time of his wound the soldier was disabled, and, for most of the time until his death, was unable to perform manual labor.

The case seems to have been one of doubt in the Pension Bureau, and, considering all the evidence, the committee are of opinion that the soldier's death was the result of wounds received in service and in line of his duty. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH SUTHERLAND.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1232) granting a pension to Elizabeth Sutherland; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs to be placed on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Sutherland, widow of Hosié Sutherland, of Captain Baitan's Company, Colonel Francisco's command, in the war of 1812.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. FARLEY February 9, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Sutherland, widow of Hosié Sutherland, deceased, formerly of Captain Baitan's Company, Colonel Francisco's Regiment, beg leave to report as follows:

It appears from the evidence that Hosié Sutherland was drafted and served in the war of 1812, from February 8, 1815, to March 7, 1815, when he was discharged. The treaty of peace was ratified March 17, 1815, and the soldier served ten days before and eighteen days after the ratification.

The act of March 9, 1878, requires that soldiers of the war of 1812 must have served fourteen days to entitle them or their representatives to a pension. As the soldier served twenty-eight days in the war before being discharged, it is thought that this case comes within the scope and spirit of the law.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that that is a class of cases where there ought to be some general legislation. I have a number of letters from claimants involving the same point, where persons did not serve the requisite number of days prior to the proclamation of the treaty of peace. I should like to call the attention of the Committee on Pensions—the chairman of the committee is not here and there are very few members present—to the fact that there ought to be general legislation which will cover precisely such a case as this. I have a number of letters, and I have advised the claimants that the probability is that general legislation would be enacted which would cover their cases. To act upon these cases separately would only throw a large number of cases on Congress—forty, fifty, or one hundred. Some of them would get their claims allowed, and some of them would not. It would be doing gross injustice to some and would be favoritism to others. I ask that the bill be laid over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over for the day.

FREDERICK WELLER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1233) granting a pension to Frederick Weller; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Frederick Weller, of Leavenworth City, Kansas, a soldier of the war of 1812.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, February 9, 1880:

On the petition of Frederick Weller, of Leavenworth City, Kansas, a soldier of the war of 1812, the committee find that the applicant was a private in Captain Baher Johnson's Company of Colonel Cramer's Regiment of Maryland Volunteers, war of 1812. That in August, 1872, he applied for a pension, but as no rolls of said company or regiment were on file in the Adjutant-General's Office, he was required to furnish the evidence of at least two comrades who served with him. In December, 1872, he furnished the evidence of Thomas R. Ellis, of Seneca County, Ohio, who served with him, and filed his own affidavit, but owing to lapse of time could not furnish the evidence of another comrade. Subsequently, namely, in February, 1873, he ascertained the whereabouts of another comrade, Ridge by name, to whom he wrote and received his answer, stating that he would sign the necessary affidavit, as he distinctly recollected the service; that he caused the affidavit to be prepared and forwarded to Ridge, but before it was received Ridge died suddenly, a fact shown by a letter from his son, William Ridge, filed March, 1873, with the statement of the claimant that he was unable to furnish the evidence of any other comrade.

The claim was rejected for want of this evidence of a second comrade required. The committee believe this to be a meritorious claim of an aged man of ninety-one years, whose good name and character are vouched for by numerous signatures of his fellow-citizens of Leavenworth, and as the spirit if not the letter of the law has been met, they recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN R. F. TATNALL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 392) to remove the political disabilities of John R. F. Tatnall, of Georgia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

PATENTS FOR PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1049) to amend section 2447 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the issue of patents for private land claims confirmed by act of Congress; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It amends section 2447 so as to read:

That in case of any claim to land in any State or Territory which has been, or may hereafter be, confirmed by act of Congress, and in which no provision is made by the confirmatory statute for the issue of a patent, it may be lawful, where surveys for the land have been, or may hereafter be, made, to issue patents for the claims so confirmed, upon the presentation to the Commissioner of the General Land Office of plats of survey thereof, duly approved by the surveyor-general of any State or Territory, if the same be found correct by the Commissioner. But such patents shall only operate as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States, and shall in no manner interfere with any valid adverse right to the same land, nor be construed to preclude a legal investigation and decision by the proper judicial tribunal between adverse claimants to the same land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am a member of the committee that reported this bill; but I think, on looking at it, it would be well in one point of view to make one amendment in line 15 after the word "Commissioner" to insert the words "and approved by the Secretary of the Interior," so as to make the survey subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior as well as of the Commissioner. It has been sometimes found that there is a little danger in large surveys without a very great scrutiny.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES OLIVIER DUCLOZEL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclouzel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That a certain tract of land, of ten arpents front by forty arpents in depth, on the west side of Bayou Teche, being section 79, in township 10 south, of range 6 east, in the State of Louisiana, as per plat of the United States consolidated land office, district of Louisiana, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to and in Charles Olivier Duclozel, his heirs or assigns.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior of the United States is hereby authorized, directed, and required to issue a patent for the lands aforesaid, herein described, to said Charles Olivier Duclozel; Provided, That this act and the said patent shall be considered and construed only as a quitclaim on the part of the United States of such title only as the United States have a legal and equitable right to convey, and shall not affect the rights or interests of any other claimants, or affect or preclude any judicial investigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report with the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] can explain it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I suggest, although by the standing order the morning hour continues until half past one o'clock, inasmuch as it is Saturday and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] has the floor for some observations, that the morning hour be considered as terminated now, so that the unfinished business shall come up at this time instead of half an hour hence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALLACE in the chair.) The Senator from Vermont suggests that the morning hour be considered at an end. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The unfinished business is now before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. RANDOLPH.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary as part of my remarks to read the original bill, and then the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH,] omitting the preamble, which I believe is the same as the preamble in the original bill, and then the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill reported by Mr. RANDOLPH, as follows:

A bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army.

Whereas a board of Army officers was convened by order of the President, by Special Orders No. 78, dated "Headquarters of the Army, Washington, April 12, 1878," to examine, in connection with the record of the trial by court-martial of Major-General Porter, such new evidence relating to the merits of said case as was then on file in the War Department, together with such other evidence as might be presented to said board, and to report, with the reasons for their conclusion, what action, if any, in their opinion, justice required should be taken on said application by the President, and said board reported that they had made a very thorough examination of all the evidence presented, and bearing in any manner upon the merits of the case, in addition to that which was before the court-martial; and also reported with entire unanimity, and without doubt in their own minds, with the reasons for their conclusions, that, in their opinion, justice required such action as might be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Major-General Fitz-John Porter, and to restore him to the positions of which that sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from the service; and

Whereas the President did heretofore transmit the proceedings and conclusions of the board to Congress with a message declaring that, as he was without power in the absence of legislation to act upon the recommendation of the report further than by submitting the same to Congress, the said proceedings and conclusions were transmitted for the information of Congress, and for such action as in their wisdom should seem expedient and just: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of said court-martial, approved by the President January 19, 1863, and published in General Orders No. 18, dated War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, January 22, 1863, if he shall deem it right and proper so to do.

SEC. 2. That in the event of the findings and sentence of the said court-martial being annulled and set aside, as provided for in the first section of this act, the President be, and is hereby, further authorized to restore the said Fitz-John Porter to the Army of the United States, with all the rank, rights, title, and privileges to which he would have been entitled if there had been no court-martial.

SEC. 3. The position of colonel, to which the said Fitz-John Porter shall be restored by the action of the President under section 2 of this act, shall be held by him as a supernumerary until a vacancy shall occur, when he shall be assigned to the regiment to which it pertains; but if the said Porter shall so elect, the President of the United States may retire him on the rank of colonel, that being the rank held by him while in service.

SEC. 4. That in the event of the finding and sentence of the said court-martial being annulled and set aside as provided for in the first section of this act, there shall be paid to the said Porter the pay and allowances of a major-general on the retired list of the Army from the 28th day of January, 1863, (date of last payment,) to the 31st day of August, 1866, both dates inclusive, and the pay and allowances of a colonel on the retired list of the Army, entitled to credit for twenty years' service from the 1st day of September, 1866, to the date of the passage of this act; and the entire sum or sums so estimated and determined shall be paid to the said Porter by the Secretary of the Treasury immediately upon the passage of this act, the sum required for the purpose being hereby appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Chief Clerk also read the amendment proposed by Mr. RANDOLPH, as follows:

Whereas a board of Army officers was convened by order of the President, by special orders numbered 78, dated "Headquarters of the Army, Washington, April 12, 1878," to examine, in connection with the record of the trial by court-martial of Major-General Porter, such new evidence relating to the merits of said case as was then on file in the War Department, together with such other evidence as might be presented to said board, and to report, with the reasons for their conclusion, what action, if any, in their opinion, justice required should be taken on said application by the President, and said board reported that they had made a very thorough examination of all the evidence presented, and bearing in any manner upon the merits of the case, in addition to that which was before the court-martial; and also reported with entire unanimity, and without doubt in their own minds, with the reasons for their conclusions, that, in their opinion, justice required such action as might be necessary to restore Major-General Fitz-John Porter to the positions of which that sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from the service; and

Whereas the President did heretofore transmit the proceedings and conclusions of the board to Congress with a message declaring that, as he was without power in the absence of legislation to act upon the recommendation of the report further than by submitting the same to Congress, the said proceedings and conclusions were transmitted for the information of Congress, and for such action as in their wisdom should seem expedient and just: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Fitz-John Porter a colonel of infantry in the Army of the United States, his commission to bear date January 1, 1863, with the pay and emoluments of that rank from that date until he shall be retired according to law or as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That at any time after the granting of such commission it shall be lawful for the President to place said Fitz-John Porter upon the retired list of the Army, with the pay of a retired colonel of infantry.

The Chief Clerk also read the following amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BURNSIDE, viz:

Strike out the preamble and all of the bill after the enacting clause and insert: That upon the application of General Fitz-John Porter, late colonel Fifteenth Infantry, and major-general of volunteers in the service of the United States, the President is authorized to grant him a new trial by court-martial upon the charges and specifications upon which he was tried, and in part convicted, by a court-martial convened under special orders numbered 362, and dated "Headquarters of the Army, Washington, District of Columbia, November 27, 1862."

SEC. 2. That the court-martial that may be convened by virtue of this act shall consist of not less than thirteen officers of high rank in the Army; it shall consider all testimony taken in the first trial as entered upon the record thereof; all pertinent official reports, both Union and confederate, on file in the War Department; and such new testimony as may be offered either by the United States or by the said Porter; and the said court shall have power, subject to the approval of the President, to confirm, mitigate, or annul the sentence of the former court-martial.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, a careful observer of the tendency of the times cannot fail to see that on every hand, and in every branch of the Government, we are rapidly advancing toward consolidation and centralization of power as against the States; and cannot fail to observe that the tendency is equally strong to vest all power in Congress. A few instances may be referred to in illustration.

We have, for instance, established by law, and supported for several years at the expense of the people, what we call the Agricultural Department, which is designed to publish some reports and some theoretical treatises upon agriculture; to buy and distribute seeds, &c. Now, it would puzzle the best lawyer to point out any clause in the Constitution authorizing this.

Another scheme has more recently been invented. A resolution was offered, the other day, by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to establish an Executive Department of Agriculture, Mining, and Manufactures, and that the republican side of the Chamber might not get in advance in the way of centralizing power and encroaching upon the province and prerogatives of the States, a Democrat, the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] a strict-construction democrat, a State-rights democrat, produces from his pocket a bill already drawn for the same purpose, showing that he had not only entertained the same thought that the Senator from Minnesota had, but had acted upon it, and was ready to have his bill considered by a committee of the Senate.

Now, considering that the powers of this Government are only such as are conferred upon it by the Constitution, that all powers not conferred by express words or reasonable implication are denied to this Government; considering that neither the word "agriculture" nor "mining" nor "manufactures" occurs anywhere in the Constitution, nor does the Constitution contain the remotest reference to either of these subjects, it is a little difficult to ascertain to what provision of the Constitution this new Executive Department is to be credited. We have a State Department, because this Government is charged with the administration of our foreign affairs. We have a War Department, because this Government must make war when it is to be made, and may raise armies. We have a Navy Department for a similar reason. We have a Treasury Department, because we must collect and disburse revenue. We have a Post-Office Department, because this Government has charge of the transportation of the mails. We have an Interior Department to take charge of the patent business, which by the Constitution is assigned to the Government, the pension business which results from war, and the Indian Bureau and the Land Office; all of which refer to subjects committed to the Government by the express provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

To what clause of the Constitution will the Senators refer this new Department of Mining, Agriculture, and Manufactures? They will, I hope, when they come to press such a bill, point out the constitutional ground upon which it may rest; but I know of no foundation for it whatever. I regard it as one of the evidences that mark our decadence from the principles of our Government; I regard it as a most dangerous encroachment upon the province of the States; although I am glad, if it is to be done, it is to be done without any party responsibility; and I am therefore very much obliged to the Senator from West Virginia, that he came with a bill prepared, and presented it, as soon as the republican Senator from Minnesota suggested the subject.

Look at our National Home for Volunteer Soldiers. By law the Chief-Justice and certain other officers of the Government are ex-officio managers, and nine other managers of the home are elected—mark the phraseology—elected by joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress. Where does Congress get the authority to elect any officer of the United States?

There is another grosser violation of the Constitution, which has existed so long that perhaps it never can be corrected; and that is providing by law for the appointment of officers in the Army and Navy, and how they shall be promoted. General Sherman is as much an officer of the United States as the Chief-Justice. What does the Constitution say in regard to all officers of the United States? It says that the President shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint all the officers of the United States except where by law the appointment of inferior officers may be lodged with the President alone, the heads of Departments, or the courts of law. The commanding general of the Army is certainly not an inferior officer, and yet he is an officer of the United States; and so down through the ranks of the Army, the subordinate generals to the colonels of regiments, and lieutenant-colonels, and majors, and captains, and so on. They are all officers of the United States, who, the Constitution says, shall be nominated by the President, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate be by him appointed.

Where do we get the authority for declaring by law whom he shall nominate? Suppose the President happens to know that the man entitled by promotion to the next grade of rank is wholly unfit to perform its duties; the Constitution lays upon him the duty of nominating a suitable and proper man for that place; we pass a law providing that he shall not do so; that he shall appoint the next man below, fit or unfit; the law is imperative. A man perfectly fit for a captaincy may be entirely unfit to be a colonel; the President may know it; but that has nothing to do with the question under our laws; he must promote the senior officer of the grade below, whether he believes him fit or unfit, because Congress has commanded him to do so.

Now what authority has Congress to command him to appoint a particular man in the Army any more than it has in the civil service? Nothing whatever but usage, nothing whatever but consistent and persistent, obstinate violation of the Constitution and encroachment upon the power of the Executive.

Cadets at West Point by law are appointed, as it is called, by the President; but they are to be appointed upon the nomination of members of the House of Representatives, each member of the House having the power to nominate one who must be appointed, and appointed as a cadet he is to be moved up the line by promotion, until he may be the commander-in-chief of the Army.

We had here, I believe, at the last session, a bill establishing a National Board of Health. What clause of the Constitution does that act rest on? "Why," it is said, "is not the preservation of the health of the people necessary to the existence of the nation?" Undoubtedly. So is education essential to free government; so is matrimony, to say nothing of divorce, essential to the peace and well-being of society; but who would maintain that upon this ground these subjects fall within the jurisdiction of Congress?

These constant violations of the Constitution are setting daily and hourly a bad example to the people. Any violation of the Constitution tends to familiarize the mind with the idea that the Constitution is of no consequence when it stands in the way of our present wishes and purposes.

There are certain truisms that should always be borne in mind when we discuss any constitutional question. They are so true, so universally acknowledged to be true, that it sounds like a waste of time to repeat them; and yet a moment's reflection will satisfy any one that no important measure can pass Congress, no important decision can be rendered in the courts that does not call into exercise fundamental principles of our Government, principles which, as the poet says of the words of common courtesy, "by daily use have almost lost their sense." The corner-stone of the Constitution, the essential element of our system of government, is the distribution of powers among three great branches of the Government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. "Oh!" says some impatient hearer, "of course; who does not know that?" Of course we all know it; and yet this bill aims, in disregard of the distinction, to exercise judicial power by the two Houses of Congress.

Legislative power is confided to Congress alone; executive power to the President alone; judicial power to one Supreme Court, and such inferior tribunals as Congress shall from time to time ordain and establish. That is the general rule. Of course there are exceptions provided for in the Constitution. The executive power of appointment is participated in by the Senate; the Senate also has judicial power in the matter of impeachments; and there are other departures from this principle provided for in the Constitution itself. But where that instrument is silent, the great leading idea is, that the powers of government shall be exercised by the several departments to which they are respectively assigned. Now, it is sufficiently correct for the purposes of this discussion to say, that legislative power is the power to declare what the law shall be in the future. Congress cannot say what the law was two years ago, and all attempts of Congress to accomplish this by passing an act to-day saying that an act of Congress passed two years ago was intended to mean and enact so and so, is utterly void as to the past. It may stand as a new enactment, and have the force of a new law from the date of the construing act; but it has no force as to the past.

What is judicial power? It is the power of determining what the law is to-day and what it was at any time past, and especially of determining what persons, if any, have become amenable to punishment for violation of its provisions. That is judicial power; and no matter where you put it, whether Congress proposes to exercise it, or the President proposes to exercise it, or any one else, it is judicial power, not legislative power. It is not saying what shall be in the future, it is saying what has been in the past, or what is now, the law.

Now I come to executive power. That is the power to execute the laws and to execute the sentences and judgments of the courts. Whoever proposes to confound these powers, whoever proposes that Congress shall in any way exercise judicial power, proposes to violate the Constitution. Whoever proposes any other encroachment upon any other department of the Government, or proposes that the President shall perform any act legislative in character, proposes to violate the Constitution. A great lawyer, and judge, once a Senator from Vermont, said, as I have heard, in this Chamber, that he was in doubt whether it was still in order to refer to the Constitution of the United States. That was many years ago. I think his doubt would be greatly increased if he stood here to-day.

Now let me turn for a moment to this bill, and see whether it be subject to the criticism I have passed upon it in general.

The original bill proposed that the President of the United States be authorized to set aside the judgment of a court rendered seventeen years ago and restore Fitz-John Porter to a place in the Army, which he lost by that judgment. Can any lawyer say that would be an exercise of legislative power? He is not to be renominated and confirmed; he is to be restored to his place in the Army by the President's annulment of the sentence of the court. That is to carry with it, by logical sequence, all the pay that he would have been entitled to if he had not been removed from the Army.

The Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH,] having ascertained that this was a thing not to be attempted by Congress, he has presented an amendment which, he informs us, he will at the proper time move as a substitute for the bill. The preamble, I believe, in his amendment is the same as the preamble in the original bill, but the provision is:

That the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Fitz-John Porter a colonel of infantry in the Army of the United States, his commission to bear date January —, 1863, with the pay and emoluments of that rank from that date until he shall be retired according to law, or as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That, at any time after the granting of such commission, it shall be lawful for the President to place said Fitz-John Porter upon the retired list of the Army, with the pay of a retired colonel of infantry.

In some respects this amendment is worse than the original bill. That bill assumed that Congress could set aside the finding of a court, and if it could do so the other provisions of the bill were logical consequences of the vacation of that judgment.

This amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey does not propose to pay the judgment of that court even the passing respect of annulling it. It proposes to leave it in full force declaring that Porter shall be dismissed from the Army and never hold office under the United States, to leave the sentence in full force, and yet, in absolute contempt of it, Congress is expected to provide that the President may nominate and the Senate may confirm this ineligible man.

As I have said, in many respects this is more irregular than the original bill. What is the object of such a bill as this amendment proposes? If Fitz-John Porter can be nominated by the President to this office, if he can be confirmed by the Senate, is there any occasion for passing a bill saying that the President may nominate him and the Senate may confirm him? If he is eligible to the office at all, may not the President and the Senate exercise the power the Constitution vests in them, without the aid of an act of Congress? Does the appointing power, which is in the President and Senate, need an act of Congress to bring Fitz-John Porter back into office? What is the philosophy of this amendment except that Fitz-John Porter is out of the Army and cannot be reappointed in the ordinary way, but the constitutional power of the President and the Senate must be aided by the co-operation of the House of Representatives. But can the two Houses of Congress confer upon the President and Senate a power of appointment beyond that which the Constitution confers? Do we need their consent to do a thing that we are authorized by the Constitution to do? Or is it a cowardly desire on the part of Senators to share this responsibility with the more numerous body of Congress and to bring the members of that House into contempt equally with ourselves. I can understand such a motive as that, but I cannot respect it, nor can I support a bill thus inspired.

To come to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, which is, I think, more remarkable still. It provides:

That upon the application of General Fitz-John Porter, late colonel Fifteenth Infantry, and major-general of volunteers in the service of the United States, the President is authorized to grant him a new trial by court-martial upon the charges and specifications upon which he was tried, and in part convicted, by a court-martial convened under special orders numbered 362, and dated "Headquarters of the Army, Washington, District of Columbia, November 27, 1862."

SEC. 2. That the court-martial that may be convened by virtue of this act shall consist of not less than thirteen officers of high rank in the Army; it shall consider all testimony taken in the first trial as entered upon the record thereof; all pertinent official reports, both Union and confederate, on file in the War Department; and such new testimony as may be offered either by the United States or by the said Porter; and the said court shall have power, subject to the approval of the President, to confirm, mitigate, or annul the sentence of the former court-martial.

If the Senator from Rhode Island were half as good a lawyer as he is soldier; if he were half as familiar with jurisprudence as he is with tactics and strategy, he would know that Fitz-John Porter having been a private citizen for more than seventeen years cannot be subjected to the jurisdiction of a court-martial, even with his consent. Such a court convened to-day would be convened to try a private citizen. Its proceedings would be a farce in a constitutional sense; it would be a proceeding without jurisdiction; its judgment would be not erroneous merely, not voidable, but absolutely null and void. It could not administer an oath. No man could be punished who should swear falsely before it. The whole proceeding would be a nullity.

Congress has no more right to try Fitz-John Porter to-day by a court-martial than it has to try you, sir, or me. The Constitution of the United States provides that no man shall be tried except those who are in the Army and Navy and the militia in actual service, except upon presentation by a grand jury. Fitz-John Porter is no more in the military service of the Union to-day than I am, and he has not been in that service for seventeen years.

But it may be said that it is proposed to require his consent to this trial. Consent cannot confer jurisdiction; consent cannot change the Constitution; consent cannot give power to the President to convene a court-martial to try him or to try any other civilian. It is to be borne in mind that Porter is to-day as thoroughly a civilian as if he had never seen a gun or smelled gunpowder. No court-martial can have any jurisdiction over him, nor do anything with him.

There is, however, a provision that might make Porter willing to take the chances. It is not provided that this new court may try him and shoot him if they find him guilty, as the other court might have done. They are simply authorized to confirm that judgment or mitigate it or annul it. They cannot add to it; they cannot start this case anew upon all the testimony that to-day can be furnished, and try him upon that, and pronounce sentence of death, as the other court might have done. "Heads I win, tails you lose," says Porter; "I will go into this; by this trial I cannot possibly lose anything, and I stand a chance to gain something. I will therefore consent—I, a private citizen of the United States, will consent to the exercise of military jurisdiction over me, will consent to a trial by a court-martial," which is forbidden by the Constitution to try any man who is not in the military or naval service, and which has no power to consider his case at all.

The preamble of the first bill and of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey recite that the President of the United States ordered the board of officers who recently reported on the case. Why they are called a board, I do not understand. He ordered three officers to examine this question and advise him, as the preamble recites, "what action, if any, in their opinion, justice required should be taken on said application by the President." Three officers of the Army! And it might just as well have been three private citizens, three eminent lawyers, or three eminent farmers, or three eminent doctors, or three eminent clergymen. The President requests them, not to do any official act, for they had no official powers, but he requests these three individuals to examine this matter and advise him what he ought to do. Now what could he do at that time? What can he do to-day? He can pardon Fitz-John Porter—nothing more—and these three gentlemen were requested to examine into this matter and give their opinion to the President as to the course he should take; that is to say, whether he ought to pardon him or not.

The court-martial that tried Fitz-John Porter, and drove him in disgrace from the service, was a court clothed with the majesty of the Constitution and the laws, authorized to administer justice upon this man then in the military service; composed of men of eminence in their profession, men of learning and general intelligence, authorized to call before them witnesses from all parts of the United States, authorized to send for persons and papers, authorized to administer oaths, and any man who appeared and swore falsely before them committed perjury, and would have to atone for his offense by imprisonment in the penitentiary. What power had these three individuals to pass upon the action of that court-martial? None whatever. They could not compel the attendance of a witness. They might request a man to come and state his knowledge on this subject to them, but they could not compel his attendance; they could not issue a subpoena; and should he appear, they could not administer an oath.

I am told they pretended to exercise such authority. If they did, they committed a crime. The administration of an extra-judicial oath, that is the administration of an oath without lawful authority to administer it, is a crime punishable at the common law, punishable in every State in this Union; and if they did pretend to administer oaths, they violated the law and committed a crime. Every man who appeared there and told his story, true or false, did it with impunity. No lawyer will pretend that any man could be indicted for any false testimony he gave before these three individuals. They were not a court-martial, nor a court of inquiry; they were simply three individuals in their private capacity;—for bear in mind this was not a military proceeding. A pardon is not the exercise of military power—far from it. Military power deals with offenders in a very different way. The President, acting in his civil capacity as chief civil magistrate of the land might pardon this man, and he wished to know whether he ought to pardon him or not; and so he requests three individuals to investigate the matter. His request is called an order; the practice in the Army is always to order things; we civilians have to use a milder strain and request gentlemen to aid us. These three individuals were certainly performing no military duty; they were not a court-martial; they were not a court of inquiry; they were performing no function of their office as officers of the Army; they were simply private individuals, complying with a request of the President. Had they declined to comply, could they have been tried by court-martial? No more than if they had declined a request by the President to examine the thirty-nine articles of the Episcopal Church. The President had no authority to command them in the premises.

I hope when this matter comes to be debated on the other side of the Chamber, this point will be met. If these men had any authority whatever that would not belong to three Senators of this body or three gentlemen anywhere, requested by the President to examine it, and advise him whether this man ought to be pardoned or not, I hope they will point out where they got that authority, who conferred that power upon them, and what power it was they were exercising, whether it was military or civil power. I maintain they had no power whatever. The President might ask any three men in the land to examine the Fitz-John Porter case, and advise him what they thought about it. That is what he did do. He invited Schofield, and Terry, and Getty to do this for him, and they did it, but not as Army officers. The President was not acting in a military capacity; he was trying to instruct himself for the exercise of a civil function. Undoubtedly their knowledge of military affairs would render their opinion more valuable to the President than the opinion of three farmers or of three civilians of any kind, but in a legal sense it had no different quality. It was simply the opinion of three individuals, specially intelligent as to the subject, upon which the President might the more safely act in determining his duty. It had no legal effect or force whatever.

I wish to examine somewhat the legal character of the court that tried Fitz-John Porter. I do not know that I correctly understood the position of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] upon that subject. If I did, I do not entirely concur with all his premises; I do in the result at which he arrived most fully, but I propose to rest it upon my own ground. I am not willing to admit that any courts sit within the jurisdiction of the United States from mere necessity. I am not willing to admit that any judicial power, or any legislative power, can be exercised anywhere in this land in the name of the United States that is not warranted by the Constitution.

In the first place I have already said, and return to that point, that there is no judicial power vested in Congress—none whatever, in any case whatever. The Constitution provides, for instance, with reference to the District of Columbia or as it is styled in the Constitution the ten miles square to be ceded for a seat of government, that Congress shall have the exclusive power of legislation for the District. Mark the precise language. It is not provided that Congress shall have the exclusive government of the District; it is not provided that Congress shall have exclusive jurisdiction over the District, but that it shall have the exclusive power of legislation. No careful student of the Constitution can fail to observe, day after day, and as occasion after occasion arises, the wonderful adaptation of its provisions to the subject-matter treated of, and especially the almost mathematical accuracy of its phraseology. Every word seems to have been measured and weighed and polished and set in its place like the component parts of the ancient mosaics.

This word here, although I never noticed it until I came to investigate this question, shows how its framers at that time foresaw what exigencies might arise. They had denied all judicial and executive power to Congress. This principle they did not violate in regard to the seat of government; but they did confer upon Congress the exclusive power of legislation for the District. Now suppose A and B have a controversy about a pony or about a house; Congress cannot hear and determine it; Congress cannot decide a civil suit between citizens of the District of Columbia, nor hear a criminal prosecution between the United States and one charged with murder in this District. Why? Because there is no judicial power vested in Congress, and because the only power vested in Congress in reference to this District is the power of legislation. In the exercise of legislative power Congress may pass laws establishing courts, and those courts are authorized by Congress, and under the Constitution, to administer justice in civil and criminal cases. Congress provides for the judicial administration of justice. It cannot administer justice except through the agency of judicial courts. Take a familiar case. A man is tried in the District of Columbia in its judicial courts for murder and convicted. The court sentences him to be hanged. Congress is satisfied that this man is innocent. It is satisfied that he was improperly convicted. All its members may go on their knees to the President and implore him to pardon; but if the President will not pardon what can Congress do? Can Congress issue a habeas corpus and rescue him from the gallows? Can Congress grant him a new trial? Can Congress say that he shall not be hanged, notwithstanding the sentence of the court, pronounced under the Constitution and the laws, that he shall be hanged? Every one knows that Congress can do no such thing. And yet why? Congress has the exclusive power of legislation over this District. And suppose Congress should, while the man was lying in jail, between the sentence and the scaffold, repeal all laws punishing murder in this District. Would that save him? He is then under the weight of the sentence, not of the law. As to his case the law is merged in the sentence, the law has ceased to operate upon him, and it is the sentence of a judicial court that sends him to execution. Congress cannot vacate that judgment; cannot interfere with it; and if the President will not pardon him, Congress may weep, but the man will hang.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire, if the Senator will permit—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALLACE in the chair.) Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit himself to be interrupted?

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I understood the Senator to say that he disagreed with me on one point in reference to certain courts, for the reason that he understood me to say that they were courts of necessity and not courts growing out of the provisions of the Constitution. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CARPENTER. That is what I understood.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator misapprehended what I said. I said that territorial courts and courts-martial were legislative courts, one growing out of the provision of the Constitution in reference to the territory and other property of the Government, and the other growing out of the provision of the Constitution authorizing the government of the Army and the Navy by rules and regulations prescribed by Congress. The basis of the authorization, I said, was the Constitution, but that the courts were not courts under the first section of the third article of the Constitution, but growing out of the other provisions. That was my proposition.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am very glad to know that I did misapprehend the Senator. Certainly he understands that I was not trying to make any unfriendly criticism.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wished to put myself right in reference to that, for that was my position that I maintained all through my argument.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am very glad to know that we are so far in accordance. I refer to this case in the District of Columbia, because I think it has a direct application to the case before the Senate, as I will proceed to show.

Now, let us turn for a moment to the case of the Territories. There has been a great deal of discussion as to which clause of the Constitution the power to govern a Territory should be referred. Apart from the decision in the Dred Scott case, in which most of the judges referred the power to the property clause of the Constitution in regard to territory and other property, which decision was greatly damaged by four years of war, and finally reversed by the fourteenth amendment, the only opinion I am aware of by the Supreme Court going directly to the subject, is in the case of Clinton vs. Englebrecht, in 13 Wallace, page 447, and I will ask the Secretary to read the passage I have marked.

The Secretary read as follows:

The judges of the supreme court of the Territory are appointed by the President under the act of Congress, but this does not make the courts they are authorized to hold courts of the United States. This was decided long since in The American Insurance Company vs. Canter, and in the later case of Benner vs. Porter. There is nothing in the Constitution which would prevent Congress from conferring the jurisdiction which they exercise, if the judges were elected by the people of the Territory, and commissioned by the governor. They might be clothed with the same authority to decide all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, subject to the same revision. Indeed, it can hardly be supposed that the earliest territorial courts did not decide such questions, although there was no express provision to that effect, as we have already seen, until a comparatively recent period.

There is no Supreme Court of the United States, nor is there any district court of the United States, in the sense of the Constitution, in the Territory of Utah. The judges are not appointed for the same terms, nor is the jurisdiction which they exercise part of the judicial power conferred by the Constitution on the General Government. The courts are the legislative courts of the Territory, created in virtue of the clause which authorizes Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories belonging to the United States.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Chief-Justice who delivered this opinion refers in support of it to the American Insurance Company vs. Canter, (1 Peters, 546,) and the case of Benner vs. Porter, (9 Howard, 235.) In the case in 1 Peters the opinion was delivered by Chief-Justice Marshall, and considering who delivered the opinion its language is very suggestive:

Perhaps the power of governing a Territory belonging to the United States, which has not by becoming a State acquired the means of self-government, may result necessarily from the facts that it is not within the jurisdiction of any particular State and is within the power and jurisdiction of the United States. The right to govern may be the inevitable consequence of the right to acquire territory. Whichever may be the source whence the power is derived, the possession of it is unquestioned.

It will be seen the Chief-Justice does not refer to the property clause of the Constitution as the source of this power.

The great Chief-Justice who never faltered before, nor afterward, to my knowledge, confronting the question, what clause of the Constitution gave a power he asserted the existence of, hesitated here, and said, it might result from one thing, it might from another, but whichever it resulted from or wherever it came from, there was no doubt of its existence. If it was not Chief-Justice Marshall who delivered this opinion, it would remind one of the motion that was made to quash an indictment for thirty-three reasons. The judge after hearing a long argument on the subject, decided that there was nothing in any one point, but taking them altogether he thought he would quash the indictment, and he did. [Laughter.]

In the next case, in 9 Howard, there is no allusion to the subject whatever. Judge Nelson, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

The distinction between the Federal and State jurisdictions, under the Constitution of the United States, has no foundation in these territorial governments, and consequently no such distinction exists, either in respect to the jurisdiction of their courts or the subjects submitted to their cognizance. They are legislative governments, and their courts legislative courts, Congress, in the exercise of its powers in the organization and government of the Territories, combining the powers of both the Federal and State authorities.—Benner et al. vs. Porter, 9 Howard, page 242.

But to what clause of the Constitution that power can be traced he does not suggest. Again, the Chief-Justice, in 13 Wallace, inadvertently misquotes the Constitution. He says the courts are the legislative courts of the Territory created in virtue of the clause which authorizes Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories belonging to the United States. Now the Constitution says this, in the last clause of the third section of the fourth article:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

The word "other" here has no significance whatever unless the word "territory" is construed to mean property. That word undoubtedly means there, the public domain, the public lands, or territory, in the sense in which the word was used before we had any governments called territorial governments and is a totally different thing from our present use of the word when we speak of Territories of the United States.

We mean now, by the word Territories, those communities organized under acts of Congress into social order and held for the present in that condition; but the Constitution made no reference to Territories as communities at all. The Government at that time had a vast public domain, and it had other property, and this provision is that Congress may dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. Now, compare this with another provision of the Constitution, and see again how carefully words are used in the first article:

The Congress shall have power to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

In the one case it is a power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory, meaning the public land, or other property, not for the government of the territory or other property; but when you come to a body of men and Congress is to be clothed with power over them, the provision is, Congress shall have power to make rules for the government of the Army and Navy.

It may be inquired to what clause of the Constitution this power is referable and whether I have not succeeded thus far in disproving my own premises and that territorial courts are courts existing without any provision in the Constitution and from mere necessity. I know that this subject has been so fully discussed that for an obscure individual to advance a new theory about it is like setting up against fate almost, and yet I believe that the clause of the Constitution to which the power to govern the Territories is properly traced is the power of Congress to admit new States. The Constitution was formed when the whole country away from the seaboard was a wilderness; it was territory; it was public land, and without people, citizens of the United States. Those portions of the country would be filled up by gradual emigration; Ohio for instance; so of Indiana, so of Wisconsin, and the other Territories. Emigration tending westward would produce the result of a certain number of individuals settling within certain lines of territory. If that was to be made a new State, and Congress had the power to admit it as such under the Constitution, something must be done to prepare it for that condition. Congress cannot admit Territories; it admits nothing but States, and a State cannot be organized without some legal provision from some source allowing it to be organized as a State. In order to make Wisconsin a State for instance, when a certain number of people came to reside in it, citizens of the United States upon the public lands of the United States, it was necessary to protect them there as a civil society; it was necessary to throw over them the shield of the law; it was necessary to administer justice; it was necessary to do all the things which we are daily doing in the Territories for the purpose of schooling and training and bringing that community to a condition entitling it to become a State.

Now, Congress is authorized to raise armies. The Military Academy at West Point is not much of an army, but it is a school for the Army; it takes boys, trains them to become members of the Army and nobody doubts that the power to raise armies covers the power to employ this establishment as a means to that end.

So the power to govern the Territories springs from the power to admit new States. In a great speech made by General Cass in this body after the publication of his celebrated Nicholson letter,—many of the premises of that speech I should not agree to and I certainly dissent from its conclusions,—he demonstrated, if demonstration can be predicated of any mere legal question, that the power to govern the Territories could not be referred to the property clause of the Constitution; that it existed, I believe he thought, from necessity; I do not remember as to this, for I have not read his speech for many years; but I do remember how logical and how clear and how certain he is in his demonstration of the fact, that the power could not be traced to that clause of the Constitution. But I think it inheres in the power of Congress to admit new States, and stands as firmly upon that basis as any of the incidental powers which we are daily exercising under other provisions of the Constitution.

It is to be borne in mind that the Constitution was made to indicate the subjects to be committed to this Government. The single provision, "the Congress shall have power" * * * "to establish post-offices and post-roads," is the only authority for our immense postal establishment; but it indicates that the subject was taken from the States and given to the Union, and so Congress proceeds under that provision of the Constitution, builds up a civil and criminal code upon it, assumes the monopoly of transmitting the mails, punishes as a crime any man carrying, I believe, more than a mile, any sealed package whatever containing written matter, and has done all this under that one clause of five or six words which simply indicates that the subject of post-offices and post-roads and the transmission of mails was regarded and treated as a Federal and not a State subject.

So the power to admit new States carries with it the power to prepare a community to be a State to be admitted; and that is the foundation in the Constitution for establishing territorial governments. When we have passed a law establishing a territorial government, and creating courts for the administration of justice in the community, the mere creature of the statute, the mere child of Congress in every respect and particular, and that court goes into operation and hears a cause and renders a judgment, does any man suppose that Congress, because it created the court, can interfere with or set aside one of its judgments? Can it interfere if a man is tried there and sentenced to be hanged? If the President does not pardon him, can Congress pardon him? Can Congress snatch him from the gallows? Certainly not, and why not? Because doing so is not exercising legislative power.

This bill proposes not to perform any act of legislation, not to provide how a court-martial shall be held in future for trying offenses, nor what shall be the punishment of offenses, nor does it make any regulation for the future government of the Army whatever. It has all the character of an executive order. It is a decree; it is a flat of the Government as to a past transaction.

When that court-martial had held its sessions, had concluded upon its judgment, had sent its sentence to the President and Abraham Lincoln gave his approval to it, and the court was disbanded, that record was closed, that subject was ended, and there never has since been any power to reverse it, or to open it for any purpose whatever, and there never will be, and it never can be reheard this side the bar of God. Congress cannot do it because the court which did it was created by an act of Congress, any more than it can in the case of the District of Columbia or of the Territories.

Now let me come to courts-martial. The Constitution provides that:

No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, * * * keep troops, or ships of war in time of peace.

I do not know that even consent could make it law. But:

The Congress shall have power * * *
To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water;
To raise and support armies, but no appropriation, &c.;
To provide and maintain a navy;
To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

That is the power of Congress. Now, what does it mean? Does it mean that Congress shall govern the Army? Not at all, any more than it means that Congress shall exercise judicial power in the seat of Government or in the Territories or anywhere else. Congress in no place, under no pretense, under no circumstances, can exercise any but legislative power. Legislative power is prescribing what shall be done in the future. The Army is to be governed not by Congress; it is to be governed by rules prescribed by Congress for its government. But when those rules are prescribed and when a court-martial has been provided for, the mere trial of a particular cause is as much without the reach and beyond the power of Congress as the trial of a particular cause in the courts of this District or in the Territories, and for precisely the same reasons.

Congress has made rules for the government of the Army. It has pointed out in great detail what shall be military offenses. It has provided how courts-martial shall be constituted to try them, what sentence may be pronounced, and how it is to be executed. The whole subject has been regulated by Congress. This is done in exact conformity with the state of things existing in England before our Constitution was adopted. The English army was a thing as to which our people were well informed. They had seen it, they had felt it, they had handled it, they had beaten it, they knew what it was made of, they knew how it was governed; and when it was provided that Congress should make rules for the government of our Army of course the great model of the British army was in view, just as the powers of Parliament were in view in constructing the legislative articles of the Constitution. The British government was the model to which our fathers referred under all circumstances. All the provisions of our Constitution are either taken from the great Charter and the Bill of Rights of England or suggested by a defect of those instruments, and every provision, except it be local as to public lands, &c., may be traced to something in the history of England. All the amendments, from the first to the eleventh, inclusive, are merely the Bill of Rights or suggested by the inconveniences that had sprung up in England owing to the imperfection of the great charters of English liberty or to the crimes that were committed in the name of government before they were adopted.

So the Constitution as much provides as though it said it in words, "Congress shall, in providing for the government of the Army, have power to authorize courts-martial." It does not say in regard to the District of Columbia, that you shall have the power to organize a court. You have simply the power of legislation; but we know that in the nature of things courts may be created by legislation, and always have been. The Supreme Court of the United States is the only judicial tribunal in the United States named in the Constitution. Every other is a statutory court. The circuit courts, the district courts, the courts in the Territories and the District of Columbia, are all statutory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Supreme Court is in respect of its numbers, also.

Mr. CARPENTER. In respect of its numbers and of its organization. It is provided that there shall be one Supreme Court. How many judges it shall have; what shall be its rules of proceeding, and all that are left to the discretion of Congress, and are covered by the last clause of the legislative article, which provides that Congress shall have power to make all needful and proper laws to carry the provisions of the Constitution into effect.

Therefore, this court-martial which sat for the trial of Porter was as much a court of the Constitution as this Supreme Court that sits in the middle of the Capitol here, as much as the circuit courts that administer judgment in civil and criminal causes in all the circuit courts of the United States. It represented the majesty of the Union. It spoke words of authority. It dealt with a class of persons committed by the Constitution itself to such jurisdiction, taken out of the category of civil citizens, taken away from the protection of indictment by grand, and trial by petit jury, from the fact that they were in the naval or military service of the United States at the time. This court was acting upon a person so circumstanced, acting upon a person in the military service, amenable to military law, amenable to the jurisdiction of that court, and they represented the majesty of the United States when they heard that case; and when after deliberation they pronounced Fitz-John Porter guilty and fixed upon him the sentence they did that was judicial power too, as much judicial power, that is as judicial in its nature, as the power exercised by the Supreme Court—a judicial power under the Constitution, because the Constitution authorized the creation of courts-martial when it authorized Congress to legislate for the government of the Army.

That was a tribunal entitled to respect, saying imperatively to Fitz-John Porter, "come to us and be tried." What could these three individuals who pretend to have reviewed this finding, do? They could not call Fitz-John Porter to their seat. They could not call a witness. They could not administer an oath to a witness after he was called and had appeared. They could do nothing in any official capacity whatever. They were mere private citizens, with no more power than any other three private citizens who might meet either voluntarily or at my request, or at the request of the President, or at the request of Fitz-John Porter himself and review that case and say what they thought about it.

Why is it that the finding of this court-martial is conclusive in this case? Why is it that the finding of the Supreme Court of the United States is conclusive in any case? I do not know any statute that declares it shall be; I do not think there is. It is in the nature of things. It is a general principle in all jurisprudence that where any court, civil or criminal, a military or a naval court, has jurisdiction over a particular subject and a particular man, and its jurisdiction is exclusive, its judgments are conclusive. When the Supreme Court of the United States decides a case, there is no appeal; that decision is a finality. Douglas once said of the judicial system in Illinois—I am reminded of it by seeing one of the most conspicuous judges of that State in my eye—that they had the best system in that State the world ever saw with one exception, that there ought to be an appeal from the supreme court to a justice of the peace. But as no appeal is allowed from the Supreme Court of the United States it follows that their judgments are conclusive. So of this court-martial. No appeal being provided from their findings, they having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person to be tried, and there being no appellate jurisdiction, it results necessarily that their judgment is final.

I have already referred to it, but at the suggestion of my friend from New York [Mr. CONKLING] I will read the fifth article of amendment, showing how completely courts-martial are recognized without being named in the Constitution. Article 5 of the amendments is as follows:

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger, &c.

The other provision is that Congress shall have power—

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

Now take the two together. The authority of the court-martial, that is the power to create one and its power to proceed after it is created, is as clearly recognized by the Constitution as though it had spread out in precise words what rules and regulations might be provided by Congress, and that courts-martial should try military offenses.

How was the British army governed for I do not know how many years before our Revolution? By courts-martial. Offenders were tried and punished, were shot and whipped, by sentence of courts-martial. That was in the eye of the framers of the Constitution. The history of England in that respect was familiar to them; and when they provided affirmatively, that Congress should have power to make rules for the government of the Army and fixed no limitation upon that power, and when they said, referring to civil citizens, in the amendment, that no man shall be tried except on presentment of a grand jury except in a case arising in the land or naval service, the two provisions taken together as clearly recognize and as clearly authorize the establishment of courts-martial as the Constitution authorizes the establishment of any of the circuit courts of the Union. They are courts of special jurisdiction; but acting within their jurisdiction their judgment is as conclusive as the judgment of any other court.

Go to England; look at her ecclesiastical courts. In a case committed to them and over which they have exclusive jurisdiction their decision is as binding as the decision of the Lord Chancellor on the king's bench, and for that universal reason which pervades all jurisprudence and all courts, that where there is no appeal provided from a tribunal authorized to hear a cause its finding must be conclusive; and so the courts of England hold the decisions of the ecclesiastical courts.

The Senator from Illinois read upon this subject from the case of ex parte Reed, recently decided by the Supreme Court, and not yet reported. It is so important, it is so clear on this subject, that I beg to read it again. Speaking of a court-martial the court say:

The court had jurisdiction over the person and the case.

I have never heard it disputed by any man or from any source that the court-martial that tried Porter had jurisdiction of the case and the person. He certainly appeared there, and made his defense. That gave them jurisdiction over him. The law gave them jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Now the court say:

The court had jurisdiction over the person and the case. It is the organism provided by law and clothed with the duty of administering justice in this class of cases. Having had such jurisdiction, its proceedings cannot be collaterally impeached for any mere error or irregularity, if there were such, committed within the sphere of its authority. Its judgments, when approved as required, rest on the same basis, and are surrounded by the same considerations which give conclusiveness to the judgments of other legal tribunals, including as well the lowest as the highest, under like circumstances. The exercise of discretion within authorized limits cannot be assigned for error and made the subject of review by an appellate court.

We do not overlook the point that there must be jurisdiction to give the judgment rendered, as well as to hear and determine the cause. If a magistrate, having authority to fine for assault and battery, should sentence the offender to be imprisoned in the penitentiary or to suffer the punishment prescribed for homicide, his judgment would be as much a nullity as if the preliminary jurisdiction to hear and determine had not existed.

This court-martial was convened according to law. It was composed of proper and of eminent persons. It proceeded according to the forms of law. It heard this case, having this person at its bar as a defendant. Its proceedings passed under the review of the President of the United States, and met his approval, and Porter was dismissed from the Army seventeen years ago. From that hour to this he has been as much a private citizen as you, sir, or myself, and the decision of that court, upon the general principles which I have mentioned, and upon the authority of this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, is as conclusive and as far beyond the reach of Congress as any judicial judgment ever pronounced in the United States by any court, civil or military. The only relief that can be afforded to Porter is by an exercise of the pardoning power. The President can grant him a pardon to-day, if he sees fit. Such pardon would wipe away the ineligibility clause of the sentence; after which the President could nominate and by and with the advice of the Senate appoint him to any vacant office under the Government, civil or military.

I am told, I do not know what the fact is, that General Porter has never applied for a pardon. I submit to you, Mr. President, and to the Senators, that under the circumstances of this case General Porter is not at liberty to set his frown upon the only power in the Constitution that can relieve him and invoke us to exercise a power the Constitution denies to us. He has been sentenced; he has been dismissed; he is a private citizen; he may like it or dislike it; he may think it right or wrong, but after that judgment was pronounced and approved, and the record sealed up forever, the only power in this Government, to relieve him, is the pardoning power of the President. Is it any humiliation in him to apply to that legitimate power, which may still reach his case, which is ample, which is copious, which flows like streams from rising springs? That may meet his case and violate no provision of the Constitution. We cannot touch his case for one purpose or another without violating the Constitution, violating our oaths to support it.

Mr. President, there are certain provisions of the Constitution still observed. Every Senator who comes into this place has to appear at the desk and swear to support the Constitution of the United States. What does that mean? It does not mean that he is to shoulder a musket and go and fight for the Union. He comes here as a Senator; he swears that in his capacity as a Senator he will support the Constitution. When a bill is presented here and I am asked to vote for it and I believe it to be unconstitutional and vote for it, do I support the Constitution? Do I obey that oath? In the great controversies which took place in the Senate some fifty years ago, upon nullification and kindred subjects, Mr. Webster was supporting the Constitution as much as General Sherman was when he was marching to the sea. Each was performing the task assigned him by the Constitution in the way appropriate to his place.

Webster by his invincible arguments establishing the nationality of our Government, its supremacy within the sphere fixed by the Constitution, disproving the power of the States to nullify the constitutional acts of Congress, vindicating the power of the Supreme Court to declare what acts of Congress were constitutional, was as much supporting the Constitution as any general or any soldier who shed his blood for it on the field of battle. And the converse is a painful fact. If we sit here and vote for a bill we believe to be unconstitutional we not only violate the Constitution but we violate our oath to support the Constitution. To support means to hold up, to vindicate, to give aid to, not to trample under foot because some friend or some political favorite, or some great man in the land wants us to do something which we have no authority to do.

As I have said, the only power that can reach General Porter's case is the power of pardon. Everybody concedes that Congress cannot exercise the power to pardon.

The Senator from Illinois read a case here yesterday, I think from Alabama, where the Legislature, wishing to relieve a man from a judgment passed against him for violating the law in a criminal case, appropriated him so much money as would pay the fine. The courts held that relieving him from that was the exercise of the pardoning power, and although the Legislature might appropriate money almost as it pleased yet if a particular bill showed on its face that it was intended to be a pardon, that it was intended to relieve the man from the consequences of that judgment, then it was substantially an exercise of the pardoning power, and was unconstitutional and void.

What are we called upon by this bill to do? If General Porter had never been court-martialed no appeal would have been made to us; if he had not been convicted, no appeal would have been made to us. He was tried, he was convicted, he was sentenced, he was driven from the Army in disgrace. He appeals to us by this bill to do what? To restore him to his place, to put him where he would be in the language of the original bill if there had never been a court-martial. Now, I appeal to all the lawyers of this body to know if that be not an exercise of the pardoning power. What more could the President do? The President could say, "I pardon Fitz-John Porter for the offense for which he was convicted by this court on such a day." Is not that precisely what you are asked to do in a different phraseology? Are you not called upon here in passing this bill to relieve him from the consequences of that judgment? Are you not called upon to change the phrase without changing the statement to pardon Fitz-John Porter? Does any man claim that pardon can be granted by Congress?

One word now upon another subject, and that is the punishment inflicted by this court. In examining this question I have fallen upon an opinion delivered by Mr. Evarts dated November 24, 1868, in a case where a man had been tried by court-martial under a statute which authorized the court to punish him by fine, imprisonment, or otherwise, in its discretion. It is in the twelfth volume of Opinions of Attorneys-General, page 528. Delivering his opinion in that case Mr. Evarts held that under a statute authorizing "fine, imprisonment, or such other punishment as the court-martial shall adjudge," the punishment of disqualification from making contracts with the Navy was not allowable. The man had been a contractor and had been guilty of fraud in his contracts and the acts of Congress provided that any man who made a contract should be regarded as pro tanto in the military service of the Government and should be amenable to the military law, and if a court-martial should convict him of this offense he might be punished by fine or imprisonment or other punishment in the discretion of the court. Mr. Evarts held that the other punishment in the discretion of the court would not include disability which was not named in the statute.

There are some general expressions in the opinion which would seem to apply to all cases; but it is as true of an opinion of an attorney-general as it is of an opinion of a court that to be dealt with fairly it must be construed in reference to the case in which it was pronounced; and I would say that in a case where the statute authorized only fine and imprisonment or such other punishment as the court might adjudge, the words "such other punishment" meant such other lesser punishment as the court may inflict; it certainly would not authorize a man to be shot. But in this case the article of war under which Fitz-John Porter was tried is the ninth article and it provides that:

Any officer or soldier who * * * shall disobey any lawful command of his superior officer, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as shall, according to the nature of his offense, be inflicted upon him by the sentence of a court-martial.

It is a maxim of the law that what may not be done by a court or by a legislature directly cannot be done indirectly; but I have never heard the converse of this maxim asserted. I have never heard it said that what a court or power could do indirectly, it could not do directly. If that court thought it essential to exclude Fitz-John Porter from all offices of honor, profit, and trust, they had it in their power to effect that purpose. The act passed by Congress authorized that court on convicting the defendant to sentence him to be hanged or shot. That would have disqualified him from holding any office of trust, honor, or profit under the United States, with a vengeance. Now can it be maintained that where a court may take a man's life as a punishment, they cannot exclude him from office and save his life? In other words, does not the greater include the less in this as in all other instances? It is perfectly clear that the court under that article of war had jurisdiction to sentence him to death. That there is no doubt about; and having that, they had a right to inflict any lesser punishment.

Then the only restriction upon them was the clause of the Constitution that cruel and unusual punishments should not be inflicted. This certainly was not a cruel or unusual punishment. Disqualification to hold office, as a penalty for crime following conviction, exists by the laws of almost all the States, and our Revised Statutes are full of provisions which prescribe that when a man is convicted of certain offenses, a part of his sentence shall be that he is disqualified to hold any office of honor, or trust, or profit.

Now, Mr. President, I shall leave this case. I had intended to review the testimony on the question, Was Porter guilty? There are two reasons why I do not. In the first place I think it wholly unnecessary, because if we have no constitutional power to pardon, or what is the same thing relieve him from any part of that judgment, it is immaterial whether he was guilty or was not guilty. In the next place, that part of the task has been performed by the Senator from Illinois so much better than I could do it, that I will not take the risk of weakening the impression he made by going over the same ground.

Mr. President, I have no feeling against Fitz-John Porter of any kind. I was with him a year at the Academy at West Point. I had always esteemed him until this affair occurred. In all his former history in the Army, no man ever questioned his courage, no man ever questioned his devotion to the flag. He stood high; he performed his duty well, and was entitled to praise and credit, and had it too from all sources; he was brevetted for gallant conduct, but as the Senator from Illinois well said yesterday, those things become aggravations of his offense under the circumstances of this case.

The testimony here, which I have examined pretty fully, convinces me, not that Porter was disloyal to the Union, not that Porter meant that the South should succeed in breaking up the Government, but he was devoted to McClellan; McClellan was the idol of his heart and the star of his hope. He wanted to see McClellan succeed first. He wanted to see our cause prosper, but he wanted McClellan to lead us to victory. He was the man to whom he was attached, the man on whom all the affections of his heart seemed to be centered; and it was bitter as death to him when McClellan was supplanted in command and succeeded by a man for whom he seems to have had great contempt. That was the fault and caused the fall of Fitz-John Porter, who, like Lucifer, fell, never to rise again.

Why, look at the offense of which he has been convicted—and I think the testimony sustains the finding of the court. There a battle was raging, upon which the fate of this nation might be depending. Orders were issued to him again and again, which he disregarded; which he flatly disobeyed, and when finally, in obedience to the positive order to come and report on the battle-field to Pope in person, he did come up; he came up, as it is said, without one of his brigades, and so tardily as to show that he had no wish for Pope's success, and no desire to obey the order. Why, Mr. President, life depended on his obedience—the life of an army, perhaps the life of a nation. If General Porter should go down the Avenue to-day and kill a man he would be indicted, tried, sentenced, and hanged—life for life. Upon this admeasurement of justice what shall be done with a man who by his criminal conduct sacrificed the lives of twenty thousand soldiers? The battles rendered necessary in consequence of his neglect of duty, but for which we would have had a victory on the first day, as the Senator from Illinois stated yesterday, resulted in the loss of about twenty thousand men. Upon this principle of admeasurement, if Fitz-John Porter had twenty thousand lives, they were all forfeited to the State.

The people of my own State I know felt it keenly. The loss fell heavily upon us. What was called the "Iron Brigade" in the Army of the Potomac was made up of three Wisconsin regiments and one from Indiana, I think the Nineteenth Indiana, as brave a body of men as ever trod a battle-field; a body of men who, for heroism, for endurance in the privations of war, and for soldierly bearing and conduct everywhere, would not suffer by comparison with the Old Guard of Napoleon. In one of the battles of that campaign, this brigade lost in killed and wounded, one-third of its numbers. This was before Porter's disobedience of orders, but as the campaign was turned from a success to a defeat by Porter's disobedience, all their lives were sacrificed in vain, which otherwise would have been a part of the price paid for the success of the campaign. Every train of cars that penetrated the interior States for months afterward came freighted with the sacred remains of our slaughtered soldiers. These were piled up at railway stations like merchandise. They sleep now in the graves that dot every high hill and every green valley in Wisconsin. Our people will not soon forget Fitz-John Porter. They will never forgive him. They would not soon forget me and never forgive me if I should stand here as their representative and vote to put Porter back where he would have been if he had not committed this unspeakable crime, and pay him all that he would have had if he had remained in the service and served his country faithfully.

Queer things are being done these days. This thing may be done by the Senate. It will not be done by my vote. Were I to vote for this bill I should fancy that the tears of widows and orphans were moistening the dust at my feet; I should imagine that the disembodied spirits, the frowning shades of twenty thousand soldiers, slaughtered in vain, were mustering in this Chamber to scourge me from my seat. Nevertheless, Mr. President, God's will be done. It may be that even this last travesty upon justice is necessary. They tell us that whom the gods mean to destroy they first make mad. It may be, although it seems impossible, that the democrats are not mad enough yet to insure their total destruction. This last act may be needed to convince the American people that, to insure a proper discrimination between virtue and vice, to fix the proper ban on disloyalty and hold rebellion in check, we need in the White House once more the steady hand, the cool head, and the patriotic heart of U. S. Grant. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Delaware does not wish to proceed now, I suppose. If the Senator will yield, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GARLAND. I think there is some executive business we might transact, and I suggest that we have an executive session.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the post-route bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at three o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, March 8, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, in reply to a resolution of the Senate relative to an additional water supply on Capitol Hill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, in reply to a resolution of the Senate relative to the waste of water in the District; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PEABODY EDUCATION FUND.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the following memorial; which was read:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The trustees of the Peabody education fund respectfully represent: That, in administering the great trust committed to them by the late George Peabody, their attention has been turned to the vital necessity of national aid for the education of the colored population of the Southern States, and especially of the great masses of colored children who are growing up to be voters under the Constitution of the United States.

That the subject of invoking such aid was referred for consideration, in October last, to a special committee of their board, consisting of Alexander H. H. Stuart, of Virginia, Morrison R. Waite, of Ohio, and William M. Everts, of New York; and that the report of this committee, after careful deliberation, has now received the unanimous assent of the trustees, and of their general agent, Dr. Sears.

The trustees ask leave to submit this report to the consideration of Congress, with an expression of their earnest hope that it may receive an early and favorable attention, and that seasonable provision may be made for meeting an exigency which concerns the best interests of the whole Union.

ROBERT C. WINTHROP, Chairman.
GEORGE PEABODY RUSSELL, Secretary.

WASHINGTON, February 20, 1880.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication, with the accompanying report, will be printed and laid upon the table, the subject-matter having been reported on to the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ROLLINS presented the petition of John L. Spring and others, citizens of Lebanon, New Hampshire, praying for the removal of the United States circuit and district courts from Exeter to Concord, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of Henry M. Baker and others, of the District of Columbia, in favor of the selection of square 686, in the city of Washington, for the site of the proposed national Library building; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented the petition of T. C. Basshor & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland, praying for an appropriation to pay them for certain ship-knees furnished by order of the head of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I present a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, in regard to meandered lakes in that State. I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The joint resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

Joint resolution in regard to meandered lakes in the State of Iowa.

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to use their best endeavors to secure the relinquishment by the United States to the State of Iowa of the title to all meandered lakes within the limits of the State; the State to take care that such lakes be preserved and in no event to part with the title thereto.

LORE ALFORD,
Speaker of the House.
FRANK T. CAMPBELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 27, 1880.

JOHN H. GEAR.

STATE OF IOWA.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original joint resolution. Witness my hand and the great seal of the State this 4th day of March, A. D. 1880.

[SEAL.]

J. A. T. HULL,
Secretary of State of Iowa.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the petition of 21 soldiers, now located at or near Osage Mission, Kansas, praying for the passage of what is called the Weaver bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the board of supervisors of Lee County, Illinois, praying Congress to include Lake Horicon and Rock River in a system of public works which has for its object to provide sufficient water for the Upper Mississippi during the season of low water; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of 30 citizens of Illiopolis, Illinois, remonstrating against any further legislation in the form of postal laws, or otherwise, which shall have the effect to abridge the freedom of the press and of speech and the inviolability of the mails; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, regarding the heroic conduct of the officers and men of life-saving station or district No. 4, urging a more suitable compensation for their services, &c. I wish to have the resolution read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be reported.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas during the late terrible gale and storm on the New Jersey coast, on the night of 2d and morning of the 3d of February, 1880, several vessels were driven on shore, with their passengers and crews, between Sandy Hook and Cape May, on said coast, and were wrecked; and

Whereas during the said gale and storm the captains and crews of the life-saving stations in district No. 4, State of New Jersey, by their courage and discretion, at the great peril of their own lives, rescued and delivered from imminent death almost the entire number of persons so imperiled: Therefore,

1. Be it resolved by the senate (the house of assembly concurring) of the State of New Jersey, That the Legislature of this State hereby expresses its sincere gratitude for, and earnest admiration of, the heroic conduct evinced during the said gale and storm by the captains and crews of the life-saving stations in the district No. 4.

2. And be it resolved, That the life-saving service, under its efficient management, has been so successful in its humane endeavors to rescue shipwrecked passengers and sailors, that we respectfully recommend the Congress of the United States to not only increase the facilities of the service, but also to provide an adequate compensation, if the same is not now sufficient, for the services of the men whose heroism in this humane work excites and commands the admiration of the world.

3. And be it resolved, That his excellency, the governor of the State of New Jersey, be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the Senators and Representatives of this State in Congress, now in session.

Mr. JONAS presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, in favor of an appropriation for the purpose of dredging and removing obstructions to navigation from the mouth of the Calcasieu River, where it empties into the Gulf of Mexico, in the parish of Cameron, to Phillips's Bluff, on the Calcasieu River, in Calcasieu Parish, Louisiana, and the mouth of the Mermentau River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of merchants, manufacturers, and consumers, of Massachusetts, Ohio, Georgia, New Jersey, New York, and Rhode Island, interested in and using chrome iron ore and bichromate of potash, praying for the removal of the prohibitory duties now levied upon these articles; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of the Woman's Temperance Union of Washington, District of Columbia, praying that in order to promote peace and good order and protect the right of property in this District the attention of Congress be called to the propriety of abolishing or limiting the use of intoxicating liquors rather than increasing the police force. I move its reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I present the petition of Edmund Gurnsey, a citizen of Kansas, praying for relief in regard to his homestead entry at Concordia, Kansas. I move its reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of C. T. Ewing, editor of the Thayer Head-Light, praying for the reduction of the duty on printing-paper, and for the placing of certain chemicals and other materials on the free list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented additional papers in regard to the claim of the heirs of John Clark, formerly register of the land office at Iowa City, Iowa, praying additional compensation for extra labor performed and expenses incurred in the execution of the duties of that office; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented additional papers in regard to the claim of John M. Stockdale, ex-register of the United States land office at Fort Dodge, Iowa, praying additional compensation for extra labor performed and expenses incurred in the execution of the duties of that office; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Benjamin F. Ray, Comstock Brothers, and other druggists of the city of Utica, New York, praying for the repeal of the law taxing medicinal preparations, perfumery, and cosmetics; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Morris A. Myers & Co., and others, shoe manufacturers of the State of New York, remonstrating against the extension of the McKay Sewing-Machine Association patents; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HAMPTON presented the petition of J. W. Stribling, A. S. Todd, and 29 others, citizens of the county of Oconee and adjoining counties, South Carolina, touching the erection of a public building in the city of Greenville, South Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1394) to increase the police force of the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) directing the Attorney-General of the United States to take steps for the condemnation of certain lands, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration the memorial of John D. Defrees, Public Printer, praying for the passage of an act directing the proper accounting officer of the Treasury to credit him with $9,813, the amount of money belonging to the United States and stolen from him, together with the bill (S. No. 1090) to relieve John D. Defrees, Public Printer, and accompanying papers; and they beg leave to report that the memorial and bill should have been referred to the Committee on Finance, as where the accounts of a public officer with the Treasury are not closed that is the proper committee. There is no legal question involved in the case as a reason why the Judiciary Committee should consider it. They therefore request that they be discharged, and that the memorial, bill, and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration a resolution instructing them to inquire whether any, and if so what, legislation is necessary to enable the real-estate owners in the District of Columbia to obtain decrees to quiet titles, &c., and have instructed me to report that they know of no further legislation that is necessary. They therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration a bill (S. No. 961) for the relief of Henry Head, of Quincy, Illinois. It is simply a claim for payment upon a contract by him with the Government, involving no particular question of law. The Committee on the Judiciary have nothing to do with the case, and they have therefore instructed me to report the bill back and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change of reference will be made.
Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a letter of the Secretary of War in relation to binding for the libraries of the bureaus of the War Department, and similar letters from the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy in relation to their Departments, have instructed me to report a bill.

The bill (S. No. 1435) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879," approved June 20, 1878, was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1079) regulating the times and places for holding the district courts of the United States for the district of Maine, reported it with amendments.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1408) to further amend the act entitled "An act to reorganize the courts of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, and to repeal section 861 of chapter 24 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia and re-enact the same as amended, reported it with amendments.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CALL. On Saturday I asked the reference of the bill (S. No. 1434) for the relief of the estate of William D. Moseley, which I presented by request, to the Committee on Claims. I ask that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that the reference be changed to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the request is granted.

TOLLEY AND EATON.

Mr. HARRIS. A bill (S. No. 170) for the relief of Tolley and Eaton was introduced by myself and referred to the Committee on Claims, from which it was favorably reported by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. PRYOR.] The matter having been adjusted by the Department, I now move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1436) to restore to the pension-roll the name of John E. Babbitt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1437) for the relief of the mission of Saint James, in Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. BECK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1438) for the relief of Harry L. Todd, of Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOOTH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1439) to confirm the Stratton survey of the pueblo of San Francisco; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CONKLING (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1440) for the relief of M. D. Titworth, postmaster at Adams Centre, New York; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Royal W. Riddle be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COST OF THE CIVIL WAR.

Mr. KIRKWOOD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate the amount of money expended by the United States for all purposes necessarily growing out of the war of the rebellion, and specifying separately the amount paid on the principal of the public debt thereby incurred, the amount of interest paid on such debt for each year; the amount paid each year for pensions, including arrears of pension, and the amount paid to soldiers and sailors of that war, under laws passed since its close. And that such information be brought down, when convenient, to the 1st day of January, 1880.

SEIZURE OF VESSELS FOR SMUGGLING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business being through the Calendar of General Orders will now be called, commencing at the point reached on Saturday last.

The bill (S. No. 939) to amend the law relative to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for breach of the revenue laws, was announced as first in order and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that no vessel used by any person or corporation, as common carriers, in the transaction of their business as such common carriers, shall be subject to seizure or forfeiture by force of the provisions of title 34 of the Revised Statutes of the United States unless it shall appear that the owner or master of such vessel, at the time of the alleged illegal act, was a consenting party or privy thereto.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a written report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. KERNAN. I would state that the bill simply declares that a vessel used as a common carrier of persons and freight shall not be forfeited by any illegal act, unless it shall appear that the owner or master at the time of the alleged illegal act was a consenting party or privy thereto.

A very large number of petitions have been presented for the passage of such a bill, which the Committee on Finance have carefully examined. They believe it is right and fair that a vessel should not be forfeited where a passenger, or even a sailor, smuggles in goods or anything else where neither the owner nor master nor any of the officers had any knowledge of the matter at all. The goods are forfeited and the person so smuggling is liable to the penalty of the law, of course. The Committee on Finance was unanimous in recommending the bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator be kind enough to read the section to which the bill refers, if he has it before him?

Mr. KERNAN. It takes this out of a very large number of sections where either the owner or master knew or consented in any way to the illegal act. It is taken out of various sections under title 34.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let me inquire of the Senator from New York if it will not result in this, that if you exonerate the vessel from all penalties in case of a violation of the law the owners will put their vessels into the hands of those persons who will violate the law and thus escape the penalty?

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to say that wherever the master, the person controlling at the time, consents to or knows of any act of this kind, the vessel remains liable to forfeiture just as it is now. But it is stated in these petitions that oftentimes a passenger brings in goods, or some steward or sailor does it, and the vessel becomes liable to forfeiture. This, it is said, subjects the owners to great hardships, and often to exactions which, when they afterward apply to have remitted, are remitted. The bill was sent to the Treasury Department and the sections were looked into. We do not understand that there is any danger to the revenue from enacting the proposed law.

I will say one other thing. This is only making the law as to these vessels the same as it is now as to all the railroad cars which come into our country from Canada.

There was an objection first made to relieving them from certain sections, but upon examining those sections they were found to be cases where the master, the man controlling the vessel at the time as master, violated the law, and then he is not exempt at all by this bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I will say to my friend from Maine that the object of this bill is to relieve vessel property from penalties totally disproportionate to the offense charged. In the case of a valuable steamship with her cargo, worth, perhaps, a million dollars, the captain and the owners may have exerted every precaution that honesty and prudence could devise for the purpose of preventing the smallest amount of smuggling or the like, and yet under existing laws, without their fault, without their connivance, there is the forfeiture of property to an enormous amount. It is the disproportion of the penalty to the offense that weighs upon the minds of merchants along the coast until they feel that while the penalties never have been exacted against them, still the law subjects their vessels to seizure, it subjects them to vast expense. When the Department examine they refuse to prosecute, but in the mean time the law stands there, subjecting an enormous amount of property to forfeiture for the most trivial offense.

I will say to the honorable Senator from Maine that wherever the offense exists the offender is not in any degree relieved from penalty. On the contrary, the punishment as to him continues, and wherever smuggling occurs the goods themselves are forfeited and the person who smuggled them is subject to punishment. There is no amendment of the laws in that respect. Where the captain or owner is cognizant of this attempted fraud, the vessel is still liable to forfeiture; but the object of the bill is to relieve them against, as I said before, the obvious disproportion of the penalty to the offense, which would subject millions of dollars to forfeiture strictly under the law without the least fault upon the part of the real owner of the entire steamship or cargo.

This measure is therefore a reformation in the existing laws which I do not think tends at all to exonerate dishonest men from the consequences of their acts, but leaves them liable to punishment just as before, except that it does not allow the effect of their evil conduct to extend to an enormous amount of property. The matter has been very carefully examined.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator will pardon me one moment; I am not going to object to the bill. I did not understand it as both the Senators have explained it. I thought it exculpated the vessel even when the captain was implicated.

Mr. BAYARD. Oh, no.

Mr. KERNAN. No; we were very careful on that point.

Mr. HAMLIN. Still I will say that while I think if a passenger smuggles small amounts or if the crew indulge in the luxury of smuggling small amounts, the owners of the vessel ought not to be held liable; and if I am right in my recollection the amount now must be equal to $300 or the vessel is not forfeited. I think that is the law.

Mr. KERNAN. Not in all cases.

Mr. HAMLIN. But still believing the bill to be right, I interpose no objection. If it had exonerated the captain from the list, I certainly should have objected.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. Does the Treasury Department think that this will not tend to increase the danger of smuggling? They ought to have some opinion on the subject. I do not know what it is at all.

Mr. KERNAN. The Treasury Department objected at first because they thought the bill left certain things without any adequate guard against. I had all the sections they referred to examined, and they are all cases where the master does an act and thereby incurs a penalty, and the vessel is liable for that penalty. This bill leaves the law just so. The clerk examined every one of the sections, and I looked at them myself, so that we believe it is entirely safe to the Government. It enforces the rule that a man ought not to have very large amounts of property forfeited in a legitimate business where neither he nor the man controlling his vessel, the master, is in any way privy, had any knowledge of, or in any way consented to the illegal act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM MCGOVERN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 474) for the relief of William McGovern; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments: in line 4, after the word "cause," to insert "to be issued to;" in the same line, after the name "McGovern," to insert "late;" and in line 5, after the word "volunteers," to strike out "to be mustered out and honorably discharged" and to insert "an honorable discharge;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be issued to William McGovern, late of Company C, of the late First Regiment New York Volunteers, an honorable discharge from the service, to date from September 9, 1861.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EQUALIZATION OF HOMESTEADS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1085) to equalize homesteads; which was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is reported favorably from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The amendments will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. The object of the bill is simply to allow persons who, because of their poverty, or from one cause or another, have not been able hitherto to command sufficient fees to take a homestead of fully one hundred and sixty acres, to make up the deficiency if they have become able and may desire to do so. That is all there is of it. If they desire to abandon altogether the eighty acres or forty acres which they may have taken under existing law, they may do so and take up one hundred and sixty acres elsewhere; that is all. It is a very simple proposition, and I am sorry to find the Senator from Missouri disposed to antagonize it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Suppose a settler had already taken eighty acres or one hundred and twenty acres, would he be entitled to take another eighty acres or another forty acres in some other locality?

Mr. PADDOCK. That is it; but if he takes it of lands not contiguous to his original entry he must plant forest or fruit trees, or do some work upon it to show good faith.

Mr. COCKRELL. Can he go elsewhere and take it?

Mr. PADDOCK. He may go elsewhere and take it, but the cultivation of trees is a requirement in that event. And this will be a good and sufficient consideration for the right proposed to be extended to him by this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I doubt the propriety of the measure. I think it is an extension of right beyond anything that has ever been given yet, to locate eighty acres here, another eighty acres there, at different places.

Mr. PADDOCK. At the last session of Congress we passed a bill authorizing settlers within the grants of railroads to take an additional eighty acres, but that was not a measure of relief to anybody, because it was not practicable to get contiguous lands within railroad limits. Now, Mr. President, it often has happened that, when people have gone from Eastern States upon homestead lands in the distant Western States and Territories, after they have arrived and made their locations they have found themselves with hardly sufficient money to pay the fees on the entry of eighty acres; and it certainly is right, after they have used their best efforts to settle eighty acres and may have been able to earn therefrom a sufficient sum to pay the additional fee for an additional eighty acres, and to undertake the planting and cultivation of trees as the bill requires, to let them have this right. There certainly can be no wrong done by, nor is there any impropriety in, the measure. It is right, proper, and just. It is a matter that is manifestly equitable, and one of great interest in the settlement of the western country. Of course, the requirement to cultivate trees is a requirement useful not only to the West, but to all parts of the country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Missouri to object?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read again.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Missouri will see that only in the event that the settler cannot procure land contiguous, may he go elsewhere. If he cannot procure land contiguous to his original entry then he may go elsewhere, but if he does go elsewhere he must plant and cultivate forest or fruit trees for three years, in accordance with the directions of the Land Office as to proofs of an honest and faithful performance of the duty thus imposed.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska if the bill does not repeal the provision of law by which the alternate sections of railroad lands are selected, which provides that there shall be taken but eighty acres instead of one hundred and sixty? Will this bill not repeal that clause and allow the settler who has taken his eighty acres contiguous to a railroad to take eighty acres more elsewhere?

Mr. PADDOCK. Not at all. I will state for the information of the Senator from Vermont that we have already practically repealed the provision limiting entries within the limits of railroad grants. We have provided in an act that we passed at the last Congress that a person who had located within the limits of a railroad grant should have the privilege of making an additional entry of eighty acres of contiguous land. Therefore that act is virtually done away with so far as the limitation to eighty-acre locations is concerned within the limits of railroad land grants.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire time to look into this measure. I object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is objected to, and goes over.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Alabama will consent that the bill may go over without prejudice, in order that it may be brought up when he shall have had an opportunity to examine it, if that is what he desires.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senate assent?

Mr. MORGAN. Let the bill go over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill goes over without prejudice.

MORAL SCIENCE IN DISTRICT SCHOOLS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 217) to introduce moral and social science into the public schools of the District of Columbia; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHYTE. I should like to have the report read, if there is any.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. WHYTE. Then I should like an explanation from the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. There are amendments to the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the amendments read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be reported in their order.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 3, after the word "officers," it is proposed to insert "in the District of Columbia;" in line 4, before the word "exercises," to strike out "daily," and in line 5 to strike out "instruction" and insert "instructions;" so as to make the section read:

That the school officers in the District of Columbia shall introduce, as a part of the exercises of each school in their jurisdiction, instructions in the elements of social and moral science.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 2, after the word "lesson," to strike "every day" and insert "once a week;" so as to make the section read:

That it shall be the duty of the teachers to give a short oral lesson once a week upon some one of the social or moral virtues which characterize the good citizen, and to require the pupils to furnish, from time to time, thoughts or other illustrations of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 4 in the following words:

That emulation shall be cherished between the pupils in accumulating thoughts and facts in regard to the noble traits possible, and in illustrating them by their daily conduct.

Mr. WHYTE. I should like to have some explanation of the necessity of passing this bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The necessity arises, in my opinion, from the lack of that sort of teaching in the public schools which is contemplated by the bill. I have had letters from a great many teachers who conduct the most important private schools in the country, stating that this mode of instruction has been adopted with great success. It certainly can do no harm to the teachers and pupils to devote five or ten minutes a day to instruction of this kind. The committee thought that once a week would do to start with. I think once a day would be better. If children can be taught that it is much better to be cleanly than not so; much better to be honest than dishonest; much better to be truthful than untruthful, and if such virtues can be impressed upon them once a week, or once a day, for five or ten minutes, great good will result in time to both the children and teachers.

The provisions of the bill apply to the District of Columbia and no further, because we have no right to go further. I think it is an experiment we can well try, and, if found not to be useful in future, the measure can be very easily repealed.

I think none of us have ever suffered from any such teaching received in our youth, but many of us have suffered from a lack of such teaching. It can do young people no harm to have the social and moral virtues explained and impressed upon them by their teachers, and it will do the teachers no harm to train themselves in exercises of that kind; in fact, I think it will be a great benefit to both teachers and pupils.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the fourth section of the bill.

Mr. WHYTE. Why should that important section be stricken out? If there is anything in the world that ought to be encouraged it is emulation among the pupils of a school. I think that is quite as important as any other portion of the bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. So I think, but it was thought best by the committee to strike it out, but all the essential features of the bill are retained. I think the committee were a little afraid it would excite the ridicule of the people. Now, I am not afraid of ridicule. As long as I feel that I am right it is a matter of no consequence to me how much people may laugh at anything I may do. If I am satisfied that I am right and moving in the right direction, and trying to do something to benefit my friends and neighbors, people can laugh as much as they please. I am not afraid of that paragraph of the bill myself. It does not affect the duties that the bill imposes on teachers or on children, and therefore I did not strenuously object to having it struck out as long as the principle of the bill was retained.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out the fourth section.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL SHEEP AND WOOL SHOW.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1229) to authorize and direct the Commissioner of Agriculture to attend, in person or by deputy, the international sheep and wool show, to be held in the Centennial buildings, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, in September, A. D. 1880, and to make a full and complete report of the same, and for other purposes; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section directs the Commissioner of Agriculture to attend, in person or by deputy, the international sheep and wool show, to be held in the Centennial buildings, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, in September, 1880, and to make a full and complete report of the same.

The second section provides that all sheep and wool which shall be imported for the sole purpose of exhibition at this international show shall be admitted without the payment of duty or customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, but all sheep and wool which shall be sold in the United States, or withdrawn for consumption therein at any time after such importation, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed on like imports by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 316) for the relief of homestead settlers on the public lands; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is there a report with that bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be read. I wish to state that I understand there is now a commission or board examining the whole homestead land question, and probably it would be well to wait for their report before any bills of this character are passed; and especially a bill which appears to make such radical changes of the homestead law.

Mr. BOOTH. The Senator certainly has not listened to the reading of this bill or he would not say there is any radical change of the land laws in this bill. It simply proposes that the homestead settler, as to the time when his right accrues, shall occupy precisely the same ground that the pre-emption settler now occupies. It is a very simple bill and one of the most mild in regard to the land laws that has been considered during this or any other Congress, and is in strict accordance with the policy that has long prevailed of increasing the rights of the homestead settler, rendering an inducement that all the public lands shall be settled as far as possible under the homestead law in preference to any other; and it only places the homestead settler, so far as the time of the accruing of his rights is concerned, precisely on the same ground now occupied by the pre-emptor.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is there a recommendation from the Department, or has the bill been referred to the Department?

Mr. BOOTH. It was favorably reported at the last session of Congress, but not considered for want of time. Whether there be such recommendation as the Senator speaks of, or not, the bill ought to pass. It is not a question of practice.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I know very little about the homestead law, not living in that section of country, and cannot speak with definite knowledge; but I have been told that there is a board or commission now in session considering this whole question, and it may be that this bill will be in conflict with their conclusions, or it may not. I know not; but I would suggest, had it not better go over?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have no doubt in the world of the propriety of this bill, and the States interested in the subject all agree in regard to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As I stated, I am not familiar with the provisions of this bill, and I am not familiar with the general homestead law; but it struck me on hearing the bill read that it might interfere with the Department in some way, I know not what, and that there ought to be some information obtained from the Department on the subject. It ought to have been referred there to know what the effect will be on the public lands.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I differ with the Senator about that. I think the Committee on Public Lands are just as capable of forming an opinion on what legislation should go through here as the Land Department. The Land Department is not intrusted with any legislative power whatever; we are. This measure was considered by the Committee on Public Lands, who examined the propriety of passing it. We are not bound by the opinion of the Land Commissioner.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly not, and I did not mean to be so understood. But my point was that it would have been well and proper to know what effect the bill would have on the rulings of the Department. The Senator well knows that the laws relating to public lands and all others are carried out under rulings of the Departments, with which I am not familiar though he may be. That is the point to which I spoke.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a question. I see this bill assimilates homesteads to the pre-emption conditions. Can a man pre-empt land anywhere in the United States now, without taking the iron-clad oath? If so, when was that repealed?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think he can.

Mr. BECK. The law prohibited it for a long time, and I have never seen the repeal of it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Pre-emptions are perfected by persons who cannot take the iron-clad oath. That is my impression about it, though I have not looked into the law on that point.

Mr. BECK. The law prohibited it for a long time, and I never saw the repeal.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This is a measure in the interest of settlers on the public lands; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. BOOTH. If Congress ought to abdicate all right to legislate on so great a subject as the public lands until the report of a board or a commission can be made, or until every Senator can be satisfied, without personal examination of a bill, at first glance that the bill in itself is right, then the Senator from West Virginia is right. But if we are here to legislate when a subject is legitimately brought before us, and if we are capable of forming an independent opinion without first going to a Department or a board in order to have our consciences or our judgments enlightened, then this bill ought to be considered.

Mr. PLUMB. I will respond to the inquiry of the Senator from Kentucky, by calling his attention to section 2262 of the Revised Statutes, which contains the oath and the only oath required of pre-emptors. That contains nothing that might be liable to the objection that it was iron-clad, because it is the same oath originally provided for in 1841.

This bill does not change the order of proof; but the first section changes the right of precedence in regard to entries. Under the practice now, a man's right to acquire a piece of land under the homestead law attaches from the time he files a written statement or declaration in the local land office that he intends to and does thereby enter the land. He may have been on it for months, but his being on the land, actually settling and cultivating it, gives him no right whatever. The right attaches only from the date when he enters, that is when he files a certificate of entry in the local land office. Between the time of his settling on the land and going to the local land office, some other person may have stepped in and filed a similar declaration before him and thereby taken away his right. This bill simply provides that such a man's rights shall attach on the day of settlement, when he goes on the land in such a way that his occupancy is open and notorious. Then he has thirty days, as in the pre-emption law, to send to the land office his preparatory statement. For the purpose of fixing when his right accrues, the section provides that it shall attach from the time he settles. That is the effect of the first section.

It will be seen that it does not in any wise radically change the effect of the homestead law, except that it holds out an inducement to an early settlement, and makes the right attach from the date of settlement, which the homestead law really intended to do, but which, by a construction of the Interior Department, it has not heretofore done.

Under the practice as it now exists in regard to the relinquishment of homestead entries, no homestead right can be relinquished until the relinquishment has been received at Washington, and in the regular order of business has been canceled. A man may have left five or ten years before, and yet his leaving the land becomes of no effect so far as protecting any other person in acquiring a right to that land until that original relinquishment has come to Washington, or until a contest has been inaugurated in the local land office and the result of that has been received in Washington and acted on. During all this time the land lies absolutely vacant, no man can acquire any right to it.

The second and third sections provide that where a man actually abandons his homestead, the fact of abandonment may be acted on by any one who may go on the land and settle and acquire a right by reason of such settlement if after that time, and within the time named in the second section, he proceeds to the local land office and inaugurates a contest and carries it on successfully. It is required by section 3 that whenever a person desiring to relinquish does so relinquish it, and shall file that relinquishment in the local land office, it becomes effectual to discharge his right to that land, so that any other person can go on it and take it as effectually as if the relinquishment had been filed in Washington.

As has been well stated by the Senator from California, a man desires to relinquish a homestead; he relinquishes it in favor of some person who is willing to pay him for his improvements and settle and comply with the requirements of the homestead law. He files a relinquishment in the local land office. It is transmitted to the General Land Office. During all this time no one can acquire any legal right in that land whatever; and when the Land Office has passed upon it, the moment it has passed upon it—not at any moment of time when it shall be known at the local land office or anywhere else—but the moment the General Land Office has passed on it and decided that that relinquishment was valid and given it effect, then the land may be taken. Now the practice has grown up of having a person here in Washington watching the General Land Office, being instructed from the remote point where the land is to note the time when the Commissioner of the General Land Office passes on the location and telegraph to that effect, in order that some person there may get an undue advantage and cut out the man who has made arrangements with the original homesteader and who has in the mean time settled on the land, and prevent him acquiring title to it and getting it for somebody else.

The effect of the three sections of this bill is simply to give greater effect, as has been stated by the Senator from California, to the beneficent provisions of the homestead law, to make the rights more easily determinable, in every way to encourage actual bona fide settlement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The first impression that one has from this bill is that it seems to widen the means of departing from the original theory of the homestead law, which was, if I correctly understand it, to give to any citizen of the United States who was willing to take up the proper quantity of land and live on it continuously for five years or three or whatever the time was, and improve it, and so develop the resources of the country, and find a means of supporting himself and family, a title to that land. Now, the first impression that one has of this bill or rather that I have—it may be quite erroneous and I only put it out tentatively—is that it tends toward making homestead entries what military scrip and bounty-land warrant entries were, assignable and tradable things, so that one man can go and settle for a year and then move off somewhere else and take up a new homestead or do whatever he likes, and turn over—

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator permit me to state to him that the first person having made a homestead entry cannot make another one; therefore a man who once makes a homestead entry, if he abandons it, cannot make another.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that be so, of which I am not quite so sure as my friend is, it does not change the statement much. The man who has made a homestead entry for the purpose of speculation and not for a homestead throws up in favor of somebody who will pay him something, and migrates to somewhere, or comes back to Ohio or Indiana or Missouri or wherever he started from, and begins to cultivate the plenty of land there is in those States, and the next speculator comes in or jumps in, as the case may be, when he abandons; and it is proposed that the jumping in shall take effect from the moment the possession is taken, and not from the time when it is finally ascertained that the original claim had been abandoned. That is one thing which, as it strikes me in the first instance, tends to make this homestead business just like the bounty land and the military scrip, the subject of continual trade and commerce, which I did not suppose was the theory of the homestead law at all.

Then there is another thing in the first section of this bill, which at first impression strikes me as rather strange, and that is:

That any settler who has settled, or who shall hereafter settle, on any of the public lands of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed—

May do so and so, providing for the filing of applications, &c. The consequence of that would appear to be to open all the unsurveyed lands of the United States to homestead entries.

Mr. BOOTH. That is precisely the object, if the Senator will allow me, as they are now open to pre-emption settlers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are not exactly open to pre-emption settlers in the way that this bill states it, I imagine; but I am not going into that now. I certainly should not be quite willing to open the public lands of the United States, that have not been surveyed, to indefinite and general homestead settlers without regard to section lines and rectangles and all the other methods of survey.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will allow me to suggest that nobody can take it except by the section lines.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How are you going to have a section line until the land is ascertained by a survey?

Mr. TELLER. They do not complete the homestead; but when the land is surveyed they date back to the time they made their settlement, when it is surveyed in such shape that they can accommodate their claim to the sections, lines, and subdivisions. There is no trouble on that score.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should think, with great respect to my friend from Colorado, that there is a good deal of trouble.

Mr. TELLER. That shows that you do not understand it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My honorable friend says it is because I do not understand it. That is generally the case when my friend and myself differ; it is always because I do not understand it and always because he does. I am quite willing to agree to that proposition. But the subject I am discussing is not the difference of opinion between my friend and myself; it is the bill which provides for any settlement heretofore or hereafter upon the unsurveyed lands of the United States, and to have the claim relate back, as the expression is, to the date of settlement.

Then the next provision is, to which I have partly referred, that if any homestead settler has abandoned his entry, or if the entry was not made in good faith, &c., such land shall be subject to the claim under the homestead or pre-emption laws of the first settler, who has, or shall, hereafter settle on the same. Does that mean the first settler, who by the present law is entitled to make a homestead settlement, or does it mean, as it says, the first settler, be he foreigner or native, be he a citizen of the United States or a subject of some other country? That is not quite so clear to my mind as I wish it was.

Mr. BOOTH. The proviso makes it clear.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not so clear that it does:

Provided, Such settler has or shall hereafter, within six months from the time of his settlement, take the necessary steps to have said homestead entry canceled.

Everybody can take steps to have a homestead entry canceled, because that is a question between the original homestead man and the authorities of the Government having charge of that matter.

Mr. BOOTH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure.

Mr. BOOTH. Would not this make it perfectly clear?—

Such land shall be subject to the claim under the pre-emption laws of the first settler.

That is, must be subject to all the provisions of those laws. It does not abrogate any of them. It was not the design to abrogate any of them, and I do not think it does.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am bound to suppose it was not the design to do it; but when you come to the description of the person who shall have the benefit of the homestead and pre-emption laws, and say that "the first settler," without any qualification, shall have it, that is the effect. I agree that a simple amendment after the word "settler" would correct that, by saying "entitled to the benefit of such laws;" undoubtedly it is very easy to make it right in that particular.

Mr. BOOTH. But is it not right now under the clause "such lands shall be subject to the claim under the homestead or pre-emption laws?" I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I do not think he makes it more clear.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It could not be made more clear if it stopped right there and did not say "of the first settler," but the words "homestead or pre-emption laws" do not qualify the description of "the first settler." He is described by himself, as a human being I suppose, who chooses to go on that land, and it says he shall be entitled, being the first settler, to the benefit of the homestead and pre-emption laws. That is the criticism to which this is liable.

Mr. BOOTH. If that language is not clear, I think the committee will accept any amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly a very few words would make it clear on that point. I am only calling attention to it so that we may understand precisely what is meant; but the general scope of the bill is such that I do not wish—and I think I have said enough to show that—to take the responsibility of being one of those who are willing to vote for this bill just at this present moment. I do not intend to object to its consideration so as to carry it over; but I wish to say enough to show that the passage of this bill shall not hereafter, when troubles arise, be imputed to me. I believe I have said enough to do that.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont the same question I asked the Senator from Florida, because I believe he knows everything about the law. I ask whether or not these lands are open to everybody, or whether the limitations put on them by the act of 1862 still remain? The act of 1862 to secure homesteads to actual settlers provides:

That any person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States, or who shall have filed his declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and who has never borne arms against the United States Government or given aid and comfort to its enemies, shall, from and after the 1st of January, 1863, be entitled to enter one-quarter section or a less quantity of unappropriated public lands, &c.

Section 2 provides:

or is twenty-one years or more of age, or shall have performed service in the Army or Navy of the United States, and that he has never borne arms against the Government of the United States, or given aid and comfort to its enemies, &c.

It seems to me that when lands are given to all the people of all the world, black and white, Europeans, Asiatics, and Americans, it is time we were removing this disability, if it has not been removed, and I am not sure whether it has been or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Kentucky that there is no reason now why persons who were engaged in the rebellion should not be entitled to homestead like everybody else, and I thought so a long time ago, and I think as early as 1874 that change was made. If it has not been made, in my opinion it certainly ought to be. It does not stand upon the same principle as the other laws which still make a discrimination, and I should be very glad if the law is now so to change it and change it at once; but if the Senator from Kentucky will look at section 2289 of the Revised Statutes of the United States he will see that the limitation against persons who have borne arms against the United States is dropped out, and I think he will find that it was done by force of the act of the 11th of February, 1874, or the 13th of March of that year—I do not remember which; so that now by the Revised Statutes "every person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States, or who has filed his declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws, shall be entitled to" the benefits of the homestead act. No distinction is made against citizens of the United States who were engaged in the service of the so-called confederacy.

Mr. BOOTH. I desire to make just one remark in answer to the Senator from Vermont, in regard to the difficulties that will be encountered by allowing homestead settlement on unsurveyed lands. Pre-emption settlement is now allowed on unsurveyed lands, and the design of this bill is simply to put the homestead settler on precisely the same ground that the pre-emption settler occupies. The pre-emption settler is allowed three months after the survey of the public lands to make his original filing, and twelve months thereafter to perfect it; and this bill designs simply to put in that regard the homestead settler and the pre-emption settler upon the same ground.

Mr. TELLER. The settlements outrun the surveys, extending several hundred miles, ever since I have been in the western country, beyond any survey. All this section says is that a man going in and making a settlement on the public land may, when the surveys are made, so that he can describe the ground upon which he resides in accordance with existing law, date back his settlement to the time that he commenced, just exactly what the statute provides with reference to a pre-emptor; he may do that. That is all there is in this section. If anybody can see any reason why a homestead occupier of the public land should not have the same privilege as a pre-emptor, he ought to state it.

The second section provides:

That where lands have been applied for and original entry made under the homestead laws, and where such entries have not been made in good faith, or where the lands have been abandoned after original entry and before final entry, such lands shall be subject to the claim under the homestead or pre-emption laws of the first settler who has or shall hereafter settle on the same.

That is not to meet the case suggested by the Senator from Vermont except in part, but to meet a great many cases that occur in the West, where public land having once been claimed the party abandons and goes off. Now, no man can make a settlement on that and have a legal settlement under the ruling of the Department. If, as stated by the Senator from Kansas, he does go on to make a settlement, and in the mean time it is canceled here, and somebody makes application to acquire a title under the laws before he does, he loses all his improvements that he has on the land; or if he goes into a contest in the land office to have the original homestead entry set aside, while he is carrying on the contest some other man may step in and have all the advantage of his labor. This bill only says that if a man finds a vacant piece of land which is tied up by a homestead entry, whether it be abandoned or whether it be illegally set apart as a homestead in the first instance, he may enter into a contest, and if it is decided in favor of the Government he shall have the preference. I think if the Senator from Vermont will look at it a moment he will see that that is a very wise and desirable provision of the law. It does not give anybody any opportunity to appropriate any more of the public land, but does actually prevent such an appropriation or misappropriation of the public land. The whole scope of this second section is to protect the Government and give the settlers a right on the land which is unoccupied.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment; which was in line 4, section 3, after the word "without," to strike out "further;" so as to read:

Sec. 3. When a homestead or timber-culture claimant shall file a written relinquishment of his claim in the local land office, the land covered by such claim shall be held as open to settlement and entry without action on the part of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in the same manner as it would have been if no entry under the homestead or timber-culture laws had ever been made thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not at all sure, on looking hastily at the statutes, that there is a right of pre-emption on unsurveyed lands of the United States, and if there is there are a great number and variety of exceptions of unsurveyed public lands, as well as surveyed, upon which the pre-emption right does not attach, whereas the first section of this bill certainly does appear to give a complete right to make a homestead settlement and entry upon any unsurveyed land of the United States without any qualification at all, because it says so in terms in the first six lines of that section, and then merely refers to the pre-emption laws as a test of time and relation as to when the settlement begins to run. If you will look at the pre-emption laws, you will find—

SEC. 2257. All lands belonging to the United States, to which the Indian title has been or may hereafter be extinguished, shall be subject to the right of pre-emption, under the conditions, restrictions, and stipulations provided by law.

SEC. 2258. The following classes of lands, unless otherwise specially provided for by law, shall not be subject to the rights of pre-emption, to wit:

First. Lands included in any reservation by any treaty, law, or proclamation of the President, for any purpose.

Second. Lands included within the limits of any incorporated town, or selected as the site of a city or town.

Third. Lands actually settled and occupied for purposes of trade and business, and not for agriculture.

Fourth. Lands on which are situated any known salines or mines, &c.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator from Vermont will turn to section 2274, he will find an express grant of the right to settle on the public lands, which shows that no qualification exists in the terms of section 2257.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I remember section 2274 which does imply that there are certain circumstances under which there may be a pre-emption on lands that at the time they were occupied had not been surveyed; but whether those circumstances apply, as this bill makes this homestead settlement apply, to a universal case giving the right to every citizen to occupy and pre-empt lands unsurveyed, I am not advised.

Mr. PLUMB. There has been no assertion made here that anybody is entitled to pre-empt land that has not been surveyed; but the law undoubtedly gives the right to settle on the public land, and the right of pre-emption attaches when the land has been surveyed, and this only provides that where two settlers settle on a single subdivision they shall divide it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This first section is not capable of two constructions as it appears to me:

That any settler who has settled, or who shall hereafter settle, on any of the public lands of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the intention of claiming the same under the homestead laws, shall be allowed the same time to file his homestead application and perfect his original entry in the United States land office as is now allowed to settlers under the pre-emption laws to put their claims on record, and his rights shall relate back to the date of settlement, the same as if he settled under the pre-emption laws.

There first is a universal grant, without any limitation at all, of a homestead right on all unsurveyed public lands of the United States, as well as surveyed, without regard to any of the limitations that I have read which apply to pre-emptions. That is plain enough, and the only reference to the pre-emptions named in the first section of this bill is merely as a test of time and relation.

But, Mr. President, I think I have said enough to show that I shall not be responsible for the effects of this bill, if it becomes a law, and that is all I wish to do.

Mr. CALL. I offer the following amendment to the bill: In section 2, after the word "canceled," in the tenth line, I move to insert—

And the same shall be properly subject to cancellation.

The bill provides that—

Where the lands have been abandoned after original entry and before final entry, such lands shall be subject to the claim under the homestead or pre-emption laws of the first settler who has or shall hereafter settle on the same: Provided, Such settler has or shall hereafter, within six months from the time of his settlement, take the necessary steps to have said homestead entry canceled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRECEDENCE OF BUSINESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business, the morning hour having expired.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] who is entitled to the floor, to allow me an opportunity to give a notice to the Senate. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to give notice that to-morrow, or immediately after the conclusion of the speech of my friend from Delaware, the committee will ask the Senate to take up appropriation bills. There are two appropriation bills before the Senate and one other bill that the Appropriations Committee think ought to be considered early. The first is the fortification bill, which has been before us for some time; and, secondly, there is the deficiency bill for the Post-Office Department; and the third is the bill for the repeal of certain permanent and indefinite appropriations. The committee will ask, after the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Delaware, that the present order be laid aside informally, so as not to lose its place, in order that those bills may be taken up.

Mr. McDONALD. I trust that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not feel required to press that notice until I have had an opportunity of presenting some views to the Senate. It was my purpose to speak on the bill now before the Senate, but I gave way to the Senator from Wisconsin, because he had to be absent in the fore part of this week. I should like very much to be able to follow the Senator from Delaware. I shall not ask for a great deal of the time of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Though I am instructed by the committee, I will take the liberty, after consulting one or two members of the committee, to say that immediately on the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Indiana, who was entitled to the floor as I understand on Saturday, but gave way to the Senator from Wisconsin, the committee will ask to take up appropriation bills.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Laying aside the pending order informally.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if it is his purpose to press the consideration of the Geneva award bill?

Mr. THURMAN. I gave notice that I would move to take it up as soon as some other bill, I forget which it was, was disposed of.

Mr. CONKLING. The 5 per cent. bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I gave notice that I would call it up as soon as that was disposed of. I was then reminded that previous notice had been given by the Senator from New Jersey to call up the Fitz-John Porter case, and, according to the courtesy that usually prevails in the Senate, I did not make my motion until he had made his, so that the Senate might decide whether to take up that bill or not. If they had voted not to take up that bill I should have pressed the Geneva award bill, as I shall press it at the first opportunity I get after the Senate has disposed of the business before it. I shall ask to have it taken up as soon as possible. Of course I cannot antagonize appropriation bills, but as soon as I can get an opportunity, and the Senate disposes of the business pending before it, I shall press it.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator to occupy that position in reference to that bill, and I desired to call his attention to notices that had been given. I observed that the Senator's attention was attracted to something else, and I desired to call his attention to the fact that his bill would be likely to get postponed further than he was aware of, if he was not paying attention to the arrangements being made.

Mr. THURMAN. That would not make any difference. If the Geneva award bill were up, it would have to give way to appropriation bills, we all know. If the Senator from Massachusetts prefers that course, he can at any time move to postpone the pending order and take up the Geneva award bill.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire to interfere with the Senator who has the bill in charge. I desire as far as is proper to urge on his consideration the necessity of calling it up.

Mr. CONKLING. I observed that the Senator from Massachusetts employed the word "arrangements," which seems to indicate that he seems to think some arrangement has grown out of a remark which fell from the Senator from New Jersey, and which remark was that this pending bill could be laid aside informally for appropriation bills. I wish to say for one that as such an arrangement requires unanimous consent, I do not give my consent to it. When the time comes to move to postpone this and prior order to take up the appropriation bills, that motion must be under the rules of the Senate, and the object cannot be attained in any other way except by unanimous consent, and I take occasion to file this caveat now, in order that nobody may be misled by the idea that unanimous consent has gone before the moment when such consent shall be asked.

Mr. EDMUNDS. File it in favor of all the rest of us at the same time.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend from Vermont requests me to file a caveat in his behalf; but as he is so able to file his papers, I think I shall leave it to him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would save time.

Mr. BAILEY. The bill (S. No. 133) to establish an educational fund, and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education, was made the special order for to-day. Of course, it will be postponed for the unfinished business, and it is not the desire or expectation of the Committee on Education and Labor, by whose direction I am acting, to antagonize it with the business which properly has precedence, but I am instructed by that committee to say that, immediately after the completion of the unfinished business and the settlement of the Geneva award bill, that committee will ask the Senate to take this bill up, and they will press it to a vote, of course not interfering with appropriation bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say, in connection with what the Senator from Tennessee has said, that his notice illustrates the entire futility of making special orders that I tried to impress upon the Senate when this particular special order was made. It does not do any good, but rather harm, to the bill that is under the force of a special order, which takes it out of the general Calendar and you never reach it at all. I only rose to put a point upon it for that reason.

Mr. BAILEY. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Vermont. I have no doubt now of the force of his suggestion when he made the objection the other day, and recognizing the validity and propriety of that objection we now only give notice that we shall ask the Senate to take up the bill hereafter.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee, and ask that it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received informally, and ordered to be printed.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. RANDOLPH.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, on Saturday at the conclusion of the speech of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] I obtained the floor in order to submit my views upon the pending measure as to the policy, power, and I may add, the duty of the Senate to pass the substitute for the original bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, authorizing the President to nominate for confirmation Fitz-John Porter to his former rank in the United States Army, I believe as a colonel of infantry.

In common with all my associates in this body, I listened, as I often have done, with pleasure and with instruction, to the graceful eloquence and the pleasing method of presentation of his case which is so characteristic of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin; but what was my disappointment when a speech so careful, so discriminating, so acute and able, offered by a constitutional lawyer of eminence to his associates in this Chamber, addressed to us as Senators, was wound up by its disfigurement, at its close, by a very poor appeal to partisan prejudice, a shout in favor of a military candidate for the Presidency. Surely it was an unworthy ending of a brilliant address. If there can be a case from which partisan utterances should be excluded, surely this is that case. The appeal before the American people is to public justice. It is what is due, not simply to the individual immediately affected by our action, but to the name of public justice and to the reputation of our republican Government. Partisan politics, partisan feelings, have no just place in such a discussion. They should not be permitted to creep in, and they cannot be introduced without great injury to those who seek to introduce them. Why, sir, what are the facts? From whom does this testimony, with its strongly implied recommendation, come? Under whose power and administration has this review of the former sentence and proceedings of a court-martial been inaugurated? A President associated thoroughly with the republican party, whose constitutional counselors are gentlemen of distinction of that party. He sends us voluminous testimony, taken under skilled and elaborate supervision, which he believes must affect the sense of justice of the two Houses of the American Congress as it has his own, I trust for the success of this measure, both of the great political parties thus represented by the executive and legislative branches of the Government and each approaching a question of great dignity and importance which shall stand forever conspicuous as a precedent, deeply affecting the character and the reputation of the administration of justice in the United States. It has been finely said that the face of justice may be darkened with a frown, but should never be disfigured by a sneer, nor I may add distorted by a joke.

The honorable Senator from Wisconsin gave us eloquent warning against a danger which is only too apparent. He warned us against the danger of the centralization of power. He warned us against the invasion of the prerogatives of the associate branches of the Government by the legislative branch. Sir, his warning was well-timed. There is a spirit of centralization; there are centripetal forces at work that in my judgment the people of this country would be most wise to check, and it is well that the centrifugal forces should be set in motion in order that the orderly distribution of power intended by those who founded this Government should once more prevail, because they did intend that liberty should be protected by preventing the undue concentration of powers in any one hand or in any one department of the Government. I concur fully with the honorable Senator in that warning.

But, Mr. President, there are other dangers also unhappily apparent, which our forefathers anticipated and against which they warned us with all solemnity. They made, even before the formation of our present Government, their immortal protest against the British king; and among their reasons for claiming their independence of his rule was that he had "affected to render the military independent of or superior to the civil power." Sir, there have been many suggestions in this debate, many things that have occurred in the course of this debate, there is too much in the air nowadays throughout this country that does tend to aggrandize the military power to the danger of civil and constitutional liberty. We have heard here in effect proclaimed that military courts and courts-martial are in substance part of the judicial power of the United States, that they have equal dignity, that they are as wholly irreversible in their decisions as those of the judicial branch of the Government. I dissent in toto from such a proposition. I say on the contrary that military rule is obnoxious to the American people, and it is justly so to all people who would remain free. The Constitution itself contains abundant and express safeguards of liberty, and provides trial by jury, due notice and presentment, process for obtaining witnesses, compelling them to confront the accused, all such things are provided as the rule of this country; but that Constitution contains an exception as to "cases in the land or naval forces or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger."

The creation of military courts is, as I have said, a concession to the necessities of the case for the prompt and summary regulation of an organized army. The jurisdiction of tribunals created for that purpose is strictly special and exceptional, and is never to be enlarged by intendment because the rules of military government and discipline are not in accord with the principles of constitutional liberty. As Sir Matthew Hale said, "they are indulged in simply from necessity;" "necessitas enim quod cogit defendit." The clauses of the Constitution carefully securing the right of citizens to trial by jury and due process of law undoubtedly excepted cases in the naval and military service; but, as I said, it is the exception and not the rule and always should be construed strictly.

I have said it is a dangerous thing to talk of the equal dignity of these tribunals called courts-martial or military commissions with the judicial courts of the United States. The judicial power of the United States is implanted in the same instrument as independently as are the powers of the legislative branch. They are there defined. All the judicial power of the Federal Government of this country is given to that judiciary. The judges are carefully selected, official life tenure is given to them, and skill and learning are required in those who fill these seats of honor. Who can liken so grave and independent power in this Government to tribunals which are the mere creation of the breath of the legislative power? Why what creates a military court? The articles of war or the order of the President as Commander-in-Chief. Congress creates articles of war by legislation; and if Congress did not make articles of war by legislation, I presume the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army would necessarily and impliedly have power to regulate the Army. But Congress has under the Constitution the power to make these rules and regulations, and has done so; and the power that made them law can unmake it; the power that enacted can repeal. It exists therefore subject to the revision and control of the legislative power of the country.

But can Congress impair or invade the prerogatives of a separate branch of this Government? Certainly not; and therefore, when the suggestion is made that these tribunals termed military courts are upon a parity of dignity, of inviolability in examination of their decisions by the Congress of the United States, with the decisions of the judicial branch, I say the proposition is wholly untenable and cannot be accepted for one moment. The power of the judicial branch of this Government, being founded on the Constitution, cannot be regulated by act of Congress. Wherever that power is bestowed by the Constitution, it is clear and distinct, and beyond the reach or control of any other branch; and therefore it is that no act of Congress can exempt tribunals created by Congress from being examined in their proceedings from first to last, and at all times, by the judicial branch. I was surprised the other day, when the case in 20th Howard was produced, the case of Dynes vs. Hoover, that so little regard was paid by the Senators who cited it, to its true meaning and effect. Speaking for the court, Mr. Justice Wayne, after reciting the provisions of the Constitution under which military courts were created, and sentences passed by them, says:

These provisions show that Congress has the power to provide for the trial and punishment of military and naval offenses in the manner then and now practiced by civilized nations; and that the power to do so is given without any connection between it and the third article of the Constitution defining the judicial power of the United States, indeed that the two powers are entirely independent of each other.

Now, there is just one difference which I will state between the findings or judgment of a court-martial, and the judgment of a judicial court: The judicial court can at all times review the proceedings and decide whether the court-martial has broken the law that created it or not; on the contrary no court-martial can pretend to examine into or question the judgment of a civil court.

Courts-martial—

Says this same judge at page 82—

derive their jurisdiction and are regulated with us by an act of Congress, in which the crimes which may be committed, the manner of charging the accused, and of trial, and the punishments which may be inflicted, are expressed in terms; or they may get jurisdiction by a fair deduction from the definition of the crime that it comprehends, and that the Legislature meant to subject to punishment one of a minor degree of a kindred character, which has already been recognized to be such by the practice of courts-martial in the army and navy services of nations, and by those functionaries in different nations to whom has been confided a revising power over the sentences of courts-martial. And when offenses and crimes are not given in terms or by definition, the want of it may be supplied by a comprehensive enactment, such as the thirty-second article of the rules for the government of the Navy, which means that courts-martial have jurisdiction of such crimes as are not specified, but which have been recognized to be crimes and offenses by the usages in the navy of all nations, and that they shall be punished according to the laws and customs of the sea. Notwithstanding the apparent indeterminateness of such a provision, it is not liable to abuse; for what those crimes are, and how they are to be punished, is well known by practical men in the Navy and Army, and by those who have studied the law of courts-martial, and the offenses of which the different courts-martial have cognizance. With the sentences of courts-martial which have been convened regularly, and have proceeded legally, and by which punishments are directed, not forbidden by law, or which are according to the laws and customs of the sea, civil courts have nothing to do, nor are they in any way alterable by them. If it were otherwise, the civil courts would virtually administer the rules and articles of war irrespective of those to whom that duty and obligation has been confided by the laws of the United States, from whose decisions no appeal or jurisdiction of any kind has been given to the civil magistrate or civil courts. But we repeat, if a court-martial has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the charge it has been convened to try, or shall inflict a punishment forbidden by the law, though its sentence shall be approved by the officers having a revisory power of it, civil courts may, on an action by a party aggrieved by it, inquire into the want of the court's jurisdiction, and give him redress.

Certainly, sir; and will it be contended here that courts-martial may do the same thing in regard to the findings of judicial courts, or that it is correct to speak of the absolute and sacrosanct character of their findings, that they are irrevocable and that they never may be examined into? Why, sir, the breach of law by a court-martial in exercising jurisdiction against law is punishable in the judicial courts. Chief-Justice Marshall, in 3d Cranch, page 337, in the case of Wise vs. Withers, announced this doctrine very clearly. It was an attempt to imprison a justice of the peace for not paying a militia fine, and as a justice of the peace never could have been legally enrolled in the militia, the court say:

It follows, from this opinion, that a court-martial has no jurisdiction over a justice of the peace, as a militia-man; he could never be legally enrolled; and it is a principle, that a decision of such a tribunal, in a case clearly without its jurisdiction, cannot protect the officer who executes it. The court and the officer are all trespassers.

Could such a sentence as that be passed by a military court on the judgment of a civil tribunal?

Let me read another authority. In 7 Hill, New York State Reports, there was a case of Wilson vs. Mackenzie. Chief-Justice Nelson—Samuel Nelson, of New York, afterward a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States—delivered the opinion, and he refers to English authorities bearing upon this point:

* * * There are also many cases in the books where actions have been sustained against members of courts-martial, naval and military, who have exceeded their authority in the infliction of punishment. (Sec. 4, Taunt., 70, 75, and the cases there cited.) In the case of Lieutenant Frye vs. Sir Chaloner Ogle, (1 McArthur on courts-martial, 268, fourth ed.,) the defendant was president of a court-martial which had sentenced the plaintiff to fifteen years' imprisonment; when the only charge against him was that he required a warrant in writing to justify him in taking another officer into his custody under an arrest, which was considered no offense at all. The verdict was £1,000. This case became somewhat memorable for a collision between the civil and military courts, and for the firmness and triumph of the former. In the course of the trial of the cause, the learned judge having remarked that the plaintiff was at liberty to bring his action against any of the members of the court-martial, he proceeded against Rear-Admiral Mayne and Captain Rentone, who were arrested by a writ from the C. B. at the breaking up of the court-martial on Admiral Lestock, where the former presided, and the latter sat as a member. This was much resented by the members of the court-martial, who passed resolutions on the subject, reflecting in intemperate language on the chief-justice of the court, (Sir John Willes.) The resolutions were laid by the Lords of the Admiralty before the King, upon which the chief-justice, without waiting for the result, caused every member of the court-martial to be taken into custody for contempt, and was proceeding in a legal way to assert and maintain the authority of his office when a stop was put to the proceedings by a public, written submission, signed by all the members of the court-martial, and transmitted to the chief-justice, which, after being read in the C. B., was registered in the remembrancer's office—"a memorial," as the chief-justice observed, "to the present and future ages, that whoever set themselves up in opposition to the laws, or think themselves above the law, will in the end find themselves mistaken." (See 1 McArthur, 436, Appen. No. 24.)

Mr. LOGAN. Will it bother the Senator for me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. BAYARD. I would rather go on, but I will answer any question. I would prefer to go on with the line of my argument.

Mr. LOGAN. It is in the line of your argument—one question.

Mr. BAYARD. I would rather go on; but if the Senator wishes to ask a question I will yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Does not the same rule the Senator has been trying to apply to courts-martial, that where they had no jurisdiction the judgment was a nullity, apply to civil courts in all cases?

Mr. BAYARD. Oh yes, but the difference is that the judicial courts of the United States, determine their own jurisdiction, and their decision in this respect is final; but the jurisdiction of the military courts is not settled by themselves, but is reviewable by the civil courts, who can annul their proceedings whenever they are found to be without warrant of law. It is only when the decisions of military courts are within the law that judicial courts sustain them as valid and binding.

But to rank the decisions of the judicial courts and the military tribunals as of equal dignity is to disregard their relative functions and powers under the Constitution.

The former are competent finally to settle their own jurisdiction, and also that of the military courts; and the latter have no such authority, and can always be reviewed by the former and their proceedings annulled when a want of jurisdiction or a breach of law is discovered.

Opinions of Attorneys-General have been referred to. That of Mr. John Nelson in 1845 was read by the honorable Senator from Illinois, to show that we should treat courts-martial as part of the judicial power of the Government; but he seems to consider that arguments which may well be addressed to an Executive in his administration of a law are equally proper to be addressed to the law-making power of the Government when it is considering the wisdom and expediency of legislative action. It seems to me that in that statement the great vice, if I may term it so without disrespect to his argument—one of his errors consists—

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me right there. He misapprehends or unintentionally misstates my position. I did not insist in my argument anywhere that a court-martial was a part of the judiciary of this country under article 3, section 1, of the Constitution.

Mr. BAYARD. Unfortunately, and it is a matter of regret to me, the speech of the honorable Senator has not yet appeared in the RECORD.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state my position exactly as I maintained it, so that the Senator can have the opportunity of arguing on the point. It is this: not that a court-martial is a part of the judiciary system of this country under section 1, article 3 of the Constitution, but that, like territorial courts growing out of that provision of the Constitution known as the property provision in reference to Territories, the courts-martial grow out of that provision of the Constitution which provides that Congress shall make rules and regulations for the government of the Army and the Navy; that they then become courts by reason of legislative action; that both these classes of courts are legislative courts; that their judgments, where no appeal is allowed, are a finality the same as the decision of the Supreme Court. That was my position, maintained during my argument, and I state it so that the Senator may have the opportunity of answering it.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing that the Senator may make a speech inside of mine, or make a statement, but—

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; I shall not interrupt him again.

Mr. BAYARD. As I said before, although I heard a large portion of the remarks of the Senator, I have not had the benefit of seeing them in print. I have no objection to his restating his position. I did not say that he had claimed power for military courts under the third article of the Constitution. What I said was, and what I meant to be understood as saying, that the Senator has claimed, no matter what was the origin of their power, that they were of equal dignity, and that their judgments were equally unassailable or closed against review as those of the constitutional judiciary. In other words, that the power of the judicial branch over military courts created by Congress under the articles of war is as great but no greater than the power of military courts over the decisions of the judicial branch. And it is this proposition I now dispute.

Think for one moment what is the composition of military courts. They are created by the military order of a single individual. By the same power they are dissolved. Their proceedings are regulated generally by the orders of the Secretary of War. It is true they are intended to be composed of honorable and intelligent men, but not men who are learned or skilled in the administration of law and justice, and when they are disbanded and their judgment has been approved by authority, they are at an end forever. They are summoned in haste and exercise judicial functions perhaps for the first and only time in their lives. They can grant no new trials, and their errors, be they ever so patent or numerous, are never to be corrected, according to the doctrine we now hear urged.

Contrast this with the composition of the judicial courts, and how vast the difference, and how infinitely important are the results! A permanent tribunal of men appointed during good behavior, men especially by learning, training, and by character, fitted for the examination and weighing of testimony and the administration of justice according to the science of legal precedents, all of whose findings are reviewable until they shall reach the final point of decision in the Supreme Court of the United States, men who must execute their powers under all the checks and balances of the constitutional limitations, and who proceed upon the philosophy of rules of evidence. Why, sir, what is this whole military law? You may by legislation provide and do provide certain checks upon tyranny; but at the same time you have martial law in the end as the be-all and the end-all of such tribunals. And what is martial law but "the will of the commander-in-chief?" The Army regulations of the United States were established early in the history of the Government, I think in 1800. Section 1342 of the Revised Statutes:

The armies of the United States shall be governed by the following rules and articles.

Then follow articles, one hundred and twenty-eight in number. It has been said there was no power in the President of the United States to summon the board of inquiry or review, whose proceedings have been laid before us, because, to use the language of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin—

When that court-martial [of 1863] had held its sessions, had concluded upon its judgment, had sent its sentence to the President, and Abraham Lincoln put his approval to it, and the court was disbanded, that record was closed, that subject was ended, and there never has since been any power to reverse it, or to open it for any purpose whatever, and there never will be, and it never can be reheard this side the bar of God.

Mr. President, is this true? Can it be that in a civilized country, gross, admitted, palpable injustice can never be remedied? Is it true that a court-martial, summoned one week in hot haste, in the midst of conflict and of war, when passion rages and reason is still, when the voice of justice cannot be heard amid the roar of cannon; is it possible that the judgment of such a tribunal rendered on Wednesday, approved on Thursday, is after that never to be examined, not though proof should come that perjury had been committed, not though proof should come that error and misinformation in every shape had crept into the minds of those who filed that judgment,—that in this Government, boasting itself free and civilized, there is no machinery of justice that can redress such a wrong, that this people must stand forever and gaze upon a victim of their own unintentional but monstrous injustice as he writhes from year to year in intolerable agony and yet be helpless to extend him relief? Can that be true—true of a government upon whose very front was written the proclamation that it was created "to establish justice * * * and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity?" Oh, sir, there is power in this Government to arrest such public disgrace as this.

It is said that we are invading the prerogatives of two branches, that we are exercising judicial power, thereby invading that province, that we are invading the province of the Executive and his prerogative of pardon, and thereby making a further breach of the Constitution and are guilty of centralization of power. Why, sir, neither charge is true. This act does not propose to invade the President's power of pardon. On the contrary this act is a permissive act,—useless you may say, and perhaps I may think so—an act that cannot give him power beyond that which perhaps he already possesses, but an act which is forbidden by no letter or spirit of the Constitution—that he may, not that he shall, with no control of his discretion, but that he may renominate this individual for the place in the Army from which he was unjustly and erroneously expelled some seventeen years ago.

It is said we are acting in a judicial capacity. How so? There is discretion involved in all legislative action. Suppose a man had been convicted of an offense, and that his sentence was fine and imprisonment; and he paid the fine; it was levied on his property and the money paid into the Treasury, and the President subsequently pardons him, can the President pay that money back from the Treasury? Not so. The application must be made for relief to Congress that alone can give authority for the repayment of that money from the Treasury. When we are called upon to act in that case, it may just as well be said we are exercising judicial power, because we are exercising a discretion whether we will join the President in completing an act of justice and reparation. In the present case it is the same thing.

It is said that the President has the power. I believe he has the power. I believe so to-day even under existing laws, the last being the law of 1868, a law passed so as to—I do not say with that design—but so as to prevent the restoration of Porter to the Army without confirmation by the Senate. The act of 1868 prevented the President from restoring any officer to the Army who had been dismissed except by the consent and confirmation of the Senate. That was a change in existing law, but I never understood that it exhausted the power of Congress over the subject.

Sir, is it an argument worthy of Senators, that because the President has not done all he could, therefore we should not do all we can? I hope it is not so. I frankly say that had I been in his place I would have had both the will and I believe the power to nominate this man, after I became convinced by the report of the board of review, which had so overwhelmingly established his innocence of the charges preferred against him in 1862. I believe that the President had the power, and I wish he had exercised the power, to nominate this officer without any prior action of Congress. But if there should be any doubt upon his part as to his power to renominate as may be implied from his sending in this message to us, with this voluminous and convincing testimony to inform our discretion, and to show us what his reasons were in sending it to us, there is neither invasion of his prerogative nor is there exercise of judicial power in Congress by legislation, providing that this man should be dealt by justly and in accordance with the spirit of magnanimity and honor which should mark the proceedings of a great people.

Is it worth while to consider the power of the court-martial to extend their sentence to the perpetual disfranchisement and disability of an officer from holding any office of honor or trust under the Government of the United States? I shall shortly consider that. Has a military court the power not only to cashier from the service or impose a fine, or even inflict the penalty of death, but also to extend its arm into the civil service of the country, and impose perpetual disability upon a man, when he shall have ceased to be a soldier, from exercising the franchises and rights of a citizen of the United States? It is said that a man removed from the Army by sentence of dismissal of a court-martial is no longer in the service. If this be so, then, ipso facto, he is beyond the control of the military power to which he was subjected, when, and only because, he was a member of the land or naval forces. When a man is out of the Army he is beyond all military control, and there would seem to be as much right to prevent his exercising the right of suffrage for the rest of his life, where the election of member of Congress was in question, as to say that he should not become a member of Congress, or serve the country in any other civil capacity.

If such a sentence debarred him from ever re-entering the military service, the answer would be that as soon as he re-entered that service he would be again subject to military law and within the military jurisdiction. But conceding the argument of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin that every greater includes the less, and that therefore the power that enables a military court to deprive a man of his life justifies their infliction upon him of a continuing punishment to which death can only be looked upon as a blessed relief, is it not clear that when by the act of the court the party has been placed beyond their jurisdiction their sentence is mere brutum fulmen and of no effect?

But it is insisted that the only remedy in this case is by pardon, and that pardon presupposing guilt cannot be admitted by a man who feels himself innocent and has proved it. Sir, the pardoning power of the President of the United States need not be exercised by any form of words. The grant of pardon is an act, not a mere phrase or form; and when the President of the United States, having before him a man who needs exoneration from the disabilities of a sentence in the shape of pardon, shall nominate him to the Senate and shall receive their confirmation and shall issue to him a commission, ipso facto the man is pardoned. It is an act and not a mere form, and no form of words can be required for it.

But, Mr. President, there can be in the reason of things no doubt that when the statutes of limitation, intended for repose and not for injustice, for equity and not for harsh dealing, are suspended by act of Congress, there is power in the conjoint action of the Executive and the Legislature which can relieve a man from the consequences of a dreadful and unjust sentence.

We are not without precedents on this point—some very late. It was only two years ago that the Senate, upon the call of the yeas and nays, by a vote of 55 to 1, gave even greater power to the President upon a show of facts not one-tenth part as strong as those now presented. The case of Surgeon-General Hammond, the report of which I hold in my hand, shows that he was in January, 1864, one year after the trial of Porter, convicted by a court-martial and sentenced to be dismissed from the service and forever disqualified from holding any office of honor or trust under the Government, identically the sentence in the case of Porter. There was no board of review ordered by the President, but the Congress of the United States did pass a bill with the unanimity in this Senate of which I have spoken, which provided that the President might review and annul the sentence and findings of the court-martial, approved by President Lincoln sixteen years before.

Let me read the report:

This is a bill which provides that the President shall be authorized to review the proceedings of the general court-martial convened by Special Order No. 24, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, January 16, 1864, and by which William A. Hammond, then Surgeon-General of the Army, was tried, and to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of said court-martial, approved by the President August 18, 1864, and published in General Court-Martial Orders No. 251, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, August 20, 1864, if, after such review, the President shall deem it right and proper so to do.

And then it provided that in the event the sentence of the court should be so annulled the President was authorized to place Dr. Hammond on the retired list of the Army as a Surgeon-General and so restore him to his former rank. In that case the nearly unanimous voice of this body was found declaring that Congress had the power to authorize the President, with or without the information of a board of review, to set aside the findings and sentence of a court-martial approved sixteen years before. Nobody doubted the jurisdiction of that original court-martial, or their competency to pass on the case, or that portion of their sentence which inflicted dismissal from the public service. What are the facts? The board of review ordered by the President did not report against the finding of the court-martial of 1864, but their confirmatory report was re-examined by the Secretary of War, and upon his information the President was satisfied that the original finding of the court-martial was erroneous, and in the exercise of his own discretion he placed General Hammond upon the list of retired officers as Surgeon-General of the Army to the satisfaction, I believe, of all just-minded men in this country, certainly greatly to my own, for I never voted for a bill with greater pleasure in my life, and I find in examining the record of the debate of 1878 that the objections made in the present case by the report of the honorable Senator from Illinois were made in Hammond's case by the honorable Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] who now concurs with him in the report, and that he stood alone in the Senate by his vote in sustaining them—the same objections precisely as to the want of power and the sacred finality of decision and that we were invading the presidential prerogative of pardon, and I have great satisfaction in finding to-day that my remarks in the debate of 1878 are precisely applicable and sustain the vote which I propose to give in the present case.

In that case there was remarkable unanimity of opinion. The bill was presented by a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, consisting then as now of nine members, many of whom are still members, with no dissent, and the committee submitted a report warmly recommending the passage of the bill for Dr. Hammond's restoration. In the mean time the House of Representatives had acted; they had passed another bill similar in substance and identical almost with that which had received the recommendation of the committee of the Senate, and so that bill of the House being sent to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs was reported back favorably in a short report which I will read:

With the exception of the words "or any other act" added in line 8 of the proviso of the second section of the act, so as to read: "Provided, That the said William A. Hammond shall not, in virtue of such restoration to the Army, or of any provision of this act or any other act, be entitled to back, present, or future pay or allowances of any kind whatsoever," this act is identical with S. No. 560, "A bill for the relief of William A. Hammond, late Surgeon-General of the Army," reported favorably to the Senate by Mr. Spencer, of your committee, with recommendation that the same do pass, on the 19th day of February, 1878, as per printed report No. 102, Forty-fifth Congress, second session.

Your committee interpose no objection whatever to the additional words "or any other act," which it appears constituted an amendment reported by the Military Committee of the House of Representatives to the original bill as there presented.

The report made on this case by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives to that body, which is transmitted to the Senate in manuscript, and signed by Representatives McCook, Maish, and DIBRELL as sub-committee, (see same in print in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 28, 1878, page 21,) is identical in terms with the recommendations contained in report No. 102 of your committee, heretofore referred to. The House of Representatives having, as appears by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, unanimously approved the report of their Committee on Military Affairs, and passed the act without dissent, with the amendment suggested, your committee recommend the concurrence of the Senate in the said act, which, if so concurred in, will obviate the necessity for further consideration of S. No. 560.

So that we find that not only as to the vote but as to the reasons of the two committees of the respective Houses on this subject, there was complete concurrence as to the powers of the two Houses over this subject, and those powers substantially the same as those proposed in the present bill. There Congress undertook to delegate a discretion to the President without the concurrence of a board of review, to set aside and annul the sentence of a court-martial which the honorable Senator from Wisconsin would have us believe could never have been "heard again except before the bar of God."

Mr. PLUMB. I desire the Senator from Delaware to state, if he knows, what followed the action of Congress in the case of Surgeon-General Hammond.

Mr. BAYARD. He was placed on the retired list by the action of the President, restored to the service of the United States. He never was driven from the confidence and respect of his fellow countrymen; but the stain upon his record by the finding of the court-martial of 1864 was removed by the action of Congress and the action of the President.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to state in detail what that action was.

The PRESIDING-OFFICER. (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) Does the Senator from Delaware yield further to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BAYARD. I believe I stated to the honorable Senator that the President restored Dr. Hammond to his former rank on the retired list.

Mr. PLUMB. But I desire to state what preceded that. The President appointed a board to examine into the case of Surgeon-General Hammond consisting of three Army officers, who considered that case for four months, then separated, each going his own way, and they came back each with his own separate and independent judgment made up to the effect that the finding in the case of Hammond was correct and should stand, and the President thereupon finally set aside the judgment of the board which he had himself appointed, and the President also set aside the judgment of the court-martial, and restored Surgeon-General Hammond.

Mr. BAYARD. That was precisely what Congress authorized him to do. He had the power either to interpose a board of review for his own instruction, or he had the power to restore the man without the action of a board. In this case, to the facts of which I shall presently come, by the substitute offered by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, it is a simple proposition that the President may, upon the facts we know to-day—and I think we know enough—by the testimony and report of the Schofield board of review, nominate this officer for restoration to his former position. That is the whole scope, object, and effect of the bill. The act in Hammond's case, authorizing him to appoint a board of review, and on the report of that board, favorable or unfavorable, in his own discretion, to set aside and annul the finding and sentence of a court-martial which had been duly approved in 1864, is simply a recital of even more discretionary power than the present bill contains.

But there was a case also in 1878 of a less distinguished man, but I believe an entirely worthy one, Captain George A. Armes. He had been dismissed from the Army by a court-martial, and by the order of the Adjutant-General he ceased to be an officer of the Army from the date of that order, which was the 7th of June, 1870. He came before Congress, alleging gross injustice and great personal persecution at the hands of the then Secretary of War, Mr. Belknap. The committee heard his prayer. They instituted no court of inquiry, the President instituted none; but Congress passed an act restoring him to the Army, and he is there to-day in the service where he ought to be.

Mr. COCKRELL. Congress authorized the President to appoint him.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well. Qui facit per alium facit per se. We are only speaking of the power of Congress in this case. Congress do not restore Mr. Porter, but they here propose to pass a bill that shall authorize the President, if he sees fit, to nominate him for restoration.

Mr. LOGAN. Will it disturb the Senator for me right here to call his attention to the distinction in those cases. The case of Armes—

Mr. BAYARD. I was about discussing the case of Armes. There is a distinction, but there was there an exercise of power more questionable than the one now proposed. There was a question raised whether or not the President had approved the finding of the court-martial and there was no clear record upon that point, but an act of Congress was approved on the 9th of June, 1874, authorizing an honorable discharge to be issued to this officer by the Secretary of War, in these words:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to give to George A. Armes, late captain Tenth United States Cavalry and brevet major United States Army, an honorable discharge from the service of the United States, to date June 7, 1870,—

That was the date of his dismissal from the Army by the court-martial—and that said George A. Armes be paid the same pay and allowances as if he had been discharged under the provisions of the third section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1871, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1870.

It is another illustration of the plenary power exercised by Congress in dealing with this class of cases. Armes's case was one of dismissal from the Army by the sentence of a court-martial; and Congress undertook by law, without any interposition of the President, to give him an honorable discharge with pay. That was a reversal pro tanto of that sentence; it was a direct examination and inquiry into the justice or injustice of the judgment and sentence of the court-martial, the power to do which we have constantly asserted. If Congress could set aside part of the sentence, they assuredly had a right to set aside all; and if Congress is exercising judicial power or invading the prerogative of the President by giving that man who had been dishonorably discharged an honorable discharge with pay, it was only another illustration of the exercise of the present power, which, it seems to me, ought to be regarded as essential for the purpose of remedying injustice when it shall have been discovered.

But, say the committee, considering that there might have been a question of doubt as to whether the President had formally approved the sentence of Armes's dismissal in 1870:

By virtue of this law, Special Orders No. 136, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, June 19, 1874, were issued, honorably discharging Captain Armes as of date June 7, 1870.

Changing by act of Congress a dishonorable cashiering into an honorable discharge with pay and allowances—

So that the committee concludes that the connection of Captain Armes with the Army was completely severed by virtue of the act aforesaid and order aforesaid, and whatever irregularities there may have been in the proceedings of the court-martial, and especially as to the review thereof, were completely cured by the act and orders aforesaid, and by the voluntary acceptance thereof by Captain Armes.

Here, then, is the reasoning in a case varying in its facts but illustrating anew and very forcibly the principle I contend for, which is that there is power in the Congress of the United States to assist in every way, whether by way of suggestion or by way of confirmation of the act of the President, in removing a great act of public injustice toward any one of its citizens.

Mr. LOGAN. Now will the Senator, inasmuch as he is through with that, allow me to make a suggestion to him in reference to that case?

Mr. BAYARD. I beg pardon.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to that case? I was not then in Congress, but I have read the court-martial proceedings. He will find this to be the fact, that the committee concluded that there was no court-martial decision, and why? Because the finding of the court-martial had never been approved by the President, and hence it was a nullity. There is a very grave distinction between the finding of a court-martial never approved and one that has been approved and has become a finality. So I can cite him to numbers of cases—

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator will have an opportunity to comment on the case. I only say to him that I think he is putting himself in rather a worse position than before on this subject.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; I take the chances on that; but if the Senator will allow me in reference to the law he was commenting on, I think probably he does not want himself to fall into an error. The law authorizing the President to nominate and appoint an officer who has been out of the Army is for the reason that promotion in the Army by the law goes by seniority. Where an officer has been displaced from the service then it requires an act of Congress to suspend promotion in order to allow that man to be appointed in the Army, and that is the object of the act. It does not at all affect the court-martial, but it affects the promotion in the Army, stopping it at that point until he may be appointed to the Army. That is all the object of such a law.
